1839. I refer to the periodical bathing of the patients for the purpose of cleanliness?—As well for that as for the general purpose of giving prolonged warm baths, which would be desirable. I have not had much experience of them, but I would desire very much to try the effect of prolonged warm baths in any cases of excitement, and we have not adequate means for the purpose.

1840. Would you consider it desirable that the new asylum should be constituted a curative establishment for both males and females?—It was so, originally, intended; but it was subsequently conceived that it would be desirable to have it appropriated exclusively for males, inasmuch as in the old asylum the males and females had too much intercourse in going to the kitchen, and at meal time in conveying the food to the different parts of the establishment. With reference to the question, I must explain that it was on a suggestion of mine the new asylum was appropriated to males, and I do not know how I could say now I should recommend a change to be made; but if I am to answer the question generally with regard to the appropriation of the new asylum for males and females, I do not see any objection to doing so.

1841. Under what circumstances did you recommend the new asylum should be appropriated entirely for males?—Because the separation of the sexes in the old asylum was not complete. There was a common hall, and the patients, both male and female, were in the habit of passing up and down this hall, and I have seen them congregated at the door of the kitchen, waiting to assist the servants in bringing the supplies. I thought it very desirable that that should be prevented, and it does not exist to the same extent that it did formerly: they use separate doors now.

F.R.C.S.E.

Richard Toddill, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S.E., sworn and examined.

1862. I believe you are one of the physicians of the Richmond Lunatic Asylum?—Yes.

1863. Are you many years connected with that institution?—I was appointed in March, 1848, as physician extraordinary, at the time Dr. Mollan was promoted, and I was appointed in July, 1851, as attending physician.

1864. You and Dr. Mollan jointly discharged the duties of the old asylum?—Yes.

1865. You have charge of a separate division?—Yes.

1866. On that side there are female as well as male wards?—Yes.

Attendance.

1867. How often do you attend?—I attend every day.

1868. Do you visit the wards on your side each day?—I visit all the wards each day.

1869. Are you attended by the manager on your visits?—No, not by the manager.

1870. By whom are you attended?—Clinical clerks occasionally. I have a clinical clerk.

1871. Was it ever the practice of the manager to accompany you on your visits?—Very seldom.

Means of giving baths.

1872. Do you consider the arrangements in the institution for the cleanliness of the patients suitable or sufficient?—For keeping them clean in their persons I think the arrangements might be improved. I think there might be a more steady surveillance over their persons and clothes to carry out cleanliness more effectually and completely.

1873. Are there sufficient means of administering warm baths when required for their treatment?—Yes, there are sufficient means, so far as baths are concerned.

1874. Do the patients practically get a weekly bath?—Not as a general rule; they get no baths except when directed by me. In my division, I direct the giving of warm or shower baths, as the case may be; but there is a supply of warm water every Friday for general washing, and on other days, if I saw a patient dirty, I would direct the attention of the keeper to him, to have him washed clean. Then, as a remedial agent, I have frequently directed, on other occasions, to have their legs immersed in warm water, and their persons cleaned, where I saw a want of cleanliness.

1875. Is the supply of water to the lavatories and baths sufficient to enable a bath to be given at any time you might direct?—When I used to order warm baths, and the ordinary supply of water did not come, I got it from the kitchen, or ordered down a strong fire when I found it necessary.

Washing of patients.

1876. Do you believe that the patients in your division are daily washed?—Well, I have frequently noticed them unclean, though the keepers might say they were washed.

1877. In what way do you call attention to what you desire to be remedied?—I speak to Mr. Wrigley and to the keepers, and say that, if the patients had been washed they still showed an appearance of dirt, and ought to be washed again.

1878. Is there any book in which you record your observations or recommendations, in order to their being submitted to the Board of Governors?—From time to time we used to report to the Governors on any omissions of this kind; but in reference to the washing principally, we found it necessary to address ourselves to the keepers or Mr. Wrigley. I made no record of the omission of washing.

1879. Have you frequently reported the defective state of the arrangements?—Yes, we made several reports in writing, showing the deficiency of the arrangements in the institution.

1880. Do you keep a medical journal?—There is a day journal.

1881. Is that day journal kept by you?—The only medical journal I used to keep was a pencil note-book, in which I entered any particular case.

1882. Do you keep a medical journal similar to what is required by the 8th and 9th Vic., cap. 107?—No, I have no medical journal of that kind.

1883. Is the cleanliness of the apartments and the beds well attended to in your branch?—I hardly ever go through the wards where unclean patients are, that I have not stripped down the patients myself. I have frequently found them soiled, and the attendants assured me that it occurred within a few minutes before. I found it necessary, on almost all occasions, to strip the patients that were either lying a long time in bed or were unclean in their habits, and I frequently, in the course of my attendance, have found them in a dirty state.

1884. Then you are not satisfied with the attention given to patients in that respect?—I very often had reason to complain.

1885. Do you think there is sufficient security that any extra diet you may order for the patients, such as wine and things of that kind, is given to them?—I would have much more security, if the keepers were of a better class than the present staff, that the wine and other extra things would be given to the patients. I was constantly watching to see if I could detect any mal-administration in the distribution of wine, and I did not detect any. I had suspicions on the subject, from hints thrown out to me. I would feel more confident if there was a better order of keepers, or if there were gradations of keepers. The keepers now are all on the same level, and I think an improvement in that respect very desirable.

1886. Do you think the wages given to keepers are sufficient to secure the services of competent persons?—I think there should be keepers of a better class, in addition to those who do the slavish work. £10 is the wages. I would have a head keeper, and others under him, to control his department.

1887. Are any arrangements made for providing amusements for the patients?—Very little—not sufficient. I have given a report suggesting the propriety, in the system of moral treatment, of having intellectual and pleasurable amusements. That has not been carried out.

1888. Were these suggestions given in writing to the Governors?—Yes, I have a copy of the report. I recommended that there should be a billiard-table, backgammon, an evening school, and means of light recreation. In order to make these complete, there should be a superintendence by a head keeper or a schoolmaster,—some person between the manager and the medical man and those who merely carry out the more laborious part of the duties.

1889. Do you think that the hospital, as at present conducted, affords the means of carrying out proper curative treatment as regards the patients under your charge?—I certainly think it could be better arranged and better managed.

1890. With the means at present at your disposal in the hospital, do you consider you can carry out the curative treatment as regards the insane cases?—Though I have gone so, I think there might be a great deal of improvement. I think great improvements are necessary. Of course we have pursued successful treatment.

1891. Do you consider that sufficient provision is made for the comfort of the patients in the various wards?—I have had reason to complain in the way I have stated, when I inspected beds. Very often I have directed my attention to the dinner, which I have gone to see, and I think the arrangements for it might be made much more comfortable, both in the accommodation and probably in the mode of cooking; some essential improvements may be effected.

1892. Are the apartments of the patients in the asylum provided with all that is necessary for them?—No; for instance, there are several of the dormitories that want soap; and towels should be supplied to all, particularly when the patients are coming to a state of convalescence. These things are only in the nurses' rooms. I would have these conveniences in the dormitories.

1893. Many of the patients, when unwell, are treated in their own rooms?—Yes, under certain circumstances.

1894. Are not night-chairs a necessary part of the appliances?—Yes; I have only one or two in my division. There were more night-chairs when I was appointed than there are at present. I spoke to Mr. Wrigley about it.

1895. How many patients are there in the division where you say there are only one or two night-chairs?—Thirty-four in No. 3, where there is only one night-chair; but then they bring to the corridor at night a kind of vessel like a tub, which the patients use. It is a clumsy kind of thing.

1896. Are there a sufficient number of chamber utensils?—Yes, the number of utensils appears to be sufficient; they are a tin kind of vessels, and I often thought wooden ones would be better.

1897. Have you satisfied yourself of the sufficiency of the number from your observation?—Yes, I found them under every bed.

1898. Do you consider the ventilation of the rooms, generally, good?—It is, I should say, good. There is a kind of communication between the rooms and corridors, and when the windows—which are about five feet by three and a half—are open to the extent of one sixth, there is tolerable good ventilation. Part of the window is movable, and can be opened by a string.

1893. Is your attendance in the morning sufficiently early after the patients have risen, to enable you to judge whether the atmosphere has been pure in the cells during the night?—I have gone sometimes early, and my impression is the ventilation is sufficient.

1894. Have you any communication with the manager as to the state of the patients?—A continual communication. I call in and sit with him, talk to him, and tell him such a case is getting better or worse.

1901. Do you consider it would be an advantage, or otherwise, that the manager should be a medical man?—I think a resident medical man would be an improvement.

1902. In the event of a resident medical man being in charge of the institution, would you consider it desirable that there should also be a visiting or consulting physician?—Certainly.

1903. Would you consider it advisable to have the consulting physician to be called in when the manager pleased, or the regular visiting physician to come on stated days?—I would have the regular visiting physician regularly attending.

1904. On whom would you have the responsibility to rest?—On the visiting physician; the man who had the opportunity of seeing diseases out of doors, and was in general practice. I think if they acted in a proper spirit, no difficulties would arise.

1905. Do you consider that the resident medical man, having peculiar opportunities of studying each case of lunacy, would have any advantages which would not be possessed by the visiting physician, as regards the treatment of the insane?—I have been reflecting upon the question, and I do not see much advantage. I think I knew as much last year, on the subject of lunacy, as I do this year; and the continued inspection of the same cases does not pre-suppose any advancement in the knowledge of the disease.

1906. Do you consider that it would be advisable that the new Richmond Asylum should be devoted to the reception of curable cases?—Yes. I think statistics would lead to errors about the asylum, by taking any calculations, either as to the recoveries or deaths, under the present constitution. Independently of its being filled from the Island-bridge Asylum, we got persons from goals, after having been broken down. We receive epileptics, paralytics, idiots, non-epileptics, old and infirm; so that, in fact, to act upon the statistics of the Richmond Asylum would lead to error as to the mode of treatment.

1907. Do you see any objection to the new asylum being appropriated to the treatment of recent curable cases, of both sexes?—I do not see any objection, if a provision was made to separate the sexes.

1908. What is your opinion of the existing old Richmond Asylum as a curative hospital for the insane?—I do not think much of it. I think the multiplicity of cells, the closed yards, and the selection of the bedding, gives it more the complexion of a prison; and I would not approve of it as being well adapted for curable cases.

1909. You think, then, the new asylum, under proper arrangements, would be much better adapted than the old building for treating mental disease?—I would.

1910. You attend the Board at every meeting?—Yes, every meeting, and make suggestions as to any requirement I thought necessary. I suggested the propriety of having a schoolmaster as a head keeper, who should comprise in himself the position of schoolmaster and moral director; that he should go through the divisions, attend at the meals, see the medicines daily administered, and note their effects.

1911. You have a clinical clerk?—I have.

1912. How are the clinical clerks selected?—At present by recommendations from the medical men to the Board.

1913. Was any public notice given of a vacancy occurring on the last occasion?—No.

1914. Has there been public notice given, on any occasion, in the public journals, of vacancies occurring for clinical clerks?—I am not aware that there was.

John Thomas Banks, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S.I., sworn and examined.

1915. I believe you are one of the physicians to the Richmond Lunatic Asylum?—Yes.

1916. You are in charge of the new asylum, and also the infirmary?—Yes.

1917. How long have you held that appointment?—I was appointed assistant physician, or physician extraordinary, in September, 1832; and in the end of October, 1834, I was appointed, by warrant of the Lord Lieutenant, visiting physician.

1918. For how long have you had charge of the infirmary?—The circumstance of my having the sole charge of the infirmary arose in this way:—While I was assistant physician, I acted for Dr. Mollan; he generally goes abroad for six weeks or two months in the year, to one of the German spas. Dr. Mollan asked me to look after his patients in the infirmary, as the infirmary building is near the new asylum, which I visit daily, and my attendances saved him the trouble of walking a considerable distance from the old house. On the last occasion that he went abroad, he requested Dr. Tushill to take charge of his patients in the old house; and, to lighten the labour upon Dr. Tushill, it was arranged amongst us that I should look after both the infirmaries, in addition to the new house.

1919. Is that a permanent arrangement?—Well, since Dr. Mollan came home, it has so continued.

1920. Am I to understand that, previous to that arrangement, Dr. Mollan attended to his patients in the infirmary, Dr. Tuohill to the others, and you to those that came to the new asylum?—Yes; and any patients that we considered required surgical treatment, were transferred to the care of the surgeon, but they were still in the infirmary.

1921. Who exercises a superintendence over the infirmary, the manager or the matron?—There is a matron to the infirmary; and then Mrs. Wrigley, the superior of all, is supposed to exercise authority over her.

1922. The male and female infirmaries are detached buildings?—Yes.

1923. Are they, in your opinion, suitable for the objects for which they were erected?—No, they are not.

1924. State shortly in what respects you think they are defective?—There are no single rooms. Perhaps it would save you time if I would say I entirely agree in the report made, with regard to the infirmary, by the Commissioners who inspected the asylum. The house is inadequate; I consider it is not suited for its intended use. It is ill supplied with accommodation; and, altogether, it is, I think, unsuited for an infirmary. I dwell particularly upon the point of its not having single rooms.

1925. Do you mean the Commissioners who inspected the lunatic asylums—Messrs. Wilkes and Donaldson?—I do.

1926. Do your observations apply to both buildings, the male and female infirmaries?—To both buildings.

1927. What cases are sent to the infirmary?—On two occasions there were epidemics in the house, but I may mention that they both occurred before my connexion with the institution—at least before I was permanent visiting physician; one was small-pox, and the other was cholera. Upon these occasions the patients labouring under small-pox and cholera were sent to the infirmary. I should tell you the infirmary is part of the institution, and I may say it is perverted from its legitimate purpose. It was necessary, on the occasion of the cholera, to clear out the infirmary, and put the patients lying on the floor, in the old house; and a portion of them were sent up to the then unfinished new house, inasmuch as it was necessary to clear out the infirmary.

1928. That is, the infirmary patients, at the time the epidemic broke out, were removed, to make way for those who were affected?—Yes; at least the female house was cleared. In general, the house is full to its complete number. A portion of the patients could not be supplied with proper accommodation.

1929. At the present time, when no epidemic prevails, what class of cases are considered fit subjects for admission into the infirmary, and which ought not be detained in the wards?—Well, if any communicable disease arose—which has not happened very frequently—in that event, they would be sent. I am constantly in the habit of sending cases of corporeal diseases which require treatment, to the infirmary from the new house.

1930. Are any other cases, besides those of bodily illness, sent to the infirmary?—In fact it is necessary to have the infirmary full, the house is in such a state.

1931. In point of fact, the demand for room in the general building is so great, that persons are sent to the infirmary who, strictly speaking, are not proper cases to be admitted there?—Persons who are not labouring under any corporeal disease.

1932. In that case what class of lunatics would be particularly selected?—Dr. Mollan occasionally sends to the infirmaries acute cases of bodily disease, and treats them there; Dr. Tuohill besides sends some of the convalescents from mental disease, when weakly or infirm, for the advantage of better air.

1933. What is your own practice as regards the new asylum?—I generally send a case of bodily disease to the infirmary.

1934. I presume no patient is removed to the infirmary without an order from the medical gentleman in charge of the ward from which he came?—Not as I believe.

1935. Supposing it to be desirable to transfer from any branch of the asylum a case to the infirmary, is it the practice to remove that case, which is under treatment, back from the infirmary to the asylum from which the patient had been taken?—In general it is necessary; for example, there are always a number of cases in the infirmary in that condition that they may be moved back. If a case of disease arises under my care, I write in the Prescription Book, "This case to be removed to the infirmary," and when I go to the infirmary, I select a case to be sent in place of it. That is from the fact of the institution being full, generally, and the infirmary not being exclusively for patients labouring under bodily disease.

1936. Supposing a case, for which you wished to provide in the infirmary, was taken from a refractory or other ward, which would be unsuitable for the patient that you were to bring back, what arrangement would you make in that case?—Well, I avoid bringing refractory patients to the infirmary; the means of security, had as they are in the new house, are still worse in the infirmary. In that case I would prefer the new house.

1937. Generally speaking, a patient is exchanged, and takes the place of a patient who has been removed to the infirmary?—Precisely.

1938. Do you think the ordinary rooms or dormitories of the asylum are as fitting as the infirmary for the treatment of many cases of disease?—No, the single rooms are not at all; nothing can be more deficient than the ventilation of the single rooms. In fact I have very often visited early in the morning, when the doors have been opened, and the air is exceedingly foul. There is, in fact, no ventilation—I refer to the new asylum.

1939. Does your observation with regard to ventilation apply to the dormitories also?—It does, but not to the same extent.

1940. Are you satisfied with the way in which the infirmary is conducted by the matron?

DETECTIVE.

The Richmond
Asylum.
John Thomas Banks,
Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S.P.

—The matron is a very zealous and attentive officer. I am not always satisfied with the servants in any part of the institution.

1941. Is it your opinion that a case of acute disease occurring amongst the inmates, may be as well treated in the ordinary dormitories as in the infirmary?—No.

1942. At what hour do you generally visit the infirmaries in the course of the day?—I generally visit between twelve and one o'clock. I sometimes visit the new house first; on other occasions I visit the infirmary before going to the asylum.

1943. Do you examine the bedding and conveniences provided for the sick patients?—I do, very frequently.

1944. Do you consider that they are adequate?—I do not.

State of the
regimen, &c.

1945. Is it the case that some of the patients have only one sheet?—I am not aware that the practice of having only one sheet prevails in the infirmary, but the sheets are very bad.

1946. Are the rooms in the infirmaries kept in a clean state?—In general they are.

1947. Have many of the patients dirty habits?—Yes, a considerable number.

1948. Do you think sufficient attention is paid to these patients with respect to cleanliness?—The means are imperfect—the beds are unsuited for the purpose. I think the matron looks very closely after their cleanliness; I mean the matron of the infirmary.

1949. Is there a sufficient supply of those chamber utensils and other articles which should be provided in such an infirmary, for such cases?—There is an insufficient supply of discharge pans. With regard to what are called chamber utensils, they are like mostly all the furniture supplied, of a very inferior character; I have known patients to break off the rim and conceal it.

1950. Is there a supply of chairs in the infirmary for patients not confined to bed?—Not a sufficient supply.

The kitchen.

1951. Are the kitchen arrangements of the infirmary good?—No, they are not good. The food is dressed in the new asylum with few exceptions, and is sent to the infirmary.

1952. Is the kitchen clean?—There is no provision, in the new asylum, for the escape of the vapour, particularly that from the boilers; it and the smoke ascend, and are rotting the ceiling.

Supply of water;
its quality.

1953. Is the supply of water good?—It is not good.

1954. Is it bad in quality, and liable to be tainted?—The supply of water to the infirmary is very bad—the proximity to the sewer renders it liable to be tainted. The water is not good in quality.

1955. Is there sufficient infirmary accommodation to provide for the segregation of cases from other inmates, in the event of fever, epidemic, or contagious diseases breaking out?—No; as I stated before, the infirmary is, from the crowded state of the asylum, perverted from its legitimate purpose.

Medical Journal.

1956. With reference to the new asylum now under your charge, do you visit it every second day?—No, I visit it daily, the rule is daily.

1957. Do you keep any medical journal?—I make notes and records of recent and interesting cases, and particularly when an opportunity presents itself to me of conversing with the friends and relations of a patient, and thus procuring a complete history of the case.

1958. Do you keep a medical journal similar to that required by the Act of Parliament, the 8th and 9th Vic., cap. 107, now before you?—I never saw that before.

Washing the patients.

1959. By whom are you accompanied in your attendance upon the patients in the new asylum?—By the resident apothecary.

1960. Do you find that the washing and cleansing of the patients is properly attended to in the asylum?—I have frequently had to complain of the dirt of individual patients. Generally, as far as the appliances admit, my order is—and I believe it is carried out—that every patient, unless something in his condition contra-indicates its use, is to get a tepid bath once a week.

1961. Have you satisfied yourself that it is really given to the patients?—Well, I have no reason to doubt it. It has been lately stated to me that my orders are not always carried out.

1962. What is the earliest hour at which you have visited the asylum?—A little after seven o'clock.

The ventilation.

1963. That was shortly after the patients had risen?—Yes.

1964. What is your opinion as to the ventilation of the asylum?—It is most imperfect. When the single rooms, particularly, have just been opened in the morning, and when it is necessary to shut the doors and windows, there are no means of admitting air. Then a patient is confined in an atmosphere which becomes, after a little time, most injurious to the health.

1965. Do the artificial arrangements for the ventilation work?—There is no arrangement for ventilation in the doors; the new house is inferior in that respect to the old: there is no means of letting in air. The windows move on pivots, and air may be admitted when the windows are open, but they are so insecure that when a refractory patient is confined it is necessary to have them closed. Under such circumstances, the ventilation is most imperfect. If the window were open, the patient might escape. I have tested this myself.

1966. Are there any effective means for the extraction of the foul air?—No effective means.

1967. Are there not openings in the ceiling connected with a shaft?—There are.

1968. Do they act?—They do not answer the intended purpose, and the smell is exceedingly bad when a room is opened in which a patient has just slept.

1966. From what reason do they not act?—I do not know; but I am aware of the fact. I have found the air loaded with sulphuric odours on opening the door.

1970. Do you consider the apartments unhealthy?—I do, particularly when a patient is any time confined.

1971. Your observation applies to the dormitories as well as to the single rooms?—What I stated before applies to both, but especially to single rooms.

1972. Are there any means of warming the house?—There are no hot air stoves; the fire places are the only means of warming the house.

1973. Are there any thermometers in use, or is there any means of registering the temperature?—No, there is not. The house is very cold and comfortless in winter.

1974. Do you find that the beds in use in the asylum are properly constructed or suitable?—No; the bedsteads, with few exceptions, are extremely bad, and unsuited for the purpose.

1975. State how?—They can easily be broken, and converted into weapons of offence—I mean the bedsteads with which the Board of Works supply the house.

1976. What kind of beds are generally in use in the asylum?—Cocoa-nut mattresses and straw.

1977. Are the cocoa-nut mattresses placed upon the bedsteads?—Yes, and they rust, if the patients happen to be wet patients. It is a very bad sort of bed, as the iron laths rust.

1978. Is the bedding given to the patients sufficient?—Well, for some of the patients it is not sufficient; there are some old and infirm patients that require more, and I wholly disapprove of the counterpanes—they are very light, and of a very bad kind.

1979. Are you aware that amount of bedding is given to each patient?—I am not aware exactly of the amount. I am aware that the supply is insufficient in many cases for proper changing.

1980. Are there any of the patients who have only a single sheet?—I lately saw one with a single sheet, and the matron informed me the patient preferred having the blanket next over him; but I am not aware it is the practice to have only one sheet. I have so frequently observed the contrary, that it must be the exception.

1981. Is the furniture in the day-rooms sufficient—are there any comfortable chairs for delicate patients?—There are not. I may shortly tell you that the furniture of the day-rooms, dormitories and single rooms, is insufficient; for example, there are many patients that would enjoy having a table and chair in their sleeping-rooms. There are no such things: there are some in the infirmary, but not through the house generally.

1982. Are there any seats through the house, except forms without backs?—I do not know of more than one. There is no comfortable chair in the whole house, and no benches with backs.

1983. Is there any furniture in the corridors of any kind?—No.

1984. No place where the patients could sit down?—Not in the corridors. I would refer to the Report of Messrs. Wilkes and Donaldson, that "The house has been furnished with too severe an economy." I would quote the words of that Report.

1985. What arrangements are made for the amusements of the patients?—There is a dance once a-week in the new house, and many of them enjoy it. We have also given them a ball occasionally.

1986. Is that in the recreation-hall?—In the hall that you may have seen, and they enjoy it. The few that cannot conduct themselves with propriety are not admitted, of course. Then there is a racket-court, and I encourage, as much as possible, their walking about the grounds.

1987. Are there any books in charge of the attendants in the various wards, which could be used by the patients?—The chaplains give books and the resident apothecary lends books to the patients; but there is not what there ought to be, I conceive—a library. Some of the patients would like amusing books, and there is no supply of them.

1988. Are any other articles supplied which could afford amusement to the patients?—I have some times given them a pack of cards at their own solicitation. I have sometimes seen them with cards so dirty, that they could scarcely see them; and I have, on more than one occasion, brought them a pack.

1989. Are there sufficient means of amusement for the curative treatment of the insane?—By no means.

1990. Are you aware how the patients spend their evenings, during the winter months, between dark and the period of retiring to rest?—They go to bed at an extremely early hour. In winter, they are in the sitting-rooms, and many of the patients would enjoy a good fire, which would not be covered, and with great safety such might be allowed in some divisions. I think the heating is most imperfect.

1991. Would you consider yourself authorized to direct the removal of those fire-guards?—In some parts I would, if the classification could be carried out more perfectly than it is at present. There is a great difficulty about it. I may tell you that the majority of the inmates are persons that could not be safely trusted. A great number of them are generally what are called idiotic; many of them would fall into the fire and get burned; and there are a vast number epileptic, so that I think it would not be expedient to remove the guards generally, at least not in all the divisions.

1992. When do you consider to hold the position of manager in the new asylum?—The resident apothecary acts, to all intents and purposes, as manager. He is under Mr. Wrigley.

The Richmond
District Asylum,
John Thomas Beale,
Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S.D.
The Apothecary.

1993. Do you receive any communications from him as to the cases?—I do; he has long experience. He has been apothecary to the hospital of the House of Industry for a great number of years.

1994. Who compounds the medicines for the asylum?—He does, with his assistant; he superintends.

1995. Who is his assistant?—One of the clinical clerks. The surgery for the general institution is in the old asylum, but he has a small supply of medicines for urgent use in the new asylum.

1996. Is it your opinion that the appointment of clinical clerk, either with regard to its duties or to the object for which the office was founded, should be held by the assistant of the apothecary?—I do not think it ought. I am not aware whether, since his appointment, he has acted as apprentice to the apothecary. As a general rule, I would not approve of that.

Medical Managers; Visiting Physicians.

1997. Is it your opinion that the manager of this institution should always be a medical man?—Well, I think there should be either a resident medical man, or there should be efficient clinical clerks—senior students, such as we have in the adjoining institution, the hospital of the House of Industry, to which I am physician also, a system that works uncommonly well. There should be a resident medical man, who would superintend the treatment of the patients, and carry out the directions of the visiting physician.

1998. But in the event of the services of an eminent medical man being secured for the office of resident physician under that new arrangement, would you consider it necessary to have, in addition, a visiting physician?—I would.

1999. Would you consider the visiting physician should be a person obliged to visit all the patients at stated periods of the week, or that he should be merely a consulting physician, to be called in as the resident medical man might think necessary?—That he should be a visiting physician in the strictest meaning of the term, not a consulting physician, called in when the medical manager might think it expedient.

2000. With whom should the final direction of the treatment to be pursued in that case rest?—With the visiting physician.

2001. You do not consider that the familiarity the medical manager might have with the treatment of the insane would justify his being left in sole medical charge of the institution, without a visiting physician?—I do not, and I will state my reasons. I consider the opinion of the resident physician upon matters connected with mental disease would be of the greatest value, and should receive the greatest respect from the visiting physician; but I consider, no matter how eminent a resident physician may be, when he accepts of the appointment of resident physician and manager of an institution, he is then thrown out of practice, and is isolated, from the fact of his not having experience out of doors, to discharge the duty of physician to the institution; and I consider the smaller the institution is, the more unfitted he is. He has no experience generally, and diseases vary and epidemics constantly change their character. I think, moreover, that the supervision, which the fact of a physician regularly visiting exercises—without meaning the slightest disrespect to any man holding the position of resident physician—I think that supervision is valuable to the institution. If a man is left alone and is irresponsible, I think he may do the business in a slovenly manner, at least I think there may be a tendency to that. Men of the highest eminence in the profession, as, for example, the late Dr. John Crampton, and Dr. Cusack, accept the office of visiting physician to asylums; but the services of such men cannot be secured as resident physicians.

2002. Although a resident physician, by being withdrawn from daily practice, might not have the same extended acquaintance with disease in general, would he have any advantages in the treatment of the bodily illness of lunatics, from his knowledge of them, beyond the physician who is not so familiar with their daily state?—I conceive that a well-educated physician who visits an asylum every day, must be aware of any differences that may arise in the state of patients. It requires a greater amount of knowledge to treat corporeal diseases in the insane, than in persons who are sane. Many corporeal diseases in the insane assume what is called a latent character, and are only discoverable by the application of the most improved system of examination. I think a very high order of knowledge is necessary to determine and distinguish the diseases of the insane. A female cannot tell you what is the matter with him like a sane man, or what he feels, or what are his sensations. You must find those things out for yourself; something in the same way, that it is very often more difficult to treat the diseases of children than the diseases of adults.

2003. What would be your view of an arrangement by which the medical manager should have the treatment of all the insane persons, purely as such, and that there should be a visiting physician to take charge of such patients as may be affected with other ailments, with liberty to the medical manager to call in the visiting physician to see an insane case?—Well, I think that arrangement might act well; it certainly would be better than giving the sole charge to one resident physician; but it appears to me it would be most inexpedient.

2004. What is your opinion as to the advantage, or otherwise, to patients who are enabled to attend, of being allowed to go to public worship, and to have the ministrations of chaplains in this institution?—I think the ministrations of chaplains often have a most beneficial effect. It greatly depends upon the man who happens to be chaplain, whether he is a man of tact and judgment or not.

2005. Supposing you considered it unavoidable that a patient's mind should be disturbed by any excitement on religious questions, have you any authority to direct that that patient should not receive the visitation of the chaplain?—I think the physician ought to be the person to decide, and as to authority, I do not think if the chaplain and physician acted harmoniously together, that there would be any necessity to exert the authority. I have recommended that certain patients should not be admitted to religious worship, and I have always been met by the chaplains in the spirit in which my advice was intended. I think the religious ministrations have often a very soothing effect upon patients.

2006. What are the arrangements under which patients are sent to the new asylum?—They are received at the old house, and I have, over and over again, had occasion to commiserate with respect to the manner in which this part of the business is conducted. I have, over and over again, received patients without any sort of information, and I have been informed that their friends, who accompanied them to the asylum, are gone away, and I have not had the means of communicating with them. I have repeatedly complained of this to the manager, who is the person that receives the patients. The general practice is to send the admission paper, and the amount of information on it is exceedingly meagre. It is always satisfactory, whether a patient is sane or insane, to get as much information about the case as we can, and from that I am frequently deterred.

2007. Have you access to the registry of inmates kept by the manager?—Yes, I have before me a transcript of those admission papers, which are very imperfect; it merely states what is on their admission ticket, as it is called; and in many cases there is no information at all—such, for example, as in the cases that come from the gaols.

2008. In all cases the registry would afford the information pointed out in the first schedule of the Act?—Yes; the religion, the name, the age, and sometimes the form of insanity. What I mean to convey to you is, that as a history of a patient, or a guide, it is most imperfect. It would be desirable the patients were admitted directly to the new asylum.

2009. Inasmuch as the admission of a patient need only be accompanied by the information which is contained in the registry, what farther information would you necessarily get by a patient being admitted directly at the new asylum?—When a patient is admitted directly, he is always accompanied by some one; in many cases the mother, or a brother, or father, or relative comes, unless it is from a gaol; you have then an opportunity of questioning the parties on the several circumstances connected with the case.

2010. Then you consider the admission of the patients taking place at the old asylum deters you from having that communication with the friends of the patient, which you might otherwise have?—In a great number of instances.

2011. You would not necessarily be present at the asylum when the patients and their friends came. I presume, in that case, Mr. Beatty would have to act?—It has very often happened that I have been present myself, and in my absence, whenever the friends of a patient accompany him, Mr. Beatty takes a note, which he would give me on my next visit.

2012. With regard to the distribution of the patients between the new and old asylum are you satisfied with the arrangements in that respect?—Well, the distribution is supposed to be, so far as the males are concerned, alternate; I cannot speak positively from my own knowledge, but it has been stated to me, that a worse class of patients are selected for my house than for the old asylum. That is the opinion of Mr. Beatty, who is constantly on the spot.

2013. Is there a large number of suicidal cases in your charge?—Yes.

2014. Is there a large number of epileptic cases?—Yes.

2015. Have you, by visiting the old asylum or otherwise, come to the conclusion that you have an undue proportion of those cases in the new asylum?—I derive my information on the subject from Mr. Beatty.

2016. What class of patients are usually admitted?—Generally of the worst classes, with some exceptions.

2017. When the patients are sent to you, are you informed whether they have been passed through the gaols as dangerous lunatics or not?—Many of them. I have got batches of them—for example, sixteen in one batch from the Penitentiary. I am always informed as to the fact of their passing through the gaol.

2018. Are you satisfied that those who are committed as dangerous lunatics, and come to you as such, have been fairly committed as dangerous lunatics?—Indeed, in a great many cases, I think not. I cannot say but they may have done something that might be construed to be dangerous. The legal proceeding is to swear before a magistrate a person is dangerous, and, owing to the crowded state of the house, they constantly remain weeks, and sometimes months, in the gaols.

2019. What proportion of incurables do you suppose you have in your asylum at present?—More than three-fourths.

2020. Is it your opinion that it would be advisable to convert that new asylum into a curative hospital for both sexes?—Yes.

2021. You are acquainted with the old Richmond Asylum?—Yes.

2022. Do you think that as suitable for such cases?—I do not think it is so well suited.

2023. Are the attendants generally, in the new asylum, well qualified for their duties?—Not generally.

2024. Is the remuneration given to them sufficient to secure the services of competent nurses and attendants?—I think, in this country, it is. I think the remuneration is sufficient for the class of persons generally employed; but I think there ought to be some superior officers.

 Supervision of servants.
2025. Am I to understand that you consider the services of the better class of superior attendants in each ward would be essential in a curative hospital of the kind?—Well, I think it would be a safeguard having persons of a superior class to superintend the others; it would be a great means of preventing irregularities.
2026. I mean a superior nurse, with a higher salary, in each ward?—The ordinary class of servants might be of a higher grade, and I think it would probably work well if there was a superior over each division, or over every two divisions; the superintendent's attendance not to be confined to particular wards. I have sometimes found, and more particularly amongst some of the old servants, a great tendency to punish the patients, which I have, to the utmost extent, discontinued.
2027. In what way have you found them inclined to punish?—I once found a woman with her hands tied behind her back; it was a day or two before the women were removed from the new house, which has been in a sort of transition state. It received a number of women, for the time, then they were sent back to the old house. On more than one occasion I found patients tied by the attendants, on the supposition that they were dangerous.
- Punishment of patients.
2028. What steps did you take with reference to that case where the person was under restraint?—It was done by a nurse, an old servant in the house; and formerly, as I hear, there was a good deal of restraint used. This woman tied the patient's hands together. The women over whom she was placed were to leave the house within a few days; and, on speaking over the matter with Mr. Beatty, he agreed that, as the case could not possibly occur again, it might be passed over with a strong reprimand.
2029. In point of fact, it could never occur again in that asylum as regards these parties?—The woman remained as an attendant in the new asylum, then becoming an asylum exclusively for men.
- Restraint.
2030. Are there any means of mechanical restraint at the disposal of the servants generally?—There are strait waistcoats. I must beg of you to allow me to mention, with regard to restraint, that we have endeavoured, to the utmost extent, to do without it; but the total abolition of restraint in the asylum, as it is at present, is impossible. It may happen that weeks or months will pass over without it being necessary to restrain patients.
2031. Do you think if the windows were rendered more secure, and the arrangements generally more complete, that restraint could be better dispensed with?—Yes, especially if there were padded rooms.
- Payment of servants.
2032. Now, as regards the qualifications of the attendants, I understood you to say that you thought, for the existing attendants in Ireland, the rate of wages is sufficient; do you think the rate of wages now given is sufficient to secure the services of competent persons to take charge of the insane?—I do not.
- Dietary—vegetables.
2033. Do you think the diet sufficient, and that it is judiciously varied?—Sometimes there is not sufficient vegetables, but I think the dietary is a fair one.
2034. Have you reported the want of vegetables to the Board of Governors, or to the manager?—I have represented it to the manager.
2035. Are those representations contained in any book, or were they merely verbal?—With regard to my communications with the Board, I make some in writing, and some enrce. I do not remember, at this moment, whether I communicated in writing to Mr. Wrigley with regard to the vegetables.
- Suggestions.
2036. Your communications are not recorded in any book?—I am not aware that they are.
2037. Have your representations been attended with any benefit, or followed by any improvement?—Very often without any benefit. The Board, I must say, are always ready to act on any suggestions the medical men make to them with respect to the arrangements of the asylum. Applications must be made for every thing for the new house to the manager and matron, and I have been informed that the supplies of various articles are insufficient; I may mention soap, for example.
2038. You mean by bathing, washing the whole person?—Yes. I have directed every person in the institution, unless I give an order against it, to get a general bath once a week. That is the practice in the new house.
- Supply of soap.
2039. To wash the entire person once a week?—Yes, that is my order; and I consider the supply of soap is insufficient, and also the means of drying the patient after the bath.

RICHMOND DISTRICT ASYLUM—(continued).

2040. What office do you hold at the Richmond Lunatic Asylum?—I am resident apothecary. That is my appointment. In addition to that duty I act as manager to the new branch of the establishment; and, in the absence of the surgeon, I attend day and night cases of emergency that arise, both medical and surgical.

2041. How long have you held your appointment in connexion with the Richmond Asylum?—Since it first opened, forty-two or forty-three years ago. I was visiting apothecary till the new branch opened, and then I was appointed resident apothecary. For twenty years of the time I was the apothecary attached to the hospitals of the House of Industry.

2042. Were there any instructions communicated to you on the occasion of your being appointed to superintend the new asylum?—In the report of the Inspectors I am reported as being superintendent. I do not recollect that there were any particular instructions given to me.

2043. Were you in any way informed as to the duties you would have to discharge as superintendent of the new asylum, and of your position in relation to the manager, Mr. Wrigley?—Not at that time. I was given to understand that I should manage and conduct the asylum. I had to open and arrange it, and put every thing in a proper state in it; and afterwards I was informed that Mr. Wrigley was my superior officer there.

2044. Were those instructions given to you by the Inspectors or the Board of Governors?—I did not get instructions on the subject, but I understood myself he was that. I should say the Inspectors more than the Governors, for I was more in contact with them; but I did not get special orders on the subject from either. I got verbal instructions.

2045. Were all the instructions verbal?—They were.

2046. How long were you in charge of the new asylum before you were informed that you were to act under Mr. Wrigley?—I could not say how long.

2048. Who, then, discharges, in the new asylum, the duty which the regulations of 1843 require should be performed by a manager?—I do, with the exception that I do not procure any thing. I procure things through the manager latterly; at first I procured them from the Board, and it was said that course was attended with inconvenience, and I was ordered to get the things through him.

2049. What books do you keep in the institution?—I may say I keep almost none.

2050. By whom are the register and other books connected with the new asylum kept?—They are kept at the old house.

2051. Do you make any communication to Mr. Wrigley with reference to the daily condition of the house?—No, I do not.

2052. Then how can the morning statement book be filled up at the old asylum as regards the inmates of the asylum under your charge?—Because he knows all about the admissions before I get the patients, and I send down a return to him of the deaths and discharges about which he does not know. I send him the name of each patient that dies, and the time.

2053. Do you make a return to Mr. Wrigley daily, of the number of patients employed?—I do not.

2054. How can he fill up the morning statement book with a return of the numbers employed when he does not receive it from you for the new asylum?—He knows that the class of patients we have are nearly unfit to work. There are none working out in the garden, they are doing the work about our place—digging and improving about the grounds. I do not make any return to him.

2055. Do you make a return of the number of patients under restraint or seclusion?—I do not.

2056. Mr. Wrigley is, therefore, equally unable to fill up the morning statement book on that point?—Yes; they have never been required.

2058. Why did you cease at that time to keep the book?—By direction of the Governors and Dr. White at the Board-room. They told me it was inconvenient keeping it.

2059. Do you mean Dr. White, the Inspector of Asylums?—I do. I got the directions at the Board also. Mr. Wrigley was adverse to my keeping that book from the beginning.

2060. In what way do you now communicate to the Board any matters which you may wish to bring under their consideration?—Through Dr. Banks, verbally. When he goes to the Board I always get him to communicate those things which I used to communicate direct to the Board, which I would have preferred much going on doing. Any thing I want I get through Mr. Wrigley. It is left optional with him to order what I apply for.

2061. Do you communicate with Mr. Wrigley in writing or verbally?—My applications are in writing. There is a book with printed forms of application, having blanks and leaves to cut off. We say, please send us, in the new asylum, so-and-so.

2062. In case you may wish to call the attention of the Board to any matters connected with the new asylum which did not involve an actual supply of articles, in what manner do you make known your views?—Through Mr. Wrigley.

2064. The provisions for the new asylum being supplied from the old asylum, do you consider it necessary to make any particular inspection of them?—Yes. I should explain, perhaps, that the steward and provider, Mr. Fitzsimons, receives the beef and bread, and has the inspection of them. He then sends it up to our asylum, and the doctors exercise a very strict surveillance over it. I also inspect it very frequently myself. Beer, oatmeal, and rice, come direct to us without any inspection.

2065. Do you consider it your duty, as superintendent of the new asylum, to see that the subordinate officers acquit themselves of their duties with regularity and care?—I do.

2066. In case you find any irregularity in that respect, how do you bring it under the notice of the Board?—I write a complaint to the Board.

2068. As the manager does not regularly visit the asylum, he would, of course, be unable to make such statements in the daily statement book?—I have made reports to him directly of irregularities, but more generally to the Board.

2069. Do you communicate directly to the manager each day that you may find misconduct on the part of the subordinate officers?—I do not. I should add, that there is no occurrence takes place in the house but I always communicate it to Dr. Banks, and take his advice as to what I should do. I get Dr. Banks to reprimand the servants himself, and, if that does not do, I communicate with the Board.

2070. Do you attend at the hours of meals to see that they are properly served up?—Nearly always.

2071. Do you daily inspect all the wards?—Oh, yes; I go several times round the wards in the day.

2073. Do you communicate with the visiting physician, Dr. Banks, on the occasion of his visits, with reference to the cases of the several patients?—Invariably; and I go round with him always to bring them under his notice.

2075. Are they persons who are competent to assist in the carrying out of such mental treatment as Dr. Banks may direct?—They are not all so. There are men there, I think, not competent for the duties they perform.

2076. Do you mean that they are not efficient servants for a curative institution?—Certainly not. Two of them I could say not, decidedly. One man is a tailor; he was sent there from the old asylum, with two very imbecile tailors, to make clothes. On that account I put up with him, though he is not fit to be a keeper. The last man appointed is asthmatic; he is totally unfit for a place of the kind, and still he is a man of good character.

2077. Who is the next person in authority in the new asylum?—The assistant matron.

2078. What are her duties?—To look after the cooking, the beds and the bedding, and the cleanliness of the inner clothing—shirts, and stockings; and to see that the wards are kept in due order.

2079. Is the assistant matron placed under your authority?—She does not acknowledge that. She says Mrs. Wrigley is the matron. She ought to be under my authority.

2080. Have you ever received any instructions as to your relative duties?—We have not. It would have been pleasant to both if we had.

2081. What is the number of attendants in the new asylum altogether?—Twelve men and twelve women.

2083. Is there sufficient occupation for that number of female attendants, now that there are no female patients in the asylum?—I think they are almost starved; they are continually working. The men have nothing to do with the cleaning of the house; they attend to the patients. The patients do most of the scouring work, the women superintending, and constantly having to assist. I may add, if the floors could be polished, so as to avoid scouring, it would be a great benefit to the institution.

2084. Are the patients employed in the house?—They are, a great many of them.

2085. Would they not be capable of performing some of the work that is now performed by the servants?—They do perform the work that female servants should do; the women would not be able to do it but for the men.

2086. Am I to understand that you could not reduce the number of female servants without giving more extended employment to the patients in the establishment?—Not unless you took men to attend them. If you dispense with the women, you should have more male keepers. It is said to be objectionable to have females amongst the men.

2087. What is the general class of patients in your asylum?—There is a large number of epileptic cases; there are idiotic and suicide cases, and incurables; and there are very few, indeed, of whose recovery there is a chance.

2088. A large proportion of the inmates of Island-bridge were transferred to your asylum?—Yes, a very large proportion.

2089. They are mostly chronic cases?—Yes.

2090. Could you state about how many were transferred from Island-bridge to your asylum?—About seventy-six, I think.

2091. That is more than half the number in your establishment?—Yes; we have 149 today. The best of those from Island-bridge were kept at the old house, and the worst were sent up to us. As well as I can learn, they have not got more than two made epileptics in the old establishment. I mean to convey that there was a selection made of the inferior class of cases for us.

2092. Is a daily inspection of the house made by Mr. Wrigley?—No.

2093. How often has he inspected within the last month?—He has not been round the wards at all this last month.

2094. How often has he been round the wards for the last six months?—I do not recollect him going round the wards for the last six months.

2095. Has he been round the grounds?—Yes, I brought him in myself within the last two months.

2096. Did he inspect the patients in the wards on that occasion?—He did not. The thing has been left very much to me.

2097. Is the house cold?—It is.

2098. Is there any arrangement for the warming of the house beyond fire-places?—None beyond fire-places.

2099. Are the fire-places in the galleries in the outer or inner walls?—In the outer walls.

2100. Are the galleries extensive?—Yes.

2101. Are they much used by the patients?—They are in winter time.

2102. Are the fires lighted in the galleries in winter?—Yes, all the fires.

2103. How is the house ventilated?—By means of the windows and air-holes out of the dormitories and cells.

2104. Is the ventilation defective?—Decidedly not; quite the reverse.

2105. Have the artificial arrangements for ventilation ever worked?—Never, they are defective in the roof; there is no means of letting in air, into the cells particularly.

2106. Have you had opportunities of ascertaining whether the atmosphere of the rooms was pure during the night?—Frequently it is quite the reverse; I call it poisonous. When a patient is confined for a day or two, the smell is very bad.

2107. Does that apply to the dormitories?—It applies to the cells particularly, and to the dormitories at night. We have ten patients in a large dormitory, and if you go in there in the middle of the night, the air is very foul indeed.

2108. Are there fire-places in the dormitories?—No.

2110. Have you had cases of patients attempting to get through windows, or breaking the sashes?—They could get out. We had no case of their breaking them. First we had no pins to fasten them, and they used to turn them inside out. The pin is put into the sash outside, which prevents them coming down much.

2111. Does that operation prevent the windows being perfectly closed?—No.

2112. Are the walls of the corridors plastered?—No, they are whitewashed brick. We use freestone, which is a very great curse in the institution, and the dust, when there is sweeping, lies on the inequalities of surface on the walls.

2113. Are the walls damp?—Part of the house is very damp. The front of the house is damper than the other portions of it.

2114. Are the doors of the cells properly secured?—They are not. They are double panelled. They have been kicked through by a man with his bare heel—I mean the inner panel, and not the outer one. There are no holes in the doors to let you see in, and it is a very great mistake that we cannot look into the rooms. The night watchman, unless he opens the doors, which disturbs the patients, cannot see what is going on.

2115. What sort of bedsteads are in use?—Principally iron for the epileptic patients. There are fourteen in the cells, seven on each side, besides some new ones we got in from our own Governors.

2116. Are those iron bedsteads also?—No, they are wooden bedsteads.

2117. Is it the case that some of the bedsteads cannot be moved out of the cells?—Yes, the wooden ones that were made in the cells, and it is a great inconvenience they cannot be moved out.

2118. Do you consider the iron bedsteads dangerous, from the facility with which patients might break them, and use portions of them to injure themselves or others?—I consider them very dangerous. They can break the sheet iron, and make a saw to saw their throats, if so inclined.

DURLEY.

The Richmond
District Asylum.

2119. What beds are used in the asylum?—Cocoa-nut mattresses and straw.

2120. Are those injured by the iron bedsteads?—Very much. The iron marks the ticks, and rusts them. Even where the patients do not wet the beds, the perspiration gets down and marks the iron; otherwise the cocoa-nut beds are very good for dry patients but they do not answer at all for wet patients.

2121. Do you put straw mattresses under the cocoa-nut beds?—Never.

2122. Is there a sufficient supply of sheeting and other bedding in the house?—I would say not; I would say the supply is scanty.

2123. How frequently does it admit of the sheeting being changed?—Not fully once a-week. They only change a portion; about ten or a dozen pair of sheets will be changed in the week in each division. The nurse will take the worst sheet, perhaps, and give a single sheet in place of the bed one.

2124. Have you ever represented this want to the Governors or to the manager?—No; I have frequently talked to Dr. Banks about it. It is the duty of the matron to do so, and I understand she has remonstrated about it. I am told there is not a sufficient supply of shirts, and that there is a very poor supply of stockings.

Shirts and stockings.

Supply of water :

Its quality.

2125. Is there a sufficient supply of water to the house?—There is not.

2126. What is the quality of the water?—It is very much loaded with lime. There are other ingredients, I dare say. There is magnesia, but it is loaded with lime, so that when boiling the lime boils to the top, and may be skimmed off. By continued exposure, it extracts carbon from the atmosphere, and the lime comes to the top. We have a large rain-water tank to supply the jacket round the boiler; it must be soft water for that purpose. The hard water is in the boiler. The soft water is derived from the roof; it comes down through little sewers, which convey it into this great tank. But, in consequence of some alteration made by the Board of Works, they turned the water from the large building where the straw is into the foul water from the kitchen, and both were actually turned into the rain-water tank for a time. The soft-water sewer also passes close to some of the fountains, where foul things are washed in the yard, and as it is feared the foul water communicates with it, it will not be used for consumption; every one objects to use it, except for washing purposes.

Hot water.

2127. Is there a supply of hot water daily throughout the establishment?—In the kitchen there is a daily supply, and they are in the habit of carrying it up from that.

2128. Are there any means of conveying hot water to the establishment by hot-water pipes?—There is, but they are not used in summer. We do not light the furnace for the baths in summer, unless on Fridays.

2129. Am I to understand that those pipes do not convey hot water, except when the furnace is lighted?—They do not.

2130. How frequently is that furnace lighted?—Every Friday. On other days there is no hot water laid on.

2131. On other days, for the sake of economy, no hot water is laid on. What is the cost of keeping the furnace lighted throughout the day?—There are two furnaces. About a shilling a-day would keep it going; at present we keep one of them lighted for the purpose of drying beds, so that one side of the house will have hot water.

2132. Since what period?—Since the change in the weather. We dried the beds last winter in the corridors and day-rooms; but it is unseemly, and the patients kicked them about from the fires.

Warm-baths.

2133. If a warm bath is ordered by the physician, how is it provided?—By heating that immense tank of water you saw above stairs.

2134. Do you mean that if a hot bath was ordered for a particular patient, you would light the furnace to provide the water?—If it was ordered in a hurry, I would have it brought up from the boiler in the kitchen.

2135. Are there shower-baths in the establishment?—Yes.

2136. Are shower-baths administered without the direction of the physician?—No.

2137. Have you known patients to be put into shower-baths or plunge-baths by way of punishment?—Yes, but very rarely.

2138. Was that done without the knowledge of the physician?—Very rarely, without his previous knowledge. The thing has been of rare occurrence, for Dr. Banks has most determinedly put his face against every thing of the kind. It might be done without my knowledge, but they would risk their situations, if they did a thing of the kind in the house. Both coercion and baths, without directions, have been in the most determined manner opposed and suppressed.

Washing requisites.

2139. Are the corks in the lavatories in good order?—They are kept in good order.

2140. Do you satisfy yourself that the patients are properly washed each morning in the various wards?—I do not see them washed each morning; sometimes in my rounds I see them washing.

2141. Is there a proper supply of soap?—No; there is half-a-pound of soap to twenty-six patients for the week, and that is not sufficient. There is none supplied for the weekly baths, though Dr. Banks ordered it.

2142. Have you represented that matter, and has it not been attended to?—Dr. Banks has been more urgent upon the matter than I have been.

2143. Are combs and brushes provided in the wards?—Combs, but not brushes.

Water-closets.

2144. In what condition are the water-closets?—Very bad; they are always going out of order. The men stuff in bats, and even shoes, and every thing they can lay their hands upon.

2145. Is the sewerage good?—It is pretty fair.

2146. Do you mean fair in construction, or that it works well?—It has worked tolerably well; I would not say too much for it. The sewers have been opened twice.

2147. Are there means for flushing the sewers?—We have not the means for properly flushing them. If there was a proper supply of water to do so, I think the sewers would not. Water has to be pumped twice a-day; the supply is not sufficient.

2148. What arrangements are made for the amusements of the patients?—There are no particular arrangements. I bought them a fiddle at my own expense, I gave them a chess-board of my own, and I gave them cards. As to other amusements, there is nothing but ball-playing.

2149. Is there a chess-board in use in the establishment?—Not a chess-board, but a draught-board.

2150. Are any books provided for their use?—The clergymen provide books.

2151. Are there any amusing books provided by the Board?—There are, but they are selected by the clergymen.

2152. Are those books all of a religious character?—They all have a tendency that way. When the institution first opened, I supplied a good many books; I lent them very extensively amongst the patients; and a complaint was made of me to the Inspectors that I lent books of a controversial nature, but it was no such thing. I lent the "Red Rover," the "Last of the Mohicans," and a variety of like works, without any other consideration than to amuse the patients. Unfortunately I lent a volume of the "Irish Penny Journal," which contains a vast number of amusing short stories, and in the book there were some chapters from the "Wandering Jew," and I was reported to the Inspector, I suspect by whom. Since that I lent no books. I had no view but the amusement of the patients. I say that on my oath; and for my own protection I ceased to lend the books.

2153. Are the attendants capable of reading to the patients?—They are.

2156. Are there any prints or subjects of interest hanging up in the galleries to enliven them?—None; if there were prints put up there, they should be carefully selected.

2160. I believe there is a church in the grounds, divided for the use of the two religions?—Yes.

2161. What arrangements are made for the celebration of Divine service?—The Roman Catholics go in at nine o'clock, and come out at ten; and the Protestants go in at ten, and come out at eleven. If the Catholic clergyman delays beyond ten, we are obliged to wait till he is done. It has happened that we have had to wait outside till he was done.

2162. Would it not be better that some longer period should be allowed, in order that the patients should not be kept waiting?—It would be better, for sometimes it creates dissatisfaction; I heard the patients grovel about it.

2163. What is your opinion as to the advantage of the patients being allowed to attend religious worship, and receive the ministrations of their respective clergy?—I think it is an advantage and a consolation to many of them to be allowed to attend religious worship. To many it is of no advantage; a good many go who cannot comprehend a word of it—a great many idiots. I do not interfere with the persons brought belonging to the other class; I leave that to the servants and clergy to settle. Many go that I do not approve of. At the other side I do exercise a surveillance, and do not allow those to go that I do not think fit for it.

2164. How frequently do the clergymen visit the various wards?—The Catholic clergyman visits daily.

2165. Is he accompanied by you, or does he go by himself?—By himself.

2166. Has he access to any patient he may desire to visit?—Full access; there is no interference whatever with him.

2167. Supposing the visiting physician considered it would be injurious to a patient to have his mind excited upon religious matters at that particular time, would it not be competent for him, as a matter of treatment, to forbid that patient receiving the visit of the clergyman that day?—I should say, yes; but I have no recollection of his ever having done so. I should say his orders are supreme there.

2168. Is there any school in the new asylum?—No school whatever.

2169. Would not general instruction afford occupation which might be useful for the patients?—Yes, if we had the means of giving it. Very few of them are capable of receiving instruction.

2170. That arises from the very large number of imbeciles in the asylum?—Yes, imbeciles and idiots. We have twenty-eight epileptic cases, and eighteen suicide cases.

DUBLIN.

The Richmond
District Asylum.

F. Beatty, Esq.
The grounds of the
Asylum.

2171. Who has charge of the grounds adjoining the new asylum?—Mr. Wrigley.

2172. Who directs the labour?—Mr. Wrigley.

2173. Do you send any of your patients from your asylum to work in the grounds?—No; I have too few to work about the house.

2174. Am I to understand that all the patients who work in the grounds adjoining the new asylum, are sent from the old house?—Yes. Mr. Wrigley made a selection of the best cases fit to work, and kept them. The most incompetent were sent to us. When I speak of twenty men in the new asylum working, I speak of their working in and about the house.

2175. Do you exercise any superintendence whatever over the garden?—I do not.

2176. Or the grounds under crop about the institution?—I do not, except a little garden of my own.

2177. Where is that little garden?—Amongst the pear trees.

2178. What is the extent of that garden?—Less than half an acre.

2179. Is it cultivated by the patients?—It is.

2180. Do you keep any draught animal?—Not for the purpose of draught. I have got a donkey and a little deer belonging to Dr. Banks.

2181. Do you keep any pigs?—I do; two pigs.

2182. Is that sanctioned by the Governors?—It is.

2183. For how long?—A short time. I had more, and I was ordered not to keep so many.

2184. Has it been sanctioned a week?—It has, more than that.

2185. Are there any other pigs maintained on the soil of the house?—I believe Mr. Wrigley had pigs.

2186. Are any fowl kept by you and Mrs. Wrigley?—Yes. The pigs will not be able, by any means, to consume the waste, and it is a pity to let it go to loss. If we are not allowed to keep pigs, I should say a piggery should be kept for the institution.

Officers and rooms.

2187. I believe the offices attached to the institution are very extensive?—They are extensive; more room, a good deal, than what we require. There is a carpenter's shop, and we have no carpenter competent to work. There is one man, a suicide case, we could not trust with tools. There is a smith's forge, which we cannot use.

2188. Have you apartments in the institution?—I have.

2189. What number of rooms do you occupy?—I think I occupy eight or ten; I occupy more rooms than I would require; on account of their being empty, when I came first, I put a quantity of furniture that I had into them.

2190. What number of rooms does the assistant matron occupy?—She has three rooms, and she occupies two.

Female attendants.

2191. I believe female attendants are employed in the male wards?—They are.

2193. What is your opinion as to the propriety of employing female attendants in male wards?—I think it is a decided benefit; I think they are a check upon the male attendants, who might otherwise be more violent with the patients. The women have brought cases of ill-treatment under my notice, and I am satisfied their presence prevents harshness. A nurse did bring a case of violence to a patient under my notice, and I brought it before the Board, and the man was acquitted.

2194. From your experience, have you found any objections, on moral grounds, to females being employed in the male wards?—Nothing has arisen with us which could show that there was an objection.

Store-rooms.

2195. Are there any store-rooms in the several galleries and corridors?—There are small store-rooms. It is the intention of the gentlemen who inspected last year to make a change, and to put up presses for the accommodation of the nurses.

2196. Does the arrangement of the corridors in the asylum admit of their being seen from any one point?—No, there is a turn.

Plan of the building.

2197. In your opinion is that objectionable?—Certainly. The construction of the building is such that it could not be otherwise. It would be very desirable I could see the entire corridor; if I was coming in at the door, they could make an alteration in the state of affairs, when they would hear my foot, which they know well.

2198. Could that have been obviated if the centre of the building projected less?—It could, but it cannot be done now.

2199. Do you consider, then, it was a sacrifice made for the sake of the architectural effect of the exterior?—No doubt. A great deal has been given up in that respect.

2200. You have stated you have several suicide cases in your asylum?—Yes; more than we should have.

Suicide cases.

2201. How many of the 143 do you consider suicide cases?—Eighteen, I consider. Several have attempted suicide before they came to us. Two had marks upon their throats.

2202. Have you made any arrangements for watching these cases in the dormitories?—We have. At my request, Dr. Banks applied to the Board, and he had an alteration made in the door—a little spy-hole cut, and a place fitted up for one of the servants to sleep in the dormitory with nine of the worst of them. The others slept in the wards, where there are more sane persons to be a check upon them. The servant's portion of the dormitory has been boarded off, for security and comfort; and bells have been put up, that he may communicate with the keepers' rooms, and also for alarming himself in case of necessity. The reason of those arrangements was, that a man unfortunately succeeded in destroying himself. He was very violent to every one around him, and he did injure one of our keepers very much. He conceived a jealousy against the keeper, and considered he was too intimate with his wife. We were obliged to remove him from the place that he was in. He was a powerful man, and had been a fighting man in the county of Wicklow. He was decidedly dangerous to the people about him, so much so that we put him into a cell by himself. We had no sufficient shutters to keep him from getting at the windows, as he did, and he hung himself from the ash by a sheet.

2203. Were the windows of the house provided with shutters when the building was given up to the Board of Works?—No, only very few in each corridor, not more than three. The windows are perfectly insecure. I could have brought over a bundle of broken bars to show you.

2204. The house is lighted with gas?—Yes.

2205. Are the gas-pipes carried up to the roof?—They are.

2206. Do you consider that arrangement a safe one?—I do not; it would have been better to have brought them up along the wall, and run them along the corridors. We have one man very mischievous; he is worse than a monkey. He jumped up on one occasion, and gave the gas-pipe a pull, and created an escape of gas. I got a ladder, turned it off, and stopped the orifice with a cork, but there was still a strong smell of gas. I made a survey, and went up with a lamp, and, as I proceeded, found the smell getting stronger and stronger; I left the lamp behind, and went on, and found the pipe which had been discharging gas, and which had been broken by this man. I turned off the gas, and got the pipe repaired. If I went on with the lamp, as I was doing in the first instance, there might have been an explosion.

2207. Did you report that to the Governors?—I did not; I got it remedied.

2208. Do you consider the asylum capable of containing more than it at present holds?—It was built to contain 168; but Dr. Banks, and I also, considered that it would have crowded the dormitories too much to put in that number. If you remember when you looked round you there were quite sufficient in the dormitories; in other parts of the house you might put them.

2209. Are there not several rooms vacant in the portion of the building comprising the offices, which might be occupied?—There are, and up stairs; there is waste lumber of mine in some of them, that could be removed.

2210. Is there a night watchman on the premises?—Yes; not an appointed watchman; one of the keepers takes it in turn to sit up, and he is allowed to stay in bed till one o'clock next day.

2211. Is there any thing else you wish to state?—There is not a Report Book. He has orders to call others if any thing happens, and he has done so occasionally.

2212. There being no opening in the doors, he is of course unable to see the condition of the patients without opening the doors?—Yes, and that disturbs the patients when they are asleep.

2213. Is it in contemplation to change the airing courts from the north side of the building more to the front?—It is in contemplation to have additional airing courts in front, and to enlarge some of the present airing courts.

2214. Do the Governors ever visit the asylum?—Not often.

2215. How many of the Governors visited the asylum within the last twelve months?—Sir George Hudson has, perhaps, visited two or three times.

2216. Any other Governor?—I have no recollection.

2217. Did he go round the whole establishment?—No, I do not think he did.

2218. Do you discharge in person the duties of apothecary to the asylum?—I have an apprentice who assists me.

2219. Do you attend each day at the old asylum for the purpose of compounding?—Not every day.

2220. Is that assistant a competent person?—I consider him a competent person.

2221. Is he one of the clinical clerks?—Yes; on account of good conduct in the institution, and his attention, he was considered deserving of the appointment.

2222. Where are the medicines for the new asylum compounded?—At the old asylum, except in cases of emergency, and then I have a supply in the house to answer it.

2223. Do you transmit to the assistant at the old asylum a statement of what medicines you require?—The doctor's books tell.

2224. Where are the doctor's books kept?—Each nurse keeps a book.

2225. How do the books reach the assistant who compounds?—They are sent down to the porter's lodge.

2226. Do you yourself compound any of the medicines?—I do, a portion; but the assistant does the principal part.

2227. Your duties as apothecary do not take you very much from your other avocations in the asylum?—No; my assistant was nearly two years under my own eye, before I trusted him to compound at all. I consider him as competent as most of the young men you meet out of doors in shops.

Mr. James Fitzmaurice, sworn and examined.

2228. What office do you hold in connexion with the Richmond Lunatic Asylum?—I am termed clerk and store-keeper.

2229. You act as clerk for the whole institution comprised in the old and new asylums?—I do.

2230. And as regards stores and provisions, there is but one account for the whole asylum, as I understand?—Only one account.

DEBATE.
*The Richmond

Mr. J. Fitzmaurice.

2231. Including also the infirmaries?—Yes.
2232. How long have you held that office?—Three years and four months.
2233. What duties do you discharge as clerk—do you keep the minutes of the Board?
 —No; the minutes of the Board are kept by Mr. Nunn, the accountant.
2234. Do you reside in the asylum?—No.
2235. Is it by the particular permission of the Board you do not reside?—Yes, it is.
- When I was appointed I did not commence to reside.
2236. In the absence of the manager, do you exercise control over the establishment?
 —So far as my department is concerned, I do.
2237. Do you exercise a superintendence over the keepers, nurses, and servants?—No.
2238. At no time?—At no time.
2239. Are the stores and provisions required for the institution provided upon tenders?
 —They are.
2240. By whom are the tenders received?—By the Board. They advertise for tenders and decide upon them.
2241. Are the accepted tenders notified to you?—They are. I draw out a transcript of them.
2242. Do you exercise any supervision over the quality of the provisions?—I do. I examine all the provisions daily to see whether they are of proper quality.
2243. Are they also subject to the supervision of the medical officers?—They are.
2244. To what officers in the establishment do you immediately issue the stores?—I issue the meat to the cook, and the nurses of the establishment come for their bread and also for their meat. I weigh the provisions that are required each day in the first instance, and then I give it into the care of the head nurse and cook to weigh it in gross.
2245. Do you know how that is eventually distributed to the subordinate nurses?—I give them a list of how they are to dispose of it.
2246. Are the rations for the servants included in these issues you make thus to the head nurse and cook?—Yes.
2247. In what manner are the provisions issued for the new asylum?—The provisions are issued similarly. The quantity required is sent up by the butcher and baker to the new asylum.
2248. Is that inspected by you before it goes to the new asylum?—Always inspected by me before it goes to the asylum.
2249. Is the same course pursued with regard to the infirmaries?—Yes.
2250. Are the issues of hospital extras, such as wine, &c., made daily by you?—They do not come under my observation at all.
2251. By whom are the supplies of wine and other hospital extras received?—I am not prepared exactly to say, but I should think by the manager.
2252. What are the principal provisions received and issued by you?—Meat, bread, milk, potatoes that come from the garden, vegetables, beer, porter, butter, salt, oatmeal, rice, cocoa, sugar, and other groceries. I do not interfere with the tea, the wine, eggs, or spirits.
2253. Are you furnished daily with a statement of the number of inmates for whom rations will be required?—Yes.
2254. Are you furnished with a statement of the quantity of extras which will be required each day in the hospital?—Not of any medical extras, such as wine.
2255. Am I to understand that you keep no account of the tea, wine, spirits, or eggs that are supplied in the establishment?—I do. I keep an account of all these things.
2256. Is that an account of the quantity actually issued, or have you any check upon the correctness of those issues?—Yes, the Daily Dietary Book gives an account of every article.
2257. Is the tea consumed in the establishment received and issued by you?—No.
2258. How do you know how much tea is consumed in the establishment?—By the furnishing of the account in the monthly statement and the orders, as appears by the account.
2259. Do you not issue the tea that goes to the new asylum?—The tea that goes to the new asylum comes into the bread room, and it goes up in a basket. The quantity at present is eleven ounces of tea and the sugar, which I send up to the new asylum.
2260. Do you also receive and issue tea and sugar for the servants?—Yes, I do, and the cook counts it out to them.
2261. Who receives the tea and sugar, and issues it for the breakfast?—The matron, and manager, and head nurse. I have nothing to say to the tea and sugar for breakfast.
2262. Can you give any reason why this supply should be received and issued by persons who are not store-keepers?—I cannot. It had been always the case since my appointment, that Mr. and Mrs. Wrigley ordered the tea and sugar for breakfast, and the head nurse takes it down and makes the breakfast.
2263. Are you enabled to check those orders given by Mr. Wrigley for tea and sugar by any data in your possession?—I could.
2264. Do you know the number of tea breakfasts used every morning?—They are down correctly in the Dietary Book.
2265. What proportion of all the tea received is ordered monthly by Mr. Wrigley?—In the month of October he ordered 43 lbs. of tea out of 186 lbs. received; in the month of September he ordered 55 lbs. out of 170 lbs. received; in the month of August, 56 lbs. out of 104 lbs.
2266. What proportion of the whole of the sugar received is ordered by Mr. Wrigley?

Stores supplied by tender.

Issuing of provisions,
 &c.

Accounts of the
 provisions, &c.

Tea and sugar.

—In October, out of 1,322 lbs., he ordered 260 lbs.; in September, out of 1,232 lbs., he ordered 190 lbs.; and, in the month of August, out of 1,343 lbs., he ordered 264 lbs.

2267. Are the servants in the respective wards obliged to make any return to you of the rations actually consumed?—Certainly. Every morning they give me a printed form of all the requirements.

2268. Suppose that some rations were not consumed, from patients having died, or from some other cause, is there any return to the stores?—The bread, particularly, is returned into the store, and I give credit in my book for it.

2269. Do you yourself attend at the wards of the patients to see that they receive proper allowances?—No; I have never attended in any way.

2270. Have you ever read that portion of the general rules and regulations which prescribes your duty?—I have never received any instructions of the kind.

2271. You are not aware, then, that it is one of the regulations made by the Lord Lieutenant, as far back as 1843, that you should perform that duty?—I am not.

2272. Do you keep any account of the receipt of coals, candles, soap, &c.?—I do, on an account account.

2273. Are those articles issued on requisition from the manager, or any other officer?—There is a certain quantity allowed for each person. The servants are allowed half a pound of soap each.

2274. Are there any extras of soap given?—There are four pounds given to the matron, half a pound each given to the cook, the hall porter, the head nurse, and the matrons in the infirmaries; two pounds are given to the matron of the Grangegorman branch.

2275. Is any soap issued for cleaning the house in addition to those allowances?—Yes, there is yellow soap for the laundry; there is no other soap, that I know of, for cleaning the house.

2276. In what manner do you make those issues for coals?—There is a man who superintends the delivery of the coals, and I give him a list of the number of tubs of coal that go to each division. It is under the instructions of Mr. Wrigley; this list is given out every Monday, and this man delivers the coals according to the list; the keepers of the different divisions come with their tubs, and receive so many tubs of coals.

2277. How is the distribution of candles made?—We are not using candles since the gas was put in. As to soap, it is arranged that each servant gets half a pound once a week, every Friday. I give the order to the contractor for soap on the calculation I have stated.

2278. Is that half-pound for their own use, or for the use of the inmates?—I should say for both.

2279. Is that all the soap that is issued in the week?—That is all. There are, in addition, two pounds of soap given for shaving, in the whole establishment, each week; and there is a pound given to the Grangegorman branch, and half a pound to the infirmary, for shaving.

2280. Do you go round the institution, so as to satisfy yourself that those articles are used?—I do not go round the institution at all.

2281. Are those issues fixed by any orders of the Board of Governors, or is it by the requisition of the manager?—By the direction of the manager. I received the direction when I went there, and it has not varied ever since; the proportion of soap is invariable.

2282. Is the quantity given to each servant unvarying, without reference to the number of patients that he or she may have in charge?—I should think so. The cook cuts up the soap in small half pounds, and gives it out.

2283. Do you exercise any control over the general stores of the house—clothing, bedding, furniture, and such like?—I do not. I receive the clothing of the male patients, and give it out on requisition from Mr. Wrigley. He gives me an order for every thing that I give out.

2284. Is the clothing for the male side at present made in the house?—No.

2285. Is it furnished by a contractor?—Furnished by a contractor, at 16s. per suit. I get a requisition for every suit.

2286. On whose requisition do you issue the clothing for the house?—On Mr. Wrigley's.

2287. Are the shoes made in the house?—They are supplied by contract.

2288. On whose requisition do you issue the shoes?—I do not interfere with the shoes; I never did.

2289. Then you do not know what number of shoes are made and used in the house?—I do not.

2290. Are you aware by whom the shoes are received or issued?—I should say they are received by the manager.

2291. Who is the contractor for the supply of shoes?—A man named Young.

2292. Can you give any reason why those articles should not be issued by you?—I cannot.

2293. Is the female clothing made up in the house?—I am not in a position to state; Mrs. Wrigley manages that.

2294. Do you receive and issue any supplies of articles for making up female clothing?—There are articles come into the stores—such as pieces of linen, check, and various things of that kind—and I receive and enter them in my book. I do not know further. Mrs. Wrigley takes them, and makes them up, I suppose.

2295. Are they supplied by contract?—Not at all; they are purchased at Pim's, and other places.

DEPOSITS.

The Richmond
District Asylum,
Mr. J. Fitzmaurice.

2296. Do you comply with every requisition the matron may make to you for those things?—Any requisition I receive, of course I do at once; but Mrs. Wrigley manages that matter herself.

2297. With regard to linen for the use of the house, is that received into the store?—It is.

2299. You keep no account of the quantity of clothing issued from time to time to the females?—I do not.

2300. In issuing the clothing to the male side, do you require like articles of old clothing to be returned into the store, or to be satisfactorily accounted for?—I cannot say that I do; the old clothing is not accounted for at all to me.

2301. As regards the female clothing?—I know nothing at all about that.

2302. What check is there that you are aware of upon the quantity of shoes that may be used in the house?—I do not know that there is any. There is a small book that I make up for the hall-porter, who sends it down to me. It is the hall-porter who keeps the account of the delivery of shoes; he enters them in a little book, and I make up that book at the end of the month for him.

2303. Am I to understand that, unlike such articles as meat, you never make a direct order to the contractor for the delivery of shoes?—Never.

2304. Is it from the hall-porter you ascertain the quantity of shoes that have been delivered?—From a small book of his, which I make up every month.

2305. Do you know to whom those shoes are handed over?—I do not.

2306. You are unable to tell, then, whether shoes are furnished when required, or that the old shoes are brought back into the store, in lieu of the new ones that are issued?—Quite so; except from the small book which the hall-porter sends me down. There generally appears to be a large balance of shoes in the store.

2307. Does the hall-porter generally receive back the cast shoes?—No; there is no mention of old shoes.

2308. Have you any idea of what becomes of the cast clothing or shoes in the establishment?—I have not.

2309. Has the hall-porter got a store where he can retain those articles?—I should say he has; I never saw it.

2310. With regard to the supply of ticking, and the articles for making up bedding, are they purchased by you?—Not at all.

2311. Or issued by you?—I occasionally receive into the store a piece of ticking, and Mrs. Wrigley takes it, and makes it up.

2312. Is that received into the store in compliance with any order issued by you to any contractor?—Not at all; there is merely an invoice that comes down from Pim's, and I enter that invoice.

2313. Then, you take in articles furnished by Pim in that way, though you may not know by whom they are ordered?—Just so.

2314. You give those articles to Mrs. Wrigley?—She has the key of the store.

2315. You do not keep the key of the store?—I have not it now; I got it occasionally.

2316. Who has the key of the store at this moment?—I should say Mrs. Wrigley has it.

2317. Is there a bill furnished of the articles which are supplied in that manner by Pim?—Yes; the porter brings me down the invoice, and says, "There are three pieces of linen at the store." He hands me the invoice, and I enter it down, "Invoice from Pim; so many pieces." I then take the invoice in my hand, and check with it the goods; I see that there are two or three pieces, as the case may be, and I hand the invoice and the key over to the porter or the keeper who brought them to me.

2318. Do you know whether the articles so furnished, accompanied by the invoices brought to you, are afterwards charged against the asylum?—The invoice is brought to the accountant.

2319. Is there any contract for supplying blankets?—There is a contract with Messrs. Eggs, of High-street, at present.

2320. Are the blankets ordered by you?—I do not order them at all.

2321. Are they ever in your custody?—They bring them into the store frequently, and they are given out to the different divisions.

2322. Is the same course pursued with regard to the counterpanes?—Precisely the same course.

2323. Suppose a new headstead were required, by whom would it be ordered?—By the manager. I have nothing to say to ordering any thing; he has the whole responsibility of that on himself.

2324. I understand, then, that you exercise no control whatever, as to the articles of which you have lately spoken—such as female clothing, shoes, materials for making up bedding, &c., beyond allowing them to remain, for a time, in your store, as a place of safe keeping?—Just so.

2325. You do not satisfy yourself that the quantities stated to be delivered are delivered; but you merely give out to the matron, on her requisition, the articles that may be deposited with you?—I count the pieces, and see that they correspond with the invoice.

2326. There might be three pieces of forty yards or of twenty yards?—I never measure them.

2327. Is the requisition from the matron a written requisition?—No.

2328. When the matron either takes the articles from the store herself, or receives them in pursuance of the written requisition, does she give you any receipt?—None whatever.

Absence of clocks.

Ticking, bedding,
how ordered and taken out of store.

Blankets.

Headsteads.

2320. Have you at any time taken an inventory of the furniture, bedding, beds, or house linen, in the establishment?—Never.

2330. You are unable at this moment, of course, to state what amount of property of that nature there is in the house?—Quite unable to state it.

2331. Were you clerk and storekeeper when the new asylum was opened?—I was.

2332. Did you receive from any person at that time a statement of the quantity of those articles in the new asylum, when given up by the Board of Works?—No.

2333. Is stock taken of the clothing, bedding, and other articles in the establishment, annually, or at any other time?—I heard it stated that Mrs. Wrigley takes it; I never do.

2334. Do you take stock of the stores in your own custody at any fixed period?—I took stock once only, about two years ago; there was but a small quantity in the store—indeed, there is but a very small quantity in it at present.

2335. I presume that occasionally you have considerable quantities of articles in your store?—No, we have not; generally speaking, there is only a very small quantity.

2336. Is there a contractor for the supply of straw?—Yes, Mr. Doyle.

2337. Is the straw ordered in by you?—He brings in the straw as we want it.

2338. Who checks the delivery of the straw?—I do; I see that the straw is delivered correctly, and in proper order.

2339. How do you issue the straw?—The keepers arrange that; they take the straw themselves. Mr. Wrigley, within the last fortnight, has given orders to the man in the bread-room to distribute the straw.

2340. To whom is the straw delivered when it is brought by the contractor?—I receive it from the contractor, and the market notes are given to me, and I give a receipt on each note.

2341. Is there a straw house?—There is.

2342. In whose charge is that house?—I cannot say, exactly, in whose charge it is.

2343. What check have you upon the consumption of straw?—None whatever.

2344. According to what rule do you make orders for the delivery of straw?—I never make any orders for delivering straw.

2345. You take whatever straw is brought, without knowing what quantity is required?—I do.

2346. Do you hand over the crane notes to the accountant?—I keep a book in my office till the account is furnished, and I hand back the crane notes to the man who delivers the straw.

2347. Is the straw ever weighed on delivery?—No, there is no machine for weighing it.

2348. By whom is the straw ordered?—There is a general order to supply us with what straw we want.

2349. How does the contractor know what amount you want?—We use generally about six tons a month.

2350. Who tells the contractor that?—I do.

2351. Then, in point of fact, do you order six tons a month to come in?—Yes. In fact, he keeps us supplied, so that we are never out of straw.

2352. How is the accountant informed of the quantity of straw that has been delivered?—By the furnishing of the contractor's account, which I check by the straw book. Then it is sent up to the accountant.

2353. Who keeps the key of the store where the straw is?—I cannot exactly say; I should say the man in the bread-room—he gives out the straw.

2354. As far as I understand, any person who has access to the premises might remove the straw without any check whatever?—I do not think that could be done; the straw is given out to the nurses.

2355. By whom?—By the man in the bread-room.

2356. You never inspected the straw store with a view to ascertain the quantity there?—Yes, I have been in the store. I always inspect the straw when it comes in, and see that it is dry.

2357. Have you inspected the straw store within the last month?—I do not think I did.

2358. Is it your habit to weigh the articles that are brought in?—Yes; I weigh every thing that is brought in.

2359. How is the straw delivered at the new asylum; does the contractor send it up direct?—The contractor used to bring it in carts to the old asylum, and we were very much inconvenienced by the patients bringing up straw, and I requested him to deliver straw at the new asylum.

2360. Who takes the straw from the contractor's man at the new asylum, and weighs it?—I get the receipts down, signed by Mr. Beatty.

2361. What is the meaning of the item in the bread account each week, of so much bread to Mrs. Wrigley?—Mrs. Wrigley is getting rations within the last six, or eight, or ten months, which she had not before. There is a pound and a-half of bread allowed every day to each person; she gets that, and I charge it weekly, and those are Mrs. Wrigley's bread rations that are entered.

2362. I see an entry of meat to Mrs. Wrigley?—She gets ten pounds of meat every week as rations, and I insert it on Saturdays.

2363. Is the quality of the meat supplied to the matron the same as that supplied to the asylum generally?—I am not aware; I rather suppose she gets it from the same butcher.

2364. Is it paid for at the same rate?—Precisely.

2365. Do you exercise any superintendence whatever over the keepers, nurses, and servants in the establishment?—I do not.

2366. Is the comparative statement, appended to the Seventh Report of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums, of the expenditure in the Richmond Asylum, for the years ending 31st March, 1854, and the 31st March, 1855, I find that the patients' provisions in the former year cost £3,997, and in the succeeding year, £3,558; how do you explain that difference?—That is very easily explained, for the new asylum was not opened till 1854.

2367. I observe by the Seventh Report of the Inspectors of Asylums, that patients were admitted into the new asylum in the beginning of 1853?—I find, on reference to one of my books, that it was opened on the 2nd of November, 1854, and that patients were transferred on that day.

2368. Were not many of the patients received into the new asylum transferred from the old?—Yes.

2369. It appears, however, by the same return, that the average number of patients, in 1851, in the Richmond Institution, was 426, and in 1855, 440—that does not show any great difference in the number of inmates?—I cannot explain it.

2370. I observe in the statement that the expenditure for coals is given as £726 for the year ending March, 1855; whereas nothing is returned for the previous years for the same article—can you account for that?—I cannot.

2371. Were you storekeeper in the year 1854?—I was.

2372. By whom are those tables made out that are appended to the Seventh Report?—They are made out by Mr. Nunn, the accountant.

2373. Has any year passed, since you were appointed storekeeper, without coals being received for the establishment?—No, we always receive coals regularly.

2374. I observe in the same return that the patients' clothing, in 1854, amounted to £316; and in 1855, when the average number of patients was only twenty additional, it reached £523—can you explain that?—I cannot.

2375. Was not the new asylum, when given up to the Governors, furnished by the Board of Works?—A great quantity of goods were sent there from the Richmond Asylum to it—coals, and blankets of various kinds. I think it was entirely supplied with those things from the old asylum.

2376. It is also stated that the expenditure for soap and candles, &c., in 1854, was £107, and in 1855, £184—can you explain that difference?—I should say the probability is, that gas is more expensive.

2377. Is gas included in that item?—I cannot say.

2378. Can you state when gas was first introduced into the asylum?—I cannot.

2379. Was it introduced before 1854?—I think it was about the period of the opening of the new asylum.

2380. Has the attention of the Governors ever been arrested by this increased expenditure in the institution?—I cannot answer that question. I have no immediate communication with the Governors.

2381. Do you know or have you heard of any inquiries being instituted by them or other parties on charges of peaculation by any of the officers or servants, and if so, at what time?—I heard there were three servants dismissed—the cook, and the head nurse, and the barber, the deputy cook, for peaculation.

2382. Do you know by whom or by what means this peaculation was discovered?—I cannot say indeed how it was.

2383. It appears from the minutes of the Board of Governors, that at an investigation that took place on that occasion, it was found the head nurse had been in the habit of giving beer to one of the nurses, in order that she might remain silent on the subject of the frauds that were perpetrated—has any alteration been made in the arrangements relative to beer in consequence of that occurrence?—Yes; Miss Shannon at present gives out the beer, and from lists made out by me every day, for all the departments.

2384. Have any steps been taken, in consequence of the disclosures which then took place, to check the issue of stores and prevent future peaculation?—Yes, every precaution has been used, and lists are made out.

2385. Is the practice the same as before?—I should say it is.

2386. Had the frauds perpetrated by the barber and deputy-cook, who was also breadman, reference to bread, or to what articles?—I heard something of its being meat that he took.

2387. For what period are the contracts generally taken?—For twelve months; but lately the contracts for bread and meat were for three months, from the 1st of October to the 1st of January. The meat and bread were not approved of, and the Board altered the contract.

2388. How are the contractors selected?—Tenders are advertised for, and the applications decided upon by the Board.

2389. There is a contract for male clothing?—There is.

2390. Is there a contract for female clothing?—Not that I know of.

2391. Is there any contract for the supply of counterpanes or sheeting?—None.

2392. How are those articles procured?—They are purchased by the matron, I believe.

2393. Are they ever brought into your store?—They are only brought into my store in the way that I have already described.

2394. I observe that, in the disbursements of the asylum for the month ending 24th October, 1855, there is a sum of £9 paid to the manager for forage—what is the explanation of that?—That is thirty days' forage for the horses of the establishment, at two shillings a-day.

2395. Do you know how that horse is employed?—He brought the vegetables to the market, when we sold vegetables, and he is the farm-horse.

2396. I observe also £1 18s. 4d. paid to the manager for medical diet?—That is the disbursement for eggs, lemons, and a variety of little things of that sort.

DUBLIN, 8th NOVEMBER, 1856.

THE RICHMOND DISTRICT ASYLUM—(CONTINUED).

Joshua Nares, Esq., sworn and examined.

Joshua Nares, Esq.,

2397. What appointment do you hold in connexion with the Richmond Lunatic Asylum?—Accountant and Secretary to the Board of Governors.

Secretary and Accountant;

2398. Do you keep the minutes of the proceedings?—Yes.

2399. You therefore attend the Board on each occasion?—Yes.

2400. How long have you held that office?—Since June, 1853.

2401. Were any instructions given to you, either verbally or in writing, as to the duties you would have to perform, when your appointment took place?—No, I did not receive any particular instructions.

His duties.

2402. Was your predecessor also accountant and secretary to the Board?—No, he was not. The minutes, before I was appointed secretary to the Board, were taken by one of the Governors. The late Mr. Peile generally took them; but previous to that there had been a secretary to the institution, and on his death the vacancy was not filled up.

2403. Are you aware when the office of accountant and secretary was first created?—I could not mention the exact date. There were an accountant and secretary; two individuals filled those offices before the asylum became a district asylum. From the time, I should think, of its first establishment, I am the first person who filled both offices. One gentleman who held the office of secretary was Mr. Wannight, and Mr. Hendrick, I think, was the accountant.

2404. But at the actual time of your appointment there was no secretary?—No. On the death of Mr. Wannight, the Governors recommended to the Lord Lieutenant not to fill up the vacancy, and one of them kept the minutes of the Board, as I have stated, until my appointment. The present Governors of the asylum found it very inconvenient, and they appointed me to the office.

2405. What duties do you discharge as secretary?—I attend the meetings of the Board, take down the minutes in a rough minute-book, and copy them out in the fair minute-book; and any communications from the Board I write, but they are signed by the manager.

2406. You are conversant, therefore, with the mode in which the business of the Board is conducted?—Yes.

2407. With regard to the manner of entering into contracts, would you state the course of proceeding?—About the time that it is necessary to enter into a new contract, a month or so before, the matter is mentioned to the Board, and they direct advertisements to be inserted in the three morning papers, inviting tenders from different parties. Those parties call to the asylum, and they get printed forms, which they fill up, and those are laid before the Board at their next meeting, and the Board decide for whatever they conceive would be the most advantageous to the institution.

Contracts.

2408. Are the contracts entered into half-yearly or yearly?—Yearly, up to October last, when the contracts for bread and meat were taken only for three months; but all the other contracts for a year, from the 1st of October to the 30th September following.

Articles supplied by.

2409. Can you enumerate the articles that are supplied by contract?—I have a list of them here. Meat, bread, beer, oatmeal, lard, butter, new milk and buttermilk, white soap, yellow soap, soda, lamp oil, straw, blankets, male servants' clothing, shoes for male servants and female servants, and male and female patients; sweeping-brushes, hand-brushes, and whitewashing brushes; tin ware, iron round pots, quart porringers, pint porringers, covered tea-tins and chambers; salt, groceries, and, I should also mention, coals and gas by contract.

Articles not so supplied.

2410. Now state the articles that are purchased by the Board of Governors, and are not supplied by contract?—Different articles of furniture are bought, but not by contract. Tobacco and snuff, stationery and printing—there is no regular contract for that, but there is an agreement as to the price; medicines and wine are not got by contract; porter goes along with beer, and there is no contract for them. The porter goes under the head of medicinal expenses for medical purposes.

Details as to both classes.

2411. What articles are included in the medical diet for which monthly payments are made?—Chickens, eggs, and lemons.

2412. You have stated there is a contract for blankets?—Yes.

2413. Is there any contract for the supply of counterpanes?—No.

2414. Are they included under the head of furniture?—They are included under the head of bedding.

2415. Is the bedding generally supplied by contract?—No, with the exception of blankets.

2416. Are the materials for the making up of female clothing purchased by contract?—No.

2417. Is linen for shirting, &c., purchased by contract?—No.

2418. How is the clothing for the male inmates provided?—It is not purchased by contract.

2419. How is the towelling for the use of the establishment supplied?—It is purchased by the matron, or applied for in the monthly application.

DEPOSE.

*The Richmond
District Asylum.
Joshua Nunn, Esq.*

2430. How is the material used by the weavers in the looms supplied?—Not by contract.
2431. Can you state why those several articles that you have referred to are not supplied by contract?—Not from my own knowledge; but I understood it to be, that formerly it was considered more advisable by the Board that the master should purchase those different articles, as they would be got at more advantageous prices than by contract.

2432. We have been given to understand that the male clothing is sent in as ordered to the storekeeper—are we to understand that that is not furnished by a contractor, but by a person with whom a special arrangement for its supply is made?—The person that a special arrangement is made with, but he furnishes it at the same price.

2433. Are the seeds required for the garden provided by contract?—No.

2434. Are the garden implements provided by contract?—No.

2435. Is any contract entered into for the maintenance of the building?—No; there was a contract for keeping the roof of the building in repair, but that expired a short time ago, and the Governors thought it better not to enter into a fresh contract.

2436. Is there any contract for painting or plumbing?—No.

Estimates.

2437. Do you prepare the annual estimates for the supplies that will probably be required?—They are prepared quarterly. One of the forms that I now produce is sent in every quarter to the Privy Council Office. The one I produce is the last that was furnished.

2438. Are those estimates prepared by you?—Yes.

2439. When the estimate is approved and returned to the Governors, who issues orders for the supplies to the contractors?—They are ordered by the manager.

2440. By a written order?—A printed form.

2441. Is any notification of these orders or estimates given to the storekeeper?—In most instances he fills the order himself, and it is signed by the manager.

2442. In the case of articles which are not supplied by contract, what is the course of proceeding—does the storekeeper receive any notice of those supplies being ordered to come in?—Sometimes he does, and at other times perhaps not. If they come within his immediate department, he does.

2443. Are all the supplies which are ordered by the manager brought in to the storekeeper and put in his charge?—No, they are not. I think there is not a proper system of store-keeping; it might be very much improved. All the provisions are brought in to the storekeeper, and different articles of clothing; and then the tin-ware and brushes are kept in another part.

2444. Where are they kept?—In a store near the manager's apartment.

2445. Where are the shoes kept?—The shoes are kept in a place off the hall, near the entrance door.

2446. When bedding is ordered which is not supplied by contract, where is that stored?—I believe it is sometimes stored in the storekeeper's lower store, down near his office, but it is very frequently put into immediate use. I do not know much about those things.

2447. In what respect do you consider the arrangements for storing operate defectively?—I do not think there is a sufficient store, in the first instance; in the next instance, I do not think things come into the store as regularly as they should, and are entered, and then regularly issued.

2448. If supplies are brought into the house, and go into use without passing through the storekeeper's hands, how can he keep a record of the supplies and the consumption?—He cannot do so, and that is just what I think to be one of the deficiencies.

Went of clothes.

2449. In point of fact, are there sufficient securities against misapplication or peculation?—I dare say there are—I could not say positively; but, as far as I know myself, I do not think there is any misapplication. I do not know exactly that there are sufficient securities against it.

2450. Is it the fact that there has been peculation?—Yes.

2451. Have any alterations been made in the system pursued in consequence of the discovery of peculation?—No, there have been no alterations made in the system. The parties found guilty of the peculation have been dismissed.

2452. Are the medicines ordered by the apothecary, or do the orders for them come through the manager?—They are ordered by the apothecary himself.

2453. Then the apothecary orders the medicines, stores them, and dispenses them?—Yes.

2454. What was the nature and extent of the peculation which occurred and to which you refer?—It was with regard to meat and bread; I cannot exactly say how much was taken.

2455. In what department did it occur?—In the kitchen department.

2456. How did it come to the knowledge of the Board?—The manager got information of it, and he brought the matter before the Board, as well as I recollect. I should also state that beer was one of the articles.

2457. What steps were taken in consequence?—The matter was first investigated by the Inspectors; they reported to the Board, and there was an investigation held by the Board.

2458. Was it investigated by the Inspectors before it was brought to the notice of the Board?—If I recollect right, it was reported to the Board first, then the Inspectors investigated and reported to the Board; and the Board then held a further investigation themselves.

2459. At what conclusion did the Inspectors arrive in their report?—They arrived at the conclusion that there were three parties guilty.

2460. You stated the matter was re-investigated by the Board—was that merely that they might have before them the same evidence on which the Inspectors arrived at that result?—Yes, and that they might make some further inquiry into the matter.

2451. Did the Board arrive at the same conclusion as the Inspectors?—Yes.

2452. Were the parties dismissed?—They were.

2453. All of them?—There were three dismissed. There was another, I think, that was considered to be implicated in the matter, but on account of the straightforward manner in which she gave her testimony, and from other circumstances, the Board did not think she was so guilty as the others, and they retained her—that is the kitchen-maid.

2454. Has the case of peccolium to which you refer been the only one that has taken place within your knowledge?—Yes, I think it is; it is the only one I can call to recollection at present.

2455. With regard to the wine and spirits which may be used in the establishment, you state they are not supplied by contract, but are ordered by the manager?—The wine is ordered by the apothecary. In the first instance the medical officers order wine for whatever patients they think require it, and then the apothecary orders it. Any supplies are ordered by the manager.

2456. What means are taken to check the consumption of the several articles which are brought into the house?—They are checked by the clerk or storekeeper.

2457. What check can he have upon articles which are never brought into the store or issued by him?—He can have no check upon these, I should say.

2458. By what means can the Board check the accuracy of the consumption of those articles?—I do not know that the Board have any means of checking it. The consumption is certified by the clerk and storekeeper for some articles, and by the manager for others.

2459. Are there any books kept which contain a daily entry of the consumption of those articles which are ordered by the manager?—He keeps some small book himself, in which he enters some things; I am not aware whether he enters all of them.

2460. Is that book one that would show the daily consumption of each article?—No, it is a small book.

2461. Is that ever submitted to the Board?—No, it is not.

2462. Is it usual to submit all the tenders for contracts to the Privy Council?—Yes.

2463. Is it in accordance with any order of the Council that is done?—Yes, I think it is. It has always been the practice since I was connected with the institution; it has been the practice for the last eleven years.

2464. Am I to understand that even in such a matter as the whitewashing of the house, it is the practice to lay the tenders for it before the Lord Lieutenant in Council for approval?—Yes, it is always done—the tenders of every class.

2465. Then, in point of fact, the contracts are always submitted to the Privy Council, distinct from the quarterly estimates?—Yes.

2466. As to the articles which are not supplied by contract, is any such communication made to the Privy Council?—No.

2467. With regard to the vegetables and the crops which are grown upon the farm, who makes an entry of the supplies daily furnished to the house?—The clerk and storekeeper, I should think. There is a small book I keep, a copy of which is furnished every month to the Audit Office, in which there is an entry of the vegetables sold.

2468. Are any sold now?—Not at present. All that can be grown are consumed in the house. The book has an account of vegetables that could not be consumed in the house, and were sold in the market for the benefit of the establishment.

2469. Is there any debtor and creditor account kept of the garden?—There was an account of that kind kept, but I do not think latterly it has been kept.

2470. The book now produced would only show the quantity of produce that might have been sold at any time?—Yes.

2471. Are there any books kept which would enable the Governors to see what is the annual expenditure upon the garden, and the annual receipts therefrom?—There is no book kept, but we have an account made out every year. I produce a copy of last year's account. [Some is produced.]

2472. By whom is this account made out?—By the clerk and storekeeper.

2473. In this account I see the asylum is debited with the articles sold to it?—Yes.

2474. And on the other side credited by the amount of the expense of the farm?—Yes.

2475. How does the clerk and storekeeper know that this statement of the month's expense is correct?—I supplied him with these particulars, taken from the month's expenditure-book.

2476. Who regulates the disbursements made for the farm, which are entered in the month's expenditure-book?—That expenditure is controlled by the manager entirely.

2477. You merely enter what the manager states to you as being expended?—That is all.

2479. When vegetables were sold, to whom was the sale entrusted?—The vegetables were sent down to the vegetable market, and the gate-porter went down in the morning and sold them.

2480. What vouchers of sale did he produce?—He brought back some dockets for sales, which he gave to the manager.

2481. Is it the regular practice of the storekeeper or other officer, by personal inspection and inquiries in the several wards, to see that the provisions are properly issued and distributed?—Not of the storekeeper.

Advances from the Consolidated Fund.

2482. What officer discharges that duty?—That is looked after by the manager and matron.

2483. As I understand, an application is made each quarter for an advance from the Consolidated Fund?—Yes.

2484. What is the course of proceeding in reference to that money?—One of the forms which I showed you is filled up. On the tenth of each month proceeding each quarter an application is made to the Under-Secretary for the probable amount that will be required for the expenses of the current quarter. Then, as soon as possible after the close of the quarter, an account, similar to that which I now produce, is made out of the expenditures, and also of the anticipated expense for the succeeding quarter. This is sent to the Council Office. The application is laid before the Council, and they make an order for the money. We get a notification of that order, and in some time we get a letter from the Paymaster of Civil Service, stating the amount is lodged in the Bank of Ireland to the credit of the Governors.

2485. By whom are the checks upon the account in the Bank of Ireland signed?—By three of the Governors.

2486. Are they countersigned by any officer?—No.

2487. In the account of monthly disbursements I see a sum down to yourself?—That is for the payment of sums under £5; no drafts are drawn for them, but there is a general draft drawn in my name, and those small sums are paid in cash.

2488. Are the accounts which you keep in conformity with those laid down in the rules and regulations?—I believe they are.

2489. Are the accounts of the asylum kept on the system of double entry that was formerly approved by the Inspector-General?—No.

2490. In what manner are they now kept?—Kept in the monthly expenditure-book you see before you; that is the principal book.

2491. Do you consider that enables you, with equal clearness and accuracy, to make out the half-yearly charges against the several counties?—I do, and I think it is the most expeditious and accurate way.

2492. Are the accounts of the asylum audited by the Board of Audit?—They are.

2493. Was that return which appears in the Appendix to the Seventh Report of the Inspectors of Asylums prepared by you?—Yes, I should think it was.

2494. That is the return of the expenditures for the years ending 31st March, 1854 and 1855 respectively?—Yes.

2495. I believe that return shows the number of inmates in the former year was 423, and in the latter year 440?—Yes, it does—the average number.

2496. I believe the expenditure for patients' provisions in the year 1854 is there stated at £2,997?—Yes.

2497. And in 1855 at £3,556?—Yes.

2498. How can you account for that increase, considering there was only a difference of twenty in the average number of patients?—As well as I can account for it now, from recollection, it must be from the increased cost of provisions.

2499. Will the same explanation apply to the increase in groceries, from £500 in the former year to £533 in the succeeding year?—I should think it will.

2500. Will it also apply to the increase in the cost of patients' clothing, from £316 in the former year to £343 in the latter year?—I do not know that the price of those articles would be so much affected in those years; but it is the only way I can account for it at present.

2501. Am I to understand that the price of the provisions, the groceries, and of the clothing, increased so much in the year 1855, as compared with 1854, as to be a satisfactory explanation of the increased expenditure?—I cannot exactly say just at present. It may be that there were more of those articles of clothing required, on account of the number of patients coming into the house.

2502. Are you enabled to state, from any documents in your possession, that there was an increase in the articles required to sustain the explanation you have now suggested?—No, I am not.

2503. Under what heading would the gas be included in that statement of expenditure?—Under the heading of "soap and candles."

2504. Under what heading would beer and porter be included?—The beer would be under the head of "provisions," and the porter under the head of "medical expenses."

2505. How do you account for there being no entry in the former of those years for coals?—The coals that were ordered for that year were not paid for until the succeeding year. There was a strike amongst the colliers in that year, and also a great rise in the price of the carriage of coals; and instead of the supply being sent within a few months, as is generally the case, the contractor made an application to the Board, and he was allowed to supply them from time to time, always keeping a sufficient quantity in the house. In that way it ran on till the next year, and the payment was not made till then.

2506. Then, in point of fact, the house put down for coals in 1855 may be considered as representing an expenditure under that head for two years?—Yes.

2507. Can you state what was the actual expenditure in the Richmond Asylum within the last year?—To the 31st of March last it was £12,072 1s. 10d. At the commencement of the year in April, 1855, the house was not full. The number has been gradually increasing up to a short time back.

2508. Can you state what proportions of the sum were charged against the counties comprised in the district?—I have the returns here—one for seven months from the 24th May to the 24th December, 1855, and the other for five months, from the 24th December,

The charges against

1855, to the 26th May, 1856. These are the last two. There was £7,635 10s. 7d. against the city of Dublin; there was £2,138 6s. 9d. against the county Dublin; £210 1s. 2d. was chargeable against the county of Meath; the county of Wicklow was charged the sum of £1,282 7s. 10d.; the county of Louth £751 8s. 7d.; and the county of the town of Drogheda, £113 9s.

2500. How are the average numbers of patients calculated in those returns—are they daily or weekly averages?—That is a daily average in the return in the Seventh Report of Inspectors of the Lunatic Asylums. The last return sent into the Corporation was up to the 26th May last.

2510. Is the charge against a county made for the number of days each individual chargeable on the county is in the asylum?—Not for each individual. There is an average taken of the entire number of patients in the institution from each county for the five and the seven months.

2511. You know how many there were from each county each day?—Yes, the morning statement-book gives that; we work out the account from that.

2512. Can you state what was the consumption of beer last year?—I could give you the number of barrels of beer, but not now. During a portion of the year the porter was got in pork bottles; latterly it has been got by the cask.

2513. Am I to understand that the porter was in charge of the apothecary?—No, it is in charge of the clerk and storekeeper, and is given out, I think, by the head-nurse. The porter is included under the head of "medical diet." All those are included in the monthly expenditure-book, under the head of "medical expenses."

2514. What explanation can you give of the increase in the expenditure for wine from £77 10s. in 1854, to £87 7s. in 1855, the increase in the average of inmates being only twenty?—The increase in the number of inmates accounts for it in a certain degree; as to the rest I cannot say, unless more was ordered by the medical officers.

2515. You stated there were defects in the manner in which the supplies were issued, and the checks upon the consumption regulated—have you any thing to suggest with a view to the improvement of the system?—I cannot say that I have given very much attention to it, as it was not under my own immediate department; but I think there ought to be better stores provided and properly fitted up, so as to receive the different articles each in their respective places; and then those articles, according as they come into store, ought to be properly entered in a book. The old articles—old rags and tins—after accumulating for some time, are sold, and so much is obtained for them, which goes to the credit of the institution. It would be more satisfactory if there were regular accounts kept.

2516. Does this return in the Seventh Report, to which you have referred, contain the gross expenditure, or is it the net expenditure, after taking credit for any receipts on account of vegetables or otherwise?—Yes, credit is given for them, as appears in the account I have shown you.

2517. In the quarterly statement you have produced, I observe an item of £46 received for patients—is that for paying patients?—Yes, paid by the friends of the patients.

2518. For how many patients was that sum received?—I could not answer at the moment.

2520. How was that bequest applied?—That was applied more particularly to the building of a new lodge at the entrance-gate; but it was lodged in bank to the credit of the general fund by Surgeon Adams, who was the executor.

2521. What is the total cost of the lodge which was erected?—£134.

2522. Was the difference defrayed out of the current expenditure of the asylum, or was there an order in Council?—There was an order in Council for it; but, by some error, that order in Council was made in favour of the Board of Works.

2523. And the difference in the cost was charged to annual maintenance?—The difference in the cost will be charged for repairs and alterations from the general fund.

2524. The lodge to which you refer is the lodge of the old asylum?—Yes, the lodge of the old asylum.

2525. The meetings of the Governors are held once a fortnight?—Generally speaking; sometimes there may be an adjournment for three weeks.

2526. Is there any visiting committee appointed by the Board of Governors to visit the institution?—No.

2527. Do the Governors themselves, on the day of meeting, or on any other, make an inspection of the asylum?—No, they do not.

2528. Do the Governors inspect the stores or provisions?—They inspect the provisions if there are complaints made of them.

2529. Do they inspect them generally?—No, it is not the general practice.

2530. Do the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums attend regularly at the meetings of the Board of Governors?—Yes, very regularly; sometimes they may be absent, but generally they are present.

2531. Do they take part in the proceedings by voting?—Yes; they were appointed three or four years ago.

2532. Do they undertake, on those occasions, to audit the monthly accounts, or engage in the minute investigation of matters at the Board?—Yes, they do.

Report and observation books.
2533. Is it the practice of the Board to refer all complaints for their report?—Not always; sometimes they do.
2534. Is there any book kept in the asylum in which the Inspectors enter their visits or make any observations for the consideration of the Board of Governors?—No.
2535. Is there any book kept in which the observations of any of the officers of the institution are entered for submission to the Board of Governors?—The medical officers have a report-book, in which they report occasionally. The manager has a report-book, in which he reports at every meeting of the Board; and the clerk and storekeeper has a report-book, in which he reports on the quality of the provisions.
2536. Are those reports submitted to the Board?—Yes.
- No Memorandum Book.
2537. Is there a book called a "Memorandum Book" required by the regulations, in which an entry should be made of the matters submitted for consideration, as well as of the communications from the manager to the Board, in order that such communications may remain on record, with the decision of the Board thereon, to be noted in the margin by the chairman?—No.
- Admission and discharge of patients.
2538. The admissions that come before the Board are the admissions of applicants?—Yes.
2539. Dangerous lunatics and others forwarded by the Lord Lieutenant are admitted without being brought before the Board?—Yes; they are admitted on the warrant of the Lord Lieutenant; but it is mentioned on every board day by the manager, so you will see by the minutes, what patients of that description have been admitted since the previous Board.
2540. The other applications are admitted by the Board?—Yes.
- Paying patients.
2541. Is there a report made to the Board of the patients discharged by the medical officers and manager?—The number of discharges are entered on the minutes of each meeting; but there is no detail, merely the numbers are given.
2542. Is there no order made confirming the propriety of these discharges?—No.
2543. So that the discharges rest, in fact, with the medical officers and manager?—Yes.
2544. With respect to patients who are admitted as paying patients, in case the annual payment is not regularly made, what course is pursued by the Board with respect to them?—There has never been anything done with regard to that. I may mention there is great irregularity with respect to payments for patients.
2545. Are the payments weekly, monthly, or quarterly?—Generally quarterly.
2546. Are they ever made in advance?—Sometimes; but that was considered inadvisable, as in case of the death of a patient, so much would have to be refunded. There is merely a promise on the part of the friends of a patient that they will pay so much per annum for his support.
2547. There is no written document?—No; it is sometimes written on the admission paper that they engage to pay so much; perhaps in all cases that may be done; I know it is in some; but I cannot say whether it is done in all.
2548. Are the sums received for paying patients deducted from the gross expenditure before that is distributed among the counties?—Yes.
2549. Does it frequently occur that payments, after having been made for a short period, cease?—Yes.
2550. Is that more frequently the case than the contrary?—No; I do not know that it is.
- Mrs. Catherine Whisley.
The Matron: her duties.
- Mrs. Catherine Whisley sworn and examined.
2551. What situation do you occupy in the Richmond Lunatic Asylum?—Matron.
2552. How long is it since you were appointed to that office?—It is very near twenty-six years—over twenty-five years.
2553. Are you matron of the whole institution?—Yes.
2554. The old and new asylums and the infirmary?—Yes.
2555. What duties do you discharge in that capacity?—I have to attend to all the wants of the establishment, that is, in the way of clothing, bedding, and furniture, and all things except food, and that I look after too.
2556. Are the female servants particularly under your charge?—Those in the old house, not in the new, and in the infirmary.
2557. Under whom are the servants and nurses in the new house?—Miss Blandell, the assistant matron.
2558. How frequently do you visit all the wards of the old house?—Generally every day. I seldom miss a day except I am kept very busy. I generally do so twice a day.
2559. How frequently do you visit the wards of the new house?—Not very often. The business increased so much of late that I could not get to attend it.
2560. How frequently do you visit the infirmaries?—Once a fortnight, perhaps, or, may be, less than that.
2561. Is the duty of superintending the servants and inspecting the wards in the new asylum left to the assistant matron?—Yes.
2562. To whom is it left in the infirmary?—Mrs. Black, the matron there; at the same time I give them every aid that they require. They have only to see that the servants attend to their business.
2563. Is it your duty to see each patient on those occasions?—I may, and I may not; if I have some other business pressing, I may forget to do so.
2564. At what hour of the day does your inspection generally take place?—No particular hour; 11 o'clock is the right hour, if I can get to go; very often business prevents me, and the head nurse goes round for me and sees that the place is clean. She assists me in cleaning the place, and in part of the other business.

2565. Do you visit the wards of the old asylum at night?—I do not, since the heavy business came on. I go up if there is any one sick, no matter at what hour.

2566. Is there any person who visits them at night?—The night nurse.

2567. Is there but one night nurse for the female wards?—Yes; she has nothing else to do.

2568. What are her instructions?—To go round and visit the rooms, and see that there is no patient doing wrong, or if there is any sick to attend to her, give the drinks or whatever medicines the physician may have ordered.

2569. Is she bound to make a daily report?—She has a book that the physicians see every day.

2570. Does the night nurse make a report of any occurrence during the night?—No; but she comes down at 10 o'clock to say what state the divisions are in, and then she writes in her book, which the physicians see every morning.

2571. Does she remain during the night?—Yes.

2572. Does she report in the morning the condition the wards were in during the night?—No; unless there was any one unwell.

2573. Would she make any record of a patient being disorderly?—No; the nurse of the division tells that.

2574. I mean at night?—No; she does not.

2575. Are there any means of checking the performance of those duties?—Except that I go occasionally to see if she is on duty. I can hear from my own apartment the door opening, and if I did not hear noise, I would go.

2576. That has reference to the early part of the night?—Up to 12 o'clock.

2577. Is there any tell-tale clock, or any mechanical means of registering her visits to the wards?—No, except by asking the nurse was she there at such an hour.

2578. What are her instructions as to looking into the cells of dirty patients at that time?—I do not think she has got any instructions. If there is a patient making a noise, she goes in and sees, if it be a suicide case, afraid of any mischief being done.

2579. Has she instructions to look into the cells to see the condition of the patients?—Yes; if she suspects anything, she listens at the door, and if there is any noise she opens the door and goes in.

2580. Do you make yourself familiar with the several cases of the female patients?—Yes.

2581. Do you ever hold communications with the medical attendant respecting those cases?—If any are unwell I go with him to point them out.

2582. Do you inform yourself from day to day, sufficiently, of the condition of each patient, so as to be enabled to hold these communications with the physician?—No; I do not go round with the physician every day.

2583. Are you sufficiently acquainted with the condition of the several patients to be enabled to afford the physician full information respecting them?—The physician generally comes into the office, and if he mention the name of a patient, I know that patient; and he states if he wishes to let any of them out on leave, or put to work, or any thing done.

2584. What steps are taken to afford amusements and occupation to the patients?—They have a dance every Monday evening, and generally as many as we can allow come to it; then they go to school, and have fancy work, and there are hooks for any that wish them. In summer we have a swing for them in front of the garden, and they walk about in the garden.

2585. In the several day-rooms and wards are there any books kept, or means of affording amusement to the patients provided?—They get them generally from the school; or the clergymen take books round in their pockets, and give them to the patients.

2586. What employment have the patients generally?—They have to wash for 700 people, they have to make all their own clothing and bedding; I purchase all the materials for their clothing and bedding, and give it out to be made to them. We mark the articles giving them out, and take in returns.

2587. When you state you purchase all the materials for the clothing, do you mean that you or the manager makes the purchase?—I go to the warehouse and purchase, and send them home, and the invoice goes down to the clerk. He enters it in a book, then it comes up and goes to the paymaster, Mr. Nunn—the secretary he is called now.

2588. When those supplies are brought to the clerk and storekeeper, are we to understand that he only issues them on requisition from you?—When the cart comes with clothing or bedding the invoice goes down to him with the goods, and he checks over the goods, and sees that they are all right according to the invoice. He leaves them in the store till I require them out. He and I have a key for the store.

2589. In any entry made by the storekeeper or by yourself of the articles taken out of the store?—No, except very lately I got the nurses books. The storekeeper used to do it, and he has refused doing it. He used to come into the store with me, and I would give them out, and he would enter each down.

2590. When did he refuse to do so?—I cannot tell exactly the time; I suppose it is nine months and better.

2591. Was the refusal of the storekeeper to keep the books you refer to ever brought under the notice of the Governors or the Inspectors?—It was; I told it. I cannot exactly say the time.

2592. What steps were taken in consequence?—Dr. Nugent came there, and I told him on one board day that Fitzsimons refused to give out the female clothing. He said he would be with me some day in the week. He came, and went down and spoke to the clerk and storekeeper. At the time the clerk was not very well. He said, was he to be storekeeper or clerk, or storekeeper and clerk; Dr. Nugent answered, "If you are storekeeper, you cease to be clerk; and if you are clerk, you cease to be storekeeper." He said he could not be running from his desk to give out the clothing; Dr. Nugent said, "Maybe Mrs. Wrigley will do it for you." I said I might give out the things, but that I could not keep the books.

2593. Was it to one of the Inspectors and not to the Board you made the complaint?—Yes.

2594. And the result has been that the storekeeper pursued the course he laid down for himself, notwithstanding Dr. Nugent's remonstrance?—Yes, he gives out the male clothing, but not the female.

Books kept by Nurses.

2595. No books are now kept in the store as to the issue of those articles?—No, except very lately. I began to feel that it was wrong, and I got each of the nurses a book in which to put down every article they got from me themselves. [The witness here exhibited a number of those books.]

2596. I observe that those books you have shown have been recently introduced?—Not more than three months.

2597. Can you state accurately the day upon which you began this system of requiring the nurses to keep those books?—Some time in August. We were thinking of it for a good while. Before they got the books, they used to put the articles down on little dockets. Some of the books were given out in August, and some in September or October.

Requisitions to Storekeeper.

2598. Were you in the habit previous to nine months ago, of sending written requisitions to the storekeeper for such stores as you required?—No.

2599. You took out of the store what you wanted?—Yes; whatever I could spare time to cut out. My time is occupied from morning till night.

Making up clothing, giving out materials,
&c.

2600. What arrangement is there for the making up of those articles?—They are given out to the nurses to be made, and they get the patients to do them, and I give thread, needles, and materials.

2601. Do you mark in any book the number of articles you give to be made up in each ward?—I put them on a docket. I tear a bit of paper, and write on it, so much to one division and so much to another.

2602. To whom is that docket given?—I keep it myself.

2603. Do you give any docket to the ward nurses for the quantity of articles you have given to be made up?—No; I count them out myself.

2604. Do you see that when they are returned you get back the quantity of articles you give?—Every week I take them in, unless that something required to be done, which would occupy a longer time.

2605. Are the articles you speak of articles of female wearing apparel?—Men's shirts, female clothing, sheets, cases, quilts, and we make all our own beds.

Invoice account kept by Storekeeper; but not of materials
given out.

2606. Am I to understand that the storekeeper refused to keep the account of the materials which was brought in and afterwards issued to you for the manufacture of clothing?—He does take an account of the articles going in, and he gets the invoice.

2607. He takes no account of the quantity of the material which you afterwards take out for the purpose of having made up?—He did so; but he does not now.

2608. When the articles are made up in the several wards, how are they disposed of?—Brought into the store.

2609. Is that store in your charge or Mr. Fitzsimons'?—In both. We both can get the key—it is in the office.

2610. Is there any record in any book kept by you or Mr. Fitzsimons of the quantity of articles put into that store so made up?—No; not since he ceased to do so at the time I mention.

2611. Am I to understand the storekeeper formerly kept the account of those articles so brought into the store?—Yes.

No check on made-up articles placed in store.

2612. Then at this moment there are no means of ascertaining what quantity of articles there are in store?—No; I have not taken an account of them.

2613. Do those books contain an account of the various articles that have been issued out of store to the nurses in the different wards?—Yes.

2614. In issuing those articles, do you keep any account of the issues you make?—Except in the little book; it is only of late I began.

Getting back old

2615. When issuing those articles do you require the old articles to be given up?—Yes.

2616. Do they keep a record of that?—Yes; that is the reason I gave them books, which they bring down with them.

2617. Am I to understand that up to three months ago there was no record kept of the articles issued to the nurses?—There was, on little dockets.

2618. I mean of the made-up articles going out of the store?—None, except on little dockets, several of which were lost.

Issue of clothing.

2619. Do you keep no book yourself containing entries of those issues?—I did not; but when I gave those books out, I began to put them down myself. It was not my business to do so.

2620. Have you been in the habit of issuing all the clothing since you were connected with this establishment?—I always went down to the storekeeper and took it out. I got it marked and cut out myself.

Cut clothing.

2621. Where are the cast clothes and condemned articles kept?—In the storeroom; and when they are gathered up we dispose of them. Old tin and old iron are all disposed of.

2622. With regard to the making up of bedding, is the same course pursued as with regard to the making up articles of wearing apparel?—Yes.

2623. Is the raw material procured and issued in the same manner?—Yes.
2624. And the articles, when made up, brought into store and issued in the same manner?—Yes, when required they are issued.
2625. Is there any record of the issuing of such articles as bed ticks?—No.
2626. Do you ever take stock of the articles in store?—No; but every article required is put down in the Want Book every month, and we purchase in as little as possible—morely what we want.
2627. Have inventories been made at any time of the articles, furniture, and bedding, or otherwise, in the house?—Yes; I produce those inventories. Each nurse holds one of those papers that are before you, and I hold another. While she has the things in charge she must be accountable to me for every article on that list; and coming on Christmas I go round to see that each nurse has all the articles. It is the same in the hospital and new asylum. I see that she has her own marks on them. The articles in every division have their proper marks. The head nurse goes round every Friday also, to see if any tins, plates, or spoons, or such things, are required. She also assists me in mending the clothes.
2628. Is the same course pursued in the male wards?—Just the same.
2629. Who has charge of the shoes purchased for the use of the inmates?—The hall porter.
2630. By whom are the shoes ordered from the contractor?—Mr. Wrigley orders every thing. Shoes; care and issue of.
2631. Are the shoes ever brought into the storekeeper's store?—Never.
2632. Why?—The storekeeper does not live in the place; he goes away at one or two o'clock, and there may be shoes wanted in the evening.
2633. Who keeps a record or entry of the quantity of shoes received by the hall porter?—I think it is the clerk and storekeeper. The hall porter has a book to put them down.
2634. When shoes are required for the patients, is any statement given by the hall porter of the quantity of shoes furnished to the wards?—When I see half a dozen of patients wanting shoes, I will speak to the nurses; they will show me that so many are wanting. I will go down to the hall porter and tell him to give out so many shoes to one division or another.
2635. Are those issues of shoes entered in any book?—Yes; and the name entered.
2636. Is that book checked by you?—By Mr. Fitzsimons. He checks it with the number of shoes coming in.
2637. What means do you take to ascertain that the shoes which are sent to the wards are used by the patients?—I see them on them.
2638. Supposing the shoes did not fit a patient, would they be returned?—They would be returned and another pair got. Each patient is fitted before the name is entered down. The nurse brings down the name, and it is entered.
2639. Then, as I understand, the hall porter gives the shoes to be fitted before entering down the name of the person that receives them?—Yes; or sometimes the patients are brought down to the hall to be fitted.
2640. By whom are the old shoes taken up?—By the hall porter. We do not give a Old shoes returned.
2641. I believe the washing for the whole institution is done at the old asylum?—Yes; and all the clothing, and bedding, and quilts, are made up there. The patients and I do the work. Washing; soap; &c.
2642. By whom are the supplies of soap for the use of the inmates issued?—There is so much comes in every week, and the cook cuts it up and sends it to each division—half a pound to each division for every servant in the house.
2643. Why is the issue made according to the number of servants. Is half a pound issued to each servant without reference to the number of inmates under that person's charge?—There is half a pound given to each division for the general washing of the patients, male and female, every Friday.
2644. Is the half pound given to the servants in the nature of an allowance to them?—It is given for the patients' use. There is one half pound given for the servant's clothes.
2645. According to your statement, each attendant is allowed half a pound for her own use and washing, and only the same quantity is allowed for a number of dirty patients that may be in a ward?—Yes; but she has her clothes to wash out of her own half pound.
2646. What is the number of patients in each ward?—One ward has fifty, and two wards have forty-one each.
2647. Half a pound of soap is the allowance in each of those wards to the patients?—Yes; a great number of those patients go to the laundry and wash their own little things, and wash themselves. Where the dirty cases are, we have the same complement. The same complement is given where there are twenty-three patients as where there are fifty; but the latter are clean patients.
2648. Is there any extra supply for the use of the patients on the days they get a bath?—No; on Fridays they use that, and they generally have some left for the remainder of the week; if not, the nurses give it.
2649. I do not observe in the return of articles in charge of the nurses, combs and brushes?—They are not down.
2650. Have they such articles?—Yes.
2651. Why are they not down?—They get them whenever they require them.
2652. Why are they not entered in the return?—I never did so—I do not know why they were left out.
2653. Have they ever been entered in the same returns?—Except in the case of the new asylum, I do not think you will get them entered. There are a great many private patients come into us, and they have brushes and combs.

Mrs. Catherine Wrigley.
 2654. Practically, is there any reason why, if combs and brushes are supplied, they should not appear upon those lists?—We supply only combs. It is only private patients who have friends to give them extras, that have brushes.
- Cooking and serving food.
Greens, medical diet, &c.
 2655. Do you superintend the cooking of the food?—I just go in and out. The head nurse goes down to see the tea made in the morning, and the scullabout.
 2656. Do you attend in the wards to see how it is served?—Yes, occasionally.
 2657. With regard to the tea which is made for the patients in the morning, by whom is that supply procured?—I take out the tea at night, and give it to the head nurse in the morning, and she takes it down to the kitchen.
 2658. From whom do you obtain the tea?—From the grocer.
 2659. Is the tea brought into store and issued to you by the storekeeper?—No; Mr. Wrigley keeps an account of it in his book.
 2660. Is the sugar used for the tea in like manner procured by Mr. Wrigley, and issued to you without passing through the storekeeper's hands?—No, not all the sugar. The sugar for the night cocoa comes from the storekeeper.
 2661. Can you give any reason why the sugar supplied for the tea should not come through the storekeeper's hands and the sugar for the cocoa should?—The cocoa has been given only within the last nine months; we used to give bread and milk at night.
 2662. By whom are the articles used for medical diet provided, such as chickens, eggs, &c.?—By me.
 2663. Is there any account kept?—Yes; Mr. Wrigley keeps an account, and has to make an affidavit as to it at the end of the year.
 2664. How are the tea and sugar, which are procured by Mr. Wrigley, and not passed through the storekeeper's hands, brought into account?—I cannot answer that question. Mr. Wrigley enters them in a book and sends the orders to the grocer.
 2665. Are tobacco and snuff used in the asylum?—A good deal.
 2666. By whom are they procured?—Mr. Wrigley sends the order for them, and I give round the snuff and tobacco to what females take it. Mr. Wrigley gives to the men.
 2667. Have you a separate store for these various articles?—No; they are kept in the office.
- Petty disbursements.
 2668. Is that the storekeeper's office?—No; Mr. Wrigley's office.
 2669. Do you chance to know by whom the seeds for the garden are procured?—I cannot tell; I think from Mr. Farrell, of Capel-street.
 2670. By whom are the petty disbursements of the house paid?—By Mr. Wrigley. He keeps a book and puts them down every month, and that goes before the Governors, such as lemons, oranges, or eggs.
 2671. The disbursements not paid by cheque, are they paid by Mr. Wrigley?—Mr. Wrigley gives the money out, and he is paid every month.
 2672. Is he allowed to hold any sums in hands for those petty disbursements?—No, it is always his own money.
- Supply of extras to new beds.
 2673. As regards this extra medical diet, chickens, eggs, and any extras of tea that may be allowed, how are they supplied to the new asylum?—From us. If there is a patient on evening tea, Miss Blandell sends down the book with the order of the physician for so much, and Mrs. Black does the same.
 2674. Does Miss Blandell give any receipt for those articles, or how do you ascertain that they reach the asylum and are used by the patients for whom they are ordered?—The physician puts down in his book whatever he may order, and I give the things to the nurse.
- Authority of the acting manager of the new Asylum.
 2675. In the new asylum has Mr. Beatty the same authority and position in reference to the assistant matron, attendants, and servants, that the manager has in the old asylum?—In reference to the servants he has.
 2676. Has he any authority over the general management of the new asylum and over the assistant matron there?—He has.
 2677. To what extent?—If he do not approve of a servant going out, he may prevent her.
 2678. Has he the same authority over the assistant matron in the new asylum that the manager would have over the assistant matron in the old asylum?—Very near.
 2679. Are you allowed by the Board to keep pigs and poultry?—Two pigs.
 2680. Where are those pigs kept?—Behind the stable. There are only a few hens; they are kept near the pigs.
- Matron's rations.
 2681. What rations are you allowed?—Ten pounds of meat in the week, 10½ lbs. of bread, 2 lbs. of butter, milk, and vegetables from a garden of our own, and there is a fruit garden.
 2682. Is the manager allowed rations?—No.
 2683. Do you receive any daily reports from the assistant matron at the new asylum as to the condition of that asylum?—I do not.
 2684. What arrangement or understanding is there as to the period at which she should make a report to you upon the state of the asylum, or the circumstances which she is bound to report?—She has a right to keep the asylum clean and in order. If I go there and see any thing wrong, I speak to her about it.
 2685. Does she make no report whatever as to the condition of the new asylum?—She writes for any thing she may want.
 2686. Has she the power to suspend any servant?—Yes, any female servant.
 2687. Do you know if Mr. Beatty makes any report to the manager, daily or weekly?—Except of any occurrence, he does not. If a patient goes out or comes in, or say thing in that way, he does.

2688. What security is there for the extras which may be ordered for the patients being given to them?—The physician goes round every day, and he will ask the patients have they got so and so, and if he finds they have not, the servant is to blame.

2689. Have you any reason to believe that the extras ordered are at times not administered?—No; I never knew any instance of it.

2690. Do you take any particular measures to see that the patients who are ordered extras receive them?—No; each nurse draws the wine from the apothecary's shop and gives it to them. She gets it every day for the number of patients she has on wine.

2691. A patient has no means of knowing that he or she has been ordered extra diet?—No.

2692. Is the porter issued by the apothecary?—No, by the head nurse. Our head nurse gives out porter and beer in the old asylum, and Miss Blundell gives it out in the new asylum.

2693. Does the porter and beer pass through the storekeeper's hands before it gets to the head nurse?—No.

2694. Is he furnished with a statement of the number of persons entitled to beer and porter?—There are small books in which the patients' names are down, so many on beer and so many on porter. Each nurse holds one of these.

2695. Are those furnished to the storekeeper?—No.

2696. What means has he of knowing what quantity of beer should be supplied for the use of the institution?—He has the number of those books taken down.

2698. In case a patient is ordered by the physician to get porter, or beer, or any extra, does the patient continue to receive that extra, or do you feel it your duty to report to the physician, from time to time, the necessity of considering whether it should be continued or not?—Whenever I see any females that the porter does not agree with, that it would make them too high, I tell the doctor, and he may stop it and order it again.

2699. Does he revise the list in order to ascertain who are the persons requiring nourishment or otherwise?—I cannot say; the physicians may look over the small books which the nurses have.

2700. Do you consider the nurses of the establishment are qualified for the discharge of their duties?—There are some getting very old; if there was any provision for them, they would be glad to leave.

2701. Do you think the wages given are adequate to secure proper attendants for lunatics?—I do; their food is very good, and their clothes are good.

Elizabeth Blundell sworn and examined.

2702. What is the appointment you hold in the Richmond Lunatic Asylum?—Assistant matron.

2703. I believe that your duties are entirely confined to the new asylum, and that you reside there?—Yes.

2704. Did you receive on your appointment as assistant matron at that new asylum, any particular instructions as to what your duties would be in reference to the establishment?—None, except merely what I heard in going through the other asylum.

2705. What duties, practically, do you perform in the new asylum?—I have charge of every thing—of the furniture and bedding, linen, and that sort of thing. I superintend the female servants, and I have also the kitchen department under me, I look after the cooking. I have to take in and give out articles of every kind that come in. I might also say I am assistant storekeeper as well as assistant matron.

2706. Are there any large supplies of stores?—No.

2707. Are they furnished as required from the old asylum?—Yes.

2708. Do you go round the wards each day to see that every thing is in order?—There have been some days that I did not go; sometimes, on Saturdays, my duties keep me so much employed in the other parts of the house, that I have not time to do so.

2709. Do you attend to see the food served up by the servants?—Yes. I always attend at dinner-time.

2710. With regard to patients who may be on extra diet, what precautions are taken to see that they receive and use those extras—wine, beer, and porter?—Beer I give out regularly, and I sometimes go up to the divisions to see it there; but I cannot always do so. I have nothing to do with the wine and porter.

2711. Supposing patients were on what is called medical diet—chickens, eggs, &c., would those things come under your inspection?—I would be obliged to send to Mrs. Wingley for extras of that sort.

2712. By whom are the wine and porter issued?—The porter is sent from the old asylum in a closed can, and, I believe, the hall porter gives it out, at least latterly; it used to be given out from the apothecary's shop.

2713. Is the wine issued in the same way?—The wine is given out from the apothecary's shop.

2715. Have the nurses any lists of the number of patients in their charge, who are - entitled to extras of porter and wine?—It is always put down in the doctor's books, and then I am obliged to know how much is required; because I have to send down dockets to the storekeeper every day for the provisions required, and to state the number on each diet.

- Reports.
2715. What is your position in the new asylum in reference to the apothecary who has the superintendence of it; do you make any reports to him?—I generally report any thing that I have to report to Mrs. and Mr. Wrigley. I was directed to apply to them.
2717. Then the representations you may wish to make in reference to the condition of the new asylum, as far as matters are in your charge, you make directly to the manager and matron?—Yes; I was so directed.
- Charge of stores.
2718. What description of stores are in your charge at the new asylum?—Merely the food; but I have charge of every thing in the different divisions.
2719. The stores to which you refer, are supplied from day to day?—Yes.
2720. Have you an inventory of the articles of furniture and bedding in the house?—Yes.
2721. Was that given to you when the house was opened?—I had to make the list out myself. [The witness here exhibited copies of the lists referred to.]
2722. Are these duplicates of the lists which the servants in the respective wards have?—Yes.
- Accounts.
2723. Do you keep any books or accounts?—Nothing but this, which I keep for my own satisfaction; it is merely a list of linen, bedding, and things of that kind, and states how they are distributed.
2724. It is an inventory according to the various divisions?—Yes. The other papers are lists of the articles in charge of the nurses in their respective divisions.
- Ward inspection.
2725. You state you go round the wards from time to time, to see that every thing is in order?—Yes.
2726. Do you examine as to the cleanliness of the apartments, as well as to the condition of the bedding and furniture?—I do.
2727. Are the apartments kept in order by the female servants or male servants?—By the female servants, assisted by the patients.
- Ventilation.
2728. You have had opportunities of judging whether the ventilation of the building is good or defective?—I do not think the building is well ventilated.
2729. What is the condition of the atmosphere generally in these rooms and galleries after the patients have left them in the mornings?—When the place is first opened, the atmosphere is very bad.
2730. Are there any points upon which your authority in the asylum at all clashes with that of the general superintendent, and apothecary who resides?—I never attempt to meddle with any one that is under his superintendence at all. I avoid clashing with them as much as possible.
2731. You consider yourself the deputy of Mrs. Wrigley in the establishment?—Yes.
2732. Is there any statement you would wish to make with reference to the asylum or your position there?—Nothing particular occurs to me at present.
- P. Beatty, Esq.
The apothecary—
the medicines.
- Patrick Beatty, Esq., further examined on oath.
2733. How are the medicines procured for the Richmond Asylum?—I get them from the druggist on my own responsibility. I keep a pass-book.
2734. Are they got in just as they are required?—Yes.
2735. On going over the Inspectors' Report, I find that in the Ballinasloe Asylum during the last two years, there has been an average of 328 patients, and the average cost per head per annum for medicine was 3s. 7d.; in the Cork Asylum the cost per head per annum was 1s. 2d. during the same period, while in the Richmond Asylum the cost per head per annum was 4s. Can you offer any explanation as to that very great difference of cost?—There is a very great difference certainly; but I could not offer any explanation, except, perhaps, that the number of medical men at our Asylum causes the increase.
2736. Do you keep a pass-book for medicines for the whole institution?—Yes; there is only one doctor and a surgeon at the Ballinasloe Asylum, and we have three doctors and a surgeon. There is no restriction as to the expense of the medicines ordered.
2737. Have you the Medical Pass Book with you?—I have the accounts, which are a transcript of the pass-book. Arrow-root forms a very expensive item in the accounts; and there is a great deal of mustard used for poultices, and vinegar also, and these are included under the head of medicines.
- Wine, how ordered.
2738. How is the wine ordered for the patients?—The wine is ordered in the Prescription Book by the physicians and surgeon. The doctors pay a great deal of attention to it; and the wine merchant has been lately changed, in consequence of the inferior quality of wine that was supplied—port is the wine used.
2739. Is the wine kept with the medicines?—Yes; and kept constantly locked up.
2740. How is the wine transmitted to the patients?—Through the nurses. The orders for it are entered in the Doctors' Prescription Books, which are produced by the nurses when getting the wine.
2741. Is the wine intended for the patients in the new asylum measured out to the nurses at the apothecary's shop in the old asylum?—No, it is kept at the new asylum.
2742. There is a surgery at the old asylum?—There is; I compound there the medicines for the entire establishment; and I merely keep at the new asylum, in an apothecary's shop, which has never been furnished or used, the medicines that may be required for emergencies.

2743. Then, there is wine kept in both surgeries?—Yes, for convenience.
 2744. Have you a control over the wine in both surgeries?—Yes.
 2745. Do you compound all the medicines yourself?—No; I have an apprentice. I was allowed to have an apprentice to assist me since I was first appointed, forty-two or forty-three years ago.

Dennis.

The Richmond District Asylum, F. Bently, Esq. Compounding medicines.

2746. Does your apprentice at present fill any other office in the asylum?—Yes; he is clinical clerk or resident pupil.

2747. How long is he in that office?—Not quite two months.

2748. How long has he been your apprentice?—Three years. He was at least a year and a-half with me before I trusted him to compound, and I had him well trained to do so. He got his appointment through character.

2749. When a patient is put upon wine or extra diet, is he continued on it till the doctor marks him off, or is it discontinued without an order?—Dr. Mollan and Dr. Tuckhill order wine daily; at the end of the day's prescription I enter the gross quantity for the wards, giving to a nurse eight ounces or ten ounces of wine, as the case may be. I have no right to give the wine unless it is put down in the book; but if they forget to enter it I, knowing it was a mistake, would give out the wine. Surgeon Hughes in his book says, so much daily in the gross, and that goes on.

Extra diet, how regulated.

2750. Then, the Prescription Book does not mark the patient's name for whom the wine is given?—It does not.

2751. In what book is the name of the patient entered who is to get the wine?—I am sure it is not entered in any book; the doctors tell the nurses, and I know who are to get the wine. I speak of the old asylum.

2752. Am I to understand that in the Prescription Book there is no entry of the name of the patient that is to get wine, and the quantity that each patient is to receive?—There is not; there may be sometimes, but it is not the common practice.

2753. Are the instructions which the nurses receive as to patients who are to get wine, verbal or in writing?—Verbal, I should say; I never saw an entry on the subject. I could never tell who was to get the wine.

2754. If you were in a ward when wine was being administered, you could not tell whether it was being given to the right person or in the proper quantity?—I could not.

2755. What quantity of wine have you known to have been given in any one item?—Ten ounces.

2756. Does this appear to be Dr. Banks' practice?—He orders it more in the way that Dr. Hughes does.

2757. Is there any entry as to the individual who is to receive wine, and the quantity he is to get?—In the new asylum I can always tell that: I go round there with Dr. Banks. I do not administer the wine in the old house, unless upon some very rare occasions.

2758. Do you administer the wine in the new house, or is the nurse told in your presence who is to get it?—Yes; an entry is made either by the doctor or by me of the name of the patient who is to get wine. I have frequently made entries of that kind, by his direction, in his Prescription Book.

2759. Is a written list of the patients who are to get wine given to the nurse?—Not at all.

2760. Is the medicine which is purchased for the establishment kept in one surgery or divided between the two?—The principal part of the medicine is kept in one surgery, and only as much as will meet cases of emergency is kept in the new asylum. Medicine, how kept.

2761. Is the general stock of medicines kept in the surgery in the old house?—Yes.

2762. Do you live in the new house?—I do.

2763. Who has access to the surgery in the old asylum?—Myself and the resident pupils. Access to, by nurses.

2764. The key is left for them to get in at all hours and times.

2765. With whom is the key left?—With the nurse, who has a room near it.

2766. Then she can have access to the surgery or the medicines when she likes?—She keeps the key, and has access to the shop.

2767. Have any other servants access to it?—None but her. I should add that we have two lock-up presses for medicines; it is the compounding medicines that are out. The stock is locked up, and so are dangerous and costly medicines.

2768. Has the nurse access to the wine?—Not at all, there is a very particular lock upon it.

2769. Where do the clinical clerks reside?—One resides in the old asylum in a room next door to the shop.

2770. Is not the ordinary stock of medicines such as you will see in an apothecary's shop?—Yes.

2771. The nurse has access to the general stock of medicines, except costly or dangerous medicines?—Yes.

2772. Might not the circumstance of a servant having free access to the shop account, in some measure, for the high price of medicines per head in your establishment?—By no means—the medicines could not be taken without my knowledge. That woman is there twenty-eight years or more.

2773. Do you say that no medicines could be taken without your knowledge?—I have no reason to believe that they are taken.

2774. Are you aware, from your long experience in hospitals, that penutation of medicines is by no means of uncommon occurrence?—No.

2775. Have you known any?—In my long experience of the Richmond and other hospitals, it is a thing that has never been carried out to any great extent; it might have been done in a small way, in this case I do not consider it is so.

2775. You say not to any great extent?—At one time I thought I missed some castor oil, I spoke about it, and I adopted a different plan for leaving out oil for the resident pupils, in order to detect or prevent the possibility of poisoning. I used to leave a bottle full of oil, and also a full bottle of wine, so that neither of them could be opened or used without my knowledge. I withdrew the bottles next day, and put full ones in their place, and I am enabled to ascertain how much had been used. My attention has been always given to that point, and I have no reason to suppose any fraud is carried on, certainly not such as would account for the difference of expenditure.

2776. Then you admit fraud has occurred?—No, I would not call it fraud at all. The nurses may have taken some castor oil, but I am perfectly sure such a thing could not go on for any time.

2777. Who dispenses the medicines?—My apprentice and myself.

John Hughes, Esq.,
M.B., L.R.C.S.I.

John Hughes, Esq., M.B., L.R.C.S.I., sworn and examined.

2778. What appointment do you hold in connexion with the Richmond Asylum?—Surgeon.

2779. How long have you held that appointment?—Since February, 1847.

Surgical attendance.

2780. Is your attendance confined to cases in the infirmary?—And also the entire establishment, including the new asylum.

2781. Do you visit all the patients, or do you confine your attention to surgical cases?—To surgical cases.

2782. Is your attendance periodical, or do you attend merely when requested?—I attend daily.

2783. What is the average number of cases under your charge?—About thirty.

2784. Do you attend in consultation with any other medical man connected with the establishment, or by yourself?—I attend cases as they are sent to me from the physicians in the house, and any that I see requiring surgical attendance.

2785. In prescribing for the patients, where do you enter your prescriptions?—In the book provided for the purpose.

Made of prescribing wine, &c.

2786. Is that a book entirely for your own patients?—Yes.

2787. Is that book in your own custody or in the custody of the apothecary?—It is left in the asylum. There are five or six books in the custody of the nurses, and when the prescriptions are entered they are sent to the apothecary to be made up.

2788. When wine or such things are ordered, do you enter under each patient's name the quantity of wine that patient is to get?—I do.

2789. We have been told it has been the practice to enter the gross amount of wine to be given to each nurse, without specifying the quantity to be given to the several patients?—I always enter the quantity of wine or other extras to be given to each patient at the foot of the Prescription Book. I have no wine book; there was one in the institution, when I first became connected with it, but some abuses crept into that way of keeping the wine account.

2790. Have you got any of the Prescription Books here?—No.

2791. Is the Prescription Book left in charge of the nurses in the ward?—It is.

2792. Then, of course, there was a means of checking what patients were to receive wine or other extras you might order?—Certainly; I not only wrote it down, but I gave verbal directions on the subject. The practice of entering wine in the Prescription Book is of recent origin; formerly, there was a wine and extra book.

2793. Which do you consider the more desirable practice?—I think to make the entry in the Prescription Book is the most desirable. We observed, when we entered the patients for wine, it was taken away by the nurses long after it was necessary to be given. We used to forget that wine was put down in the Wine Book, and to our surprise we would find a good while after patients on wine in the house.

2794. Is that provided against now—do you recur to your previous prescription in every case?—We see the state of the patients, and I invariably ask what the patient is getting.

2795. If you had seen a patient yesterday, and ordered wine for him, and, on seeing him again to-day, you made another prescription, which did not include wine, would the wine for that patient cease to be issued?—It would not be given unless I wrote in my book a certain quantity daily, until I would see there was no necessity for continuing.

extra.

2796. Do you think there are sufficient securities, that these medical comforts which may be ordered for the patients are really administered to them?—I am not so sure of that; that is dependent, as in other hospitals, upon the nurses, with this difference, that the patients are not people who can complain.

2797. Would you think it advantageous that a patient should be made, himself, acquainted that he had been ordered such things?—In many cases it would be wholly useless.

2798. Have you had complaints from the patients, that they did not get those things?—Yes; but I could not act upon them.

Infirmary arrangements.

2799. What is your opinion of the arrangements for the patients in the infirmary?—The greater number of my patients are those who are at present in the infirmary, and I think they are as well cared for, with regard to medical comforts, as any patients that I know of in any other institution. The Board never controlled us in any degree whatever; they were always most anxious to have the patients well attended to, and were most liberal in their arrangements with reference to them.

2800. Do you consider the infirmary to be now supplied with every thing you deem requisite to good management?—No.

2801. Perhaps you will be so good as to point out what deficiencies you think exist?—There are some of the patients who are too frequently in bed, and it would be a great advantage for them to sit up, to enable them to do which there are no arm chairs provided in the infirmary. There was not even one till a few days since, when I got two made.

2802. Are there any other defects?—The place is very comfortable, unfurnished, without any air of comfort about it. The day-room they sit in is too small, and the sewers of the establishment are exceedingly bad. The chimneys smoke very much, indeed. I think the water-closets are very fairly kept, at least they appeared so whenever I inspected them in that part of the building.

2803. Is sufficient bedding provided?—The bedding, generally, I think, is the best for many of the patients in the infirmary, that is, good straw. I should say the bedding is in a very fair state in the infirmary.

2804. Are there night-chairs provided for the sick and delicate patients?—Not in sufficient numbers; there are one or two in the infirmary, I think not more.

2805. Have you from time to time represented to the Board what you considered to be the deficiencies in the infirmary?—I have.

2806. With what result?—Well, they generally ordered any thing there was necessity for. The infirmary is not long in operation, and there have been many defects in the building with which great fault has been found. I do not know how it was between the Board of Works and our Board of Governors, the defects were not remedied, and then two gentlemen who came from England to look over the entire building found great fault, very properly, with a great many things in the asylum; but nothing has been done since.

2807. Those are structural defects?—Yes; structural defects.

2808. When did you bring under the notice of the Board the want of chairs?—Only lately; but I went to the manager, Mr. Wrigley, who had full power to get them in. I asked them twice before from him, and I got them only very lately. I think he said the carpenter of the institution was ill.

2809. Is there any book in which any representations that you may wish to make to the Board may be entered and submitted to the Governors?—I never made a representation in writing on this subject.

2810. Is there any book for the purpose?—Not in my department.

2811. Are you in the habit of attending the meetings of the Board?—Yes; every meeting of the Board.

2812. Are there any discharge pans for the beds of wet patients in the infirmary?—I did not see any.

2813. Has that want been represented to the Board of Governors or to Mr. Wrigley?—I do not remember. I frequently asked those things from the manager, who had full authority to get them.

2814. Do you consider the straw beds to which you referred suitable for sick or bed-ridden patients?—Certainly not.

2815. What are the beds used in the hospital?—Straw principally; there are also cocoa fibre beds.

2816. Have you found any delay or difficulty in procuring articles of diet or other matters for the patients under your charge?—Nothing that one could complain of; certainly not of late.

2817. Are you acquainted generally with the condition of the patients in the new asylum?—Yes; I have been through it frequently.

2818. Would you consider it more suitable than the old Richmond Asylum for a curative hospital for the insane?—Certainly.

2819. Is it your opinion that it would be more proper to appropriate it for that purpose than to make it a place for the detention of incurable or chronic cases?—I do, decidedly. That was the original intention.

2820. Are you aware whether that intention has been followed out?—It has not been followed out.

2821. Do you consider that it might be made available as a curative asylum for both sexes?—It was intended for that, and I do not know why it should not.

2822. You stated that you attend surgical cases, and that you also attend such cases as you believe require surgical aid; do you communicate with the other physicians of the institution before you undertake to prescribe for those patients?—Yes; frequently. They leave word with the hall porter for me, if there is any particular case, and I go to the division. Sometimes I have patients in three or four divisions of the house, and in the infirmary besides, so that it takes up a great deal of time to walk round the house and the infirmary. There are some very severe surgical cases in it.

Central Criminal

Mr. BARRY, Secretary.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL ASYLUM, DUNDRUM.

William Corbet, Esq.,
M.D., F.R.C.S.I.

William Corbet, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S.I., sworn and examined.

2823. Have you been Governor of the Dundrum Central Criminal Asylum since the opening of the institution in 1850?—I have.

2824. What is the present number of inmates?—I think the number to-day is 125.

2825. Is there also a visiting physician to the establishment?—There is—Dr. Harrison.

2826. With whom does the responsibility of the medical treatment of the inmates of the asylum rest?—On Dr. Harrison and myself.

Medical arrangements.

2827. Will you describe the nature of that responsibility?—At any time that there is any thing to be done on the moment for the relief of a patient, I do it. Dr. Harrison usually visits three times a week; but when there were patients in a dangerous state, requiring more attendance, he has gone every day, and even twice a day, but that has occurred very rarely.

2828. Am I to understand that you conduct the medical treatment in the absence of Dr. Harrison?—Yes, and in conjunction with him.

2829. Is the nature of that medical treatment regulated by him, or is it after consultation with you in a case?—Supposing I am going round the institution, and that I see one, or two, or three cases that require immediate assistance, I do not wait for him, because I am uncertain as to the time he arrives, and I give the immediate attention that is required myself.

2830. Have your answers reference to the curative treatment of the patients as insane persons, or merely to the medical treatment, where their bodily health may not be good?—Chiefly as to their bodily health.

Examination of
admission.

2831. What examination of the lunatics removed to the asylum is made either by you or Dr. Harrison at the period of their reception?—At the period of their reception I always see them, examine them, and ask them a few questions. I find out, in a general way, their state then; but it takes me a considerable time before I form a full and decided opinion respecting a case.

2832. Does the visiting physician examine them on the occasion of his first visit after their reception?—Yes; he generally sees them then. It is clearly his duty to see them, and his attention, when he comes, is directed to them.

2833. Do you and he consult then with reference to the course which should be pursued for their curative treatment?—Merely examine them, and let them remain over for some time, because it is not on the first occasion that you can very well judge—you must have some little experience; and as we are to have them for a considerable time, I generally leave them over for several visits, before I form a decided opinion.

2834. Is any statement transmitted with the lunatics on their removal to the asylum, which contains information with reference to their previous history?—There is, to a certain extent; but it is not always satisfactory. I have often complained of its not being so satisfactory as it should have been.

Insufficient information
received.

2835. I presume you are of opinion that fuller information with reference to the cases would be of great advantage?—Very desirable; because, in the first place, men may be very dangerous coming in; and it would be very admirable that we should know it, in order to take the greater care. We generally get some little information with them, but it is not at all so full as we should wish to have.

2836. Do you and the visiting physician consult periodically with reference to the course which should be pursued for the curative treatment of the inmates?—Not further than this: I direct his attention to cases, and ask the question, "Is there any thing particular you would wish to have done?" and he gives an answer, whenever I see occasion to ask him, with respect to particular persons.

2837. Am I to understand that, except when you bring forward such cases for his consideration, he does not of necessity watch the progress of each case in the institution?—I cannot say that. He is not at all so well acquainted with the cases as myself, for I see them twice a day, and sometimes oftener; and I know to what his attention should be directed, otherwise he would be completely in the dark; for he comes for half an hour or an hour in the day, and to spread that over 120 patients is more than a man could well do with advantage, unless his attention was directed to particular cases.

2838. My questions have had reference to the curative treatment of the lunatics, rather than to any thing connected with their bodily health. I should wish to know whether the case of each lunatic received into the asylum is from time to time watched and studied both by yourself and the visiting physician, with a view to the cure of the lunacy?—With respect to that I would almost say that we have very little faith in any particular curative method, except in the general methods of attention and proper exercise, and putting them to particular works, which engage their attention; by proper attention to the health of the body, in that way we may hope to cure particular cases of insanity. There is very little means of curing insanity by medicines. When the general health is out of order, then we are obliged to interfere, and attention to that may be made the means of curing the insanity.

2839. Of course, the method to be adopted with one patient is not necessarily that which should be adopted with another. We should wish to know whether the cure of the patients in the Criminal Asylum is a matter which is carefully looked after and attended to?—I think I may justly state that we fairly look to their welfare in every point of view, being careful, so far as we can, both of mind and body.

2840. I presume that in the treatment of the lunatics in the Central Criminal Asylum, the fact of these lunatics being under sentence, and therefore capable of being detained even after their cure, does not at all influence those in medical charge of the establishment in the treatment they pursue, as the doctors of a curative hospital?—Not in the slightest degree; in fact, the law takes a merciful view of the case of such people—it does not hold them guilty of the crime of which they have been accused. I never desire to think they are guilty at all, and I consider that the law has merely put them under my care for a time, as persons who have been rather unfortunate than guilty; and I have no idea, therefore, of punishing them in the slightest degree. It is no affair of mine what sentence they are under.

2841. Have any differences of opinion arisen between yourself and the visiting physician as to the course of treatment to be pursued?—No; there has been nothing like difference of opinion.

2842. In case such a difference should arise, with whom would the authority rest of directing the treatment to be pursued?—I would then yield to Dr. Harrison. I consider that, properly speaking, he would have the responsibility, and that I had other things to attend to. I do not think there has been a difference of opinion at all as yet between us.

2843. Can you state to the Commissioners about what number of lunatic patients have been received into the institution since its opening in 1850?—From about 156 to 160.

2844. Will you be enabled to furnish the Commissioners with a statement of the number who have since been discharged from the asylum, or removed to other institutions, or who have died in the establishment?—I will.

2845. What course is pursued when a patient is ascertained to have recovered his reason?—The course has been, that I have reported to the Inspectors that such a man was in a condition to be discharged. I have called attention to those cases.

2846. Have these patients been usually removed upon that report?—A considerable time is often taken before any thing is done.

2847. Does that arise, do you suppose, from any doubt on the part of the Inspectors, as to the cure being really perfect?—I do not think it was so much that, as the difficulties arising from the nature of the crime of a patient; for instance, if a man had committed a very serious crime, they would hesitate much before they discharged him. We had one man that came in very insane, and he became sane in, perhaps, a year or two; but in three or four years after, without any apparent cause, he got exceedingly insane again. It would require a considerable time before you could say certainly there was a cure. If there was further experience of those cases, I suppose it would turn out that the cures were rather temporary than complete.

2848. Was the criminal lunatic in the case you have referred to pardoned or set at liberty?—He was not.

2849. What became of him?—He died.

2850. And did all this occur in the institution?—Yes.

2851. Had you recommended that man to be discharged?—No; he was not one of those I recommended to be discharged. I am sure he was three years free from insanity. There was another man, still more free from insanity, who has been since discharged in this way. His case was represented several times, and he was finally sent down to Rose-common, where he was arraigned for the crime with which he was charged, and he got out there.

2852. Was that man's name Quirk?—Yes. It was upon my recommendation, several times made, and, I believe, upon the recommendation of the Inspectors, that the law officers decided that course should be pursued with reference to him.

2853. Has it often happened that persons are detained in the asylum whose cure has apparently been effected?—Yes, they have been detained a considerable time after their cure had been effected. There was a man lately sent out, who appeared to have been sane for a number of years before.

2854. What arrangements are made for the moral treatment of the patients?—Of course there are clergymen to attend there at the proper seasons; then the patients sometimes have amusements, but not very frequently. They have had ball-playing, and are very much out on the grounds. They play bowls occasionally, and some few things of that kind, so far as we could easily give them. To any of them that would express a desire for reading, I would give them books; but, in general, I have not found the patients of that class who would take pleasure in reading; many of them are quite ignorant, and cannot read.

2855. Is any school instruction given?—No.

2856. What is your opinion of the advantage of giving school instruction to the patients, although they are beyond the period of youth?—The institution is so small, and there are so few capable of receiving instruction, that it could not be easily done. A great many of our people are idiotic, and incapable of instruction.

2857. Am I to understand that the number fit to receive instruction is so small that the expense would be considerable in proportion to the advantage?—Yes. I have striven to instruct two or three, or to get them instructed; but, after a short time, they fell off, probably finding it difficult, and not liking the trouble.

2858. Without at all expecting that lunatics could exhibit any great proficiency under such instruction, would not the instruction itself be a source of employment and amusement for their minds?—It would.

2859. Is any thing done to render the day-rooms and corridors which the inmates of the asylum frequent cheerful, by the introduction of pictures, or any matters of that kind?—The only things of that kind are in their private rooms, where many of them have got pictures put up—cuts from the Illustrated London News, and such like.

2860. Is there, in fact, any thing done to render the apartments usually occupied by them more enlivening?—There is nothing particular done; they have had cards occasionally to amuse them at night.

West of chairs.

2861. Are there any benches or chairs in the galleries or corridors?—No; they have been applied for, and I suppose they will be furnished after a time. A great deal of time passes after an application is made, and my requests for those things have been very unsatisfactorily met.

Applications to have works done; the Board of Works.

2862. To whom do you signify the wants of the establishment?—First to the Inspectors, and from them it usually goes to the Board of Works.

2863. When you speak of your requirements not being always satisfactorily answered as regards expeditions, do you mean that the delay is on the part of the Inspectors, or on the part of the Board of Works?—I think chiefly on the part of the Board of Works; in fact, it is very unpleasant in reference to many applications from the answers returned to them by the Board of Works.

2864. Would you be so good as to describe what you particularly refer to?—I made a number of those applications not very long since. My letter was sent on to the Board of Works, and the observations made upon it, I think, were very insulting and very unbecoming from the Board. I have a copy of the letter.

2865. Will you furnish us with a copy of the letter, and the observations made upon it?—Yes; I will furnish a copy of the letter and a copy of the answer.

2866. Did the reply of the Board of Works criticize the propriety of your demand?—It did. I will mention one circumstance with respect to it. I had applied to have a lodge built for the gardener at the central gate, which is more than half a furlong distant from the other gate; and I wished the gardener to live at that place, and that his wife should have care of the middle gate, for it is quite impossible for a man to attend satisfactorily to two gates at such a distance from each other. Among the requirements sent in to the Board of Works for the Asylum, in December, 1855, was one for this lodge, approved of by the Inspectors. It was estimated at £100, and provided for in the public estimates in the spring of 1856. Nothing, however, was done in the matter for a long time. Dr. Nugent called on the Commissioners, when, on talking the matter over, he acquiesced in their opinion that this lodge could be dispensed with. On sending in a list of requirements for the coming year (November, 1856), the Secretary of the Board of Works wrote, by order of the Commissioners, to the Inspectors, commenting on these requirements, and stating at the end of the letter, "The Board would remind you of the necessity of your considering well any list of requirements from your resident physician, as last year after providing for a gate lodge on requisition, Dr. Nugent, in looking into the matter, agreed with the Board that the work was not necessary." That appeared to me very insulting, whilst I still remain unconvinced that I asked for a thing unreasonable or improper.

2867. Have you ever applied for seats and chairs to be placed in the corridors?—I have applied for them, but possibly not more than six or eight months ago.

2868. They have not yet been furnished?—No.

2869. Do you know whether the Inspectors approved and forwarded your suggestion?—I know, from the letter that I mentioned to you, that they forwarded some suggestions, and that the Board of Works turned a deaf ear to almost every thing I said.

2870. Have you ever been furnished with a plan of the building?—No, nor even a survey of the place, which I applied for more than once. I have got a survey of the land made of late by permission of the Inspectors.

2871. Is there an infirmary attached to the institution?—There was a building intended for the infirmary, but we never used it as such; in fact, we never had occasion to use it as such. We use it now as a dormitory for some of the patients; and only for it we would be quite overcrowded at the male side.

2872. Is there any dead-house in the institution?—No.

2873. In case of a patient being despaired of, who may be an inmate of one of the dormitories, would he be removed to a separate cell?—Yes, I would remove him to a separate place after he died; I would not leave him in a dormitory where others were sleeping.

2874. Would he be removed before death?—No, not till after death.

2875. Would it not be desirable, when a patient approaches that extreme state, that he should be removed to a separate apartment?—Sometimes they require a good deal of care, and the watching and attention of the persons around are of great service.

2876. May it not have an injurious effect upon the other inmates to see a person in that dying condition?—If I thought that, I would, of course, have a dying person removed to a separate cell.

2877. Have you any screens, such as are sometimes used in hospitals, to enclose the bed of a dying patient?—No; but our dormitories are small; the largest of them accommodates only six, or five, or four; and therefore those things are not so necessary as if the apartments were larger. I may mention that a great number of our patients are persons who have been a long time in confinement, and they do not require that active medical treatment, so far as regards their mental condition, that would be necessary if they were recent cases.

Infirmary not used.

Arrangements respecting sick and dying patients.

2878. Are there any artificial means of ventilating the establishment?—There are apertures through the walls; and it was intended that the fire for heating the baths should be made available for drawing air up. The fire for the baths is at the top of the building.

2879. Has that arrangement been successful?—I do not know. We use the bath only once a week.

2880. Have you ever tried whether that ventilation was effective on the days when the fire was lighted?—I rather think that the arrangements for ventilating the building are not effective.

2881. Are you satisfied that, practically, the apartments have sufficient ventilation?—Practically, I think they have. The only time that I perceive defective ventilation is at night, when the smell from the perspiration and breathing of the patients is often very offensive. There is something in the insané that causes an offensive effluvia, more than in sane persons.

2882. Are the corridors sufficiently heated in winter?—We have fires in them, but occasionally they are very much exposed to currents, from the iron window-frames not fitting closely.

2883. Are the fireplaces in the outer walls?—No; in the inner or central walls.

2884. Is the asylum free from damp?—No, not altogether. When a storm comes, especially from the south, with rain, the walls show damp inside. For the last two or three days the walls in many spots appear wet.

2885. Is restraint much practised in the asylum?—Scarcely at all. We have one man who is occasionally very violent indeed, and who will suddenly seize upon any thing that is near him, and strike and wound persons if he can. Occasionally we have a band round him, and one hand secured to the band, so that he cannot have the use of both hands when in that state. That is the only restraint I have used for a long time.

2886. Are you obliged to have frequent recourse to seclusion?—No.

2887. Have you any padded rooms or cells? Only two—one in the male, and one in the female side.

2888. Are they suitable for the purpose?—Indeed they are not well contrived; they are not padded rooms at all—they are boarded rooms, and it is supposed that the boarding will prevent injury.

2889. The male patients are generally occupied during the day in the grounds?—The greater number of them.

2890. Are the airing courts well situated?—They are not. In winter they are very cold, and the sun is almost altogether shut out from them by the height of the building. They are on the north side, and the sun is shut out from them.

2891. Are the patients allowed to go through the grounds whenever the weather permits, or are they confined to the airing courts for an entire day?—We usually have them in the grounds. The females do not go out so much, except in the airing yards, and once or twice a week through the grounds. On Sundays especially, if it is fine, they get out almost for the entire day.

2892. Why is the admission of the females to the grounds for exercise restricted to twice a week?—They are not actually restricted, but they have a great deal of work to do in the asylum, though they are not too much occupied.

2893. Would it not be advisable, if the weather permitted it, to let them take exercise in the open air?—They do not appear to desire it themselves; besides, it would cause inconvenience.

2894. Are we to understand that doing so would render necessary a larger number of attendants?—Yes.

2895. What is the proportion of attendants for the inmates?—We have seven male attendants to about eighty-three patients, and we have four female attendants to forty-three patients.

2896. Are those attendants occupied entirely with the care of the patients in the apartments, or have they any thing to say to the laundry, or to other work?—No; their attention is exclusively directed to the patients and to keeping the place clean.

2897. Are any of the female attendants or the female patients employed in cleaning out the male wards, or making up the male apartments?—No.

2898. Have you ever tried that arrangement?—No. In fact, there is only one attendant for each division in the female department, with the exception of one division; so none of them could be spared from her division to go to the male wards; they have got enough to do in their own places.

2899. Are the arrangements for washing and cleansing the patients satisfactory?—The lavatories are pretty fair; the bath-rooms and baths are not so well contrived as they might be.

2900. Are they in working order?—Yes; but we are obliged to apply to have them kept in working order from time to time.

2901. Is there a supply of hot water always available, in case it should be required, for the baths?—Not always; we only get it up once a week, on account of the expense of the firing, and it takes a considerable time before the water is heated. We are obliged to have fires lighted for six or seven hours before the water is properly heated.

2902. In case a bath should be suddenly required for a patient in any of the wards, how would the hot water be provided?—In that case the only way to get it would be from the cooking apparatus, where the steam is generated.

2903. In that case would it have to be carried all through the building?—Yes.

2904. Do you see that the patients are properly washed every day?—I see that they are clean; I do not inspect the washing.

2905. Are there any shower baths in the establishment?—There are but two shower baths.

2906. When those shower baths are used, is it by your direction or that of Dr. Harrison?—Yes.

2907. Are they kept locked?—They are kept shut. They are in a place to which the patients have no access in general; they are locked up in a little bath-room.

2908. Are they sufficiently secured to prevent the attendants administering a shower bath to a patient without any order from you or Dr. Harrison?—The attendants would not venture to administer a bath without an order of that kind.

2909. Are there water-closets throughout the establishment?—There is a water-closet in each division.

2910. Are they in good working order?—I do not like them at all; they are not such as I could approve of; in fact, I have complained very much of them over and over. They are used for throwing slops into, and are always damp.

2911. Is that your only objection to the water-closets, or are they mechanically wrong?—They are plug water-closets, and I object to that. I would rather have closets that would flush themselves.

2912. Are there urinals in the establishment?—No. I have frequently applied for them.

2913. Is the sewerage generally satisfactory?—We had two of the sewers opened about three times since I went there, as they were choked. There is no particular means of flushing the sewers. The whole sewerage runs into a foul tank, to which there is a pump. That pump works off, and scatters the contents over the ground.

2914. Practically, is it disposed of?—To a certain extent it is; but that force-pump is apt to get out of order—the valves frequently get choked. It appears to me that the valves are of leather, and the foul water destroys them or chokes them. Men from the Board of Works have been for nearly a fortnight clearing out the foul tank, or striving to clear it out; and that, of course, will entail considerable expense. They have a large number of men employed.

2915. Have the patients ever been employed in working the pump you speak of?—Yes.

2916. Do you think it a suitable or a desirable occupation for them?—Far from it; I do not think it at all desirable or suitable, the smell is so very bad, and few men having an inkling of reason would submit to a work so exceedingly monotonous. A man is merely turning a handle, he sees nothing of the effect of the work, and has no exercise for his mind. It is not like as if he was out in the fields, where, if he is digging, he can see what he does.

2917. Is the labour very irksome or great?—It is constant; it is not that it is very heavy. When the valves of the pump are choked, it is a filthy thing to settle them. A man has to go down into the hole and see to the cause of the stoppage, and the smell is very bad.

2918. Do those observations apply, though not, perhaps, to the same extent, to the working of the pump for the supply of water to the house?—They apply in a very modified degree. Such work is the next thing to hard labour.

2919. Is the foul tank of which you speak close to the asylum?—It is very close to it.

2920. How far is it from the apartments actually occupied by the patients?—I should suppose it is not more than about five or six yards from the female wing of the building.

2921. What arrangements are made for the performance of religious worship in the asylum?—The Catholics every Sunday go into the chapel at half-past eight o'clock, or a little before it, and they generally leave it at half-past nine, or something later; and then, about ten minutes before ten, the Protestants are admitted. The same is the case on holidays. The clergymen usually visit about three times a week.

2922. Are those the regular appointed chaplains of the institution?—Yes.

2923. How many are there?—Two—the Protestant and Catholic chaplains.

2924. Have you ever had any Presbyterians inmates?—Several.

2925. What arrangement is made with reference to their attendance at religious worship?—I have never known any of them object to attend at the Protestant service.

2926. Do the chaplains attend at the institution on any other occasion?—They usually pay visits, perhaps twice a week, besides the visit on Sundays.

2927. Have the chaplains the power of visiting the institution generally, or any of the inmates they please, without any communication with you?—They usually go in without reference to me; but I am on the spot, and they will probably see me.

2928. Supposing a case to arise, in which you considered that any communication with a patient at a particular moment upon religious matters would not be likely to be of advantage to him, what steps would you take to prevent his receiving the visit of the chaplain?—I would speak to the chaplain, and would expect that he would acquiesce in my representation; or if I did not see him, I would leave directions for him.

2929. Have such cases arisen?—No. I am sure if there was such a case, the chaplain would have the good sense to see at once the propriety of not visiting the patient.

2930. What proportion of the inmates usually attend religious worship?—I should suppose out of 120 or 130, 90 at least attend—I mean of both churches.

2931. How is the selection made of those who are to attend on Sundays at religious worship?—It is usually a matter of experiment. They are sent once, twice, or three times; and if they behave themselves, they are allowed to continue going.

2932. Are we to understand that all the inmates attend religious worship, unless those of whom there is reason to believe, from past conduct, that they are not likely to benefit by it?—Yes, and according to their own desire. If they desire to go, there is nothing to prevent them, unless they misbehave themselves in church, but that has very rarely occurred.

Inmates attending

2933. Is the conduct of the inmates generally on these occasions decorous and such as becomes persons attending divine worship?—Completely; so much so, that persons from outside, who attended at the church, have said that they would not meet so orderly a congregation elsewhere. Many people express their surprise at the orderly conduct of the inmates.

2934. Do you think that, generally, those who attend religious worship are sensible of what they are engaged in?—They are sensible of the object in which they are engaged.

2935. Are sermons usually preached?—Since the last Catholic curate came sermons have not been preached, but the curate who preceded him preached very frequently; and I think it would be better to have short sermons from time to time, for the inmates like it.

2936. Would not particular care and judgment be required on the part of a clergyman addressing a congregation of that character?—There might be occasionally an individual as to whom that care would be required on the part of a clergyman, but it would not be the case as to the general body. I have not found such to be necessary in practice. You must consider that our number is limited, and they are all of the class of chronic insanity.

2937. Are sermons usually preached by the Protestant chaplain?—Yes; they are not very long sermons.

2938. By whom are the books of the institution kept?—By Mr. Mullen, the clerk.

2939. Is there a medical journal kept in the institution?—The only medical journal I know of is one I keep myself.

2940. Is it similar in form to that in the third schedule to the 8th and 9th Vict., chap. 107?—It is not exactly in that form.

2941. Is there any case-book kept?—That is the book to which I now refer.

2942. By whom are the account books of the establishment kept?—Mr. Mullen actually keeps the books, but I hold myself accountable for their being regular and correct, as is required by the rules.

2943. Who inspects the provisions?—I inspect them frequently myself, especially if there is any complaint made of them. Mr. Mullen inspects them also, and sometimes the matron does it.

2944. By whom is the dietary fixed?—By the Inspectors.

2945. Does the matron act under your directions entirely?—She appears to consider herself more under the direction of the Inspectors.

2946. Of course, you consider that you have authority over her?—To a certain extent. If I direct any thing particular to be done with respect to the female patients, I expect that she will carry out the direction.

2947. Do you frequently visit the female side, as well as the male side?—I do.

2948. And, of course, you give your directions with regard to any thing that you may consider to be required?—Yes; I give directions for any thing that I may see necessary to be done.

2949. Is there an apothecary who attends daily?—There is an apothecary, but he does not attend daily.

2950. Are the drugs provided by the establishment, or are they compounded by the apothecary in his own shop?—The apothecary has an allowance of £20 a-year for drugs, in addition to his salary. He provides all the medicines. The Inspectors made that agreement with him.

2951. Has that arrangement worked satisfactorily?—Yes.

2952. Is the apothecary resident in the neighbourhood?—In Dublin.

2953. In case medicines should be suddenly and urgently required, would it be necessary to send to Dublin for him to procure them?—No; I would give the medicines myself from a certain quantity that there is in the house. We have in the establishment a considerable number of medicines supplied by the apothecary.

2954. Are those medicines which are at your command for cases of emergency furnished by the apothecary for the sum of £20 a-year?—Yes. His salary is £40 a-year, and £20 for medicines. The only thing he would have over is whatever would be the cost of lozenges, which are not included in his contract.

2955. Who keeps the farm account?—Mr. Mullen keeps all the accounts; of course, I must look over them and see that they are right—I have the receipt and the expenditure of the money.

2956. Is there any separate debtor and creditor account kept in relation to the expenditure upon the farm and its produce?—Yes.

2957. Are there any farm buildings connected with the institution?—None as yet; they were called for two or three years ago, and the foundations for them have been recently cut.

2958. By whom are the servants of the establishment appointed?—They are appointed by the Government.

2959. By whom are they removed?—The Inspectors would dismiss them on my complaint. I have been there six years, and we have dismissed only one man.

2960. Are you satisfied generally with the class of servants that have been sent to you?—Yes, generally.

2961. Do you think they are intelligent enough to be placed in charge of insane persons?—I think they are, in general, proper persons. We have good nurses; they have not been well educated people, but they appear to be kind and attentive, and that is what we require from them.

2962. Do you not think it would be of advantage to have persons of a more educated class in charge of those poor people?—Of course it would be an additional advantage, but we have not got them; in fact, some of them did not read or write, which I think is objectionable.

2963. Are the wages and allowances sufficient to secure persons of an intelligent class?—I think they are pretty fair. The women get £12 a-year wages, and rations, and some clothing; the men get £18 a-year, and rations and clothes. It is a hard life to be always taking care of a set of lunatics, and I make allowance for that. You must pardon them sometimes a few offences. I would be very much against any of them who would be guilty of harshness to the patients.

2964. Have you had to complain of any of the attendants for harshness?—On very rare occasions. They know perfectly well that harshness would not be tolerated.

2965. Are the articles of food and the other necessaries for the institution supplied by contract?—By contract.

2966. By whom are those contracts entered into?—By the Inspectors.

2967. Are you aware whether it is done by public advertisement?—Yes, by public advertisement.

2968. Are the supplies weighed by the storekeeper when they are received?—They are.

2969. Who checks the books of the storekeeper as regards the consumption?—The storekeeper himself checks the books, and I occasionally check with him. For instance, when an account comes to be paid to the butcher or to the baker, I look over it, and calculate what it ought to be, before I send in the account—I look over it, and see that it is right.

2970. Are the books ever checked or examined by the Inspectors?—The Inspectors check all the monthly accounts as they go into them every month; and very frequently, when they have a doubt as to any particular account or item in it, they will send out and say, "This appears to be too large—explain this—what is the reason of such and such?" and I send in answers.

2971. What means have the Inspectors each month of checking the consumption?—Only the monthly accounts going into them.

2972. Have they a statement of the number of inmates each day in the institution to enable them to check the consumption?—The number in the institution very rarely changes.

2973. Do you think that a larger number of patients could be received into the institution by reason of an alteration being made in the arrangements?—I do not think there could.

2974. Is the structure of the asylum such as would easily admit of its being added to, if an addition was required?—I think it is.

2975. I presume, that if the asylum contained a larger number of patients, they might be attended to with a very small addition to the number of the inferior servants?—Yes; the staff, with a very little addition, would answer for a larger number. That, in fact, is the great cause of our high average expenditure, and must be always the case while the number of patients is only about 125.

2976. Have you any classification of patients in the establishment?—We have no great classification, because of the small number. Our epileptic patients must be kept on the lower stories. On the female side, we put the most troublesome persons in one division, and the other divisions are allotted to the quiet patients. I would like to have a place where I could put persons by themselves for a time until they get quiet, for they annoy others very much.

2977. Is there any distinction made in the asylum, based upon a difference in the social condition of the inmates?—There are only two, or three, or four, that you would say were superior to the ordinary class of people in the asylum; and if I could give them a little intelligence now and then, I would be glad to do so. The attendants often allow a person of that description into their rooms to sit and to be separate from the others.

2978. Are they allowed to wear their own clothes?—Yes.

2979. Are any others that may be sent to them by their friends allowed?—Yes; and I would be very glad their friends would look after some of these people. It is a great comfort to them to see that some one outside thinks of them and looks after them. I encourage letters from their friends, and pay the postage of answers.

2980. You are the visiting physician of the Central Criminal Asylum, Dundrum?—I am.

2981. You have held that appointment since the opening of the institution?—Yes; I was appointed by the Earl of Clarendon.

2982. The Governor of that asylum is also a medical man?—He is.

2983. With whom does the medical charge of the patients rest?—I think with both of us. In an urgent case I give particular directions to Dr. Corbett. He attends to them in my absence; and if any case suddenly occur during my absence, he attends to it till I come; in fact, we arrange it between us in the best mode for the good of the institution.

2984. When lunatics are first received into the asylum, is there any information furnished with respect to their cases?—Sometimes a short report comes along with a patient. I do not think that, in general, such information is very full or very satisfactory.

2985. I presume you would consider it desirable that much fuller information, if possible, should be furnished?—Yes; it would be a great matter to know the previous history of the patients.

2986. It would be of material assistance in the further treatment of the cases?—Precisely.

2987. I presume, although the patients who are confined in this asylum may be under the sentence of a court, at the same time the treatment pursued is properly of a curative character?—Entirely. We do not look on them at all as criminals.

2988. You consider the patients the same as if they were in a lunatic ward of a gaol?—Just so. We have as little of prison arrangements as possible.

2989. You have just stated that you and the medical manager arrange between you with regard to the medical charge of the patients: do you consult upon each case when it is first received, or is a case, on its reception, particularly brought under your notice, and all the circumstances connected with it which are known?—Yes.

2990. Supposing a difference of opinion to arise between Dr. Corbett and yourself as to the treatment of a case, with whom would the decision rest as to the course to be pursued?—The good sense of both parties would bring them to a settlement. Medical men may differ at first in their opinions of a case, but, in general, they very soon agree.

2991. With whom do you consider the responsibility ought to rest of directing the curative treatment of the inmates as to their insanity?—I think it ought to rest with the Governor, the man who is on the spot, and can look into all the details. At the same time, I think the two should consult and should agree upon a plan, and then the resident should be responsible for carrying that plan out. That is what we do. We see a case, and consider what kind of madness it is, and what treatment should be adopted—whether there should be high or low living, or moderate restraint. The Governor carries out what we resolve upon, and modifies it according as he finds it necessary.

2992. Am I to understand that you would desire the position of the Governor should be pretty much that of a house-surgeon in an hospital, who would act under the direction of the visiting physician?—Precisely.

2993. Speaking generally of asylums, do you think it would be of importance to have always this double system of medical attendance—the resident medical officer and the visiting physician?—From my own experience, I think it would. It gives great confidence to the resident to have another person to assist him; and I think the second is of service in observing matters and correcting. The two act much better than one.

2994. What means are used in the asylum for the moral treatment of the insane?—We have two chaplains, who visit very often. They have regular Sunday duties; and besides that, they pay visits two or three times in the week. I frequently see the names of the Roman Catholic and Protestant clergymen in the visiting book. They speak to their people and advise them, and lecture them quietly and gently. There is no religious controversy, or any thing of that kind—mere moral advice.

2995. What occupation are the inmates generally engaged in?—The men chiefly in agriculture, and the women chiefly in the laundry. There may be, perhaps, two or three men at shoemaking, one or two tailors, and a man making tin porringers.

2996. I presume the greater number of the inmates are of the agricultural class?—Chiefly.

2997. When the weather will not permit of their being employed at those out-door pursuits, are any occupations or amusements provided inside for them?—Not enough. It is very tiresome on wet days.

2998. In point of fact, are the day-rooms of the asylum, which are occupied by the inmates on those days that will not admit of their being out of doors, different in any way from the day-rooms in the ordinary workhouses?—Not at all. There are no books or any thing to occupy the minds of the patients.

2999. Considering that the asylum is not a mere place of detention for insane persons, but is also to be regarded as an hospital for curative treatment, are you satisfied with that absence of amusement, or the utter want of any thing enlivening in the apartments they occupy?—I have often regretted the want of such things—a reading-room, or a room with pictures, to excite or engage the attention, so as to keep them from a gloomy mood, into which they fall when unoccupied on a wet day.

3000. In point of fact, I believe the day-rooms and corridors of this asylum are particularly cheerless, the walls being merely whitewashed?—Yes. Our day-rooms are very cheerful, as far as light goes, but very cheerless in every other respect, in the way of furniture or of objects that could amuse the mind or engage the attention.

3001. It has been stated that the inmates are at times occupied in works that require considerable labour, such as force-pumps in the yard, where they are engaged under sheds, and are very much secluded: do you consider this occupation advisable for lunatics?—I have looked at them working, and I think they do it pretty cheerfully. It would be heavy-work for one or two men; but when five or six men get to a pump, they work with spirit, and seem rather amused at it. On some days they get a little sulky, and two or three will hang back, and throw a great deal of labour on the others, who will complain; but I have seen them over and over again at it laughing, whistling, and joking.

3002. Have you ever seen them working at the foul tank?—Yes.

3003. The Governor of the institution seems to consider that occupation unsuitable for lunatics?—There is not a pleasant smell; but I see no great objection to it.

3004. We have been given to understand the infirmary of the institution has not been used as such?—Scarcely ever. We have had hardly any fever or infectious disease.

3005. What is your opinion as to the importance of having either a separate building, or a separate portion of building, in your asylum set apart as an infirmary?—I think it desirable to have a separate portion of the building, rather than a separate building, for the purpose. A separate portion of the building is more "concealable," if I may say so, and is better attended to. When a building is detached from the main structure, it is more apt to be neglected, unless there be a distinct set of servants appointed to attend it. I do not mean to say that any thing of the kind occurs, but on principle I make that statement.

3006. The building for the infirmary in the Dundrum Asylum is a separate building?—Yes.

3007. Is your opinion is it more desirable to treat a sick patient in the dormitory of an infirmary than in his own ordinary cell?—I think, if the illness were a trifling or ephemeral one, it would be bad to remove him, at all events it would be unnecessary; but if there is any thing like a long continued fever, I would recommend his removal, both for the sake of quietness for himself, and to guard against the spreading of infection.

3008. I believe there is an apothecary attached to the institution, who is paid upon an annual contract for the supply of medicines for the institution?—I believe that is the case.

3009. Is that a satisfactory arrangement?—It is considered economical.

3010. On general grounds, do you approve of the system of contracting to supply medicines for such an institution for a certain annual sum?—I would not generally recommend it.

3011. I believe the apothecary to the institution resides in Dublin?—Yes.

3012. There is, however, I understand, a supply of medicines on the spot, at the command of the Governor?—Yes; and if there is any thing urgently required—if I see any thing wanting—I may send in the servant to the apothecary to appraise him of it. He visits regularly twice or three times a week.

3013. When wine and what are called "medical extras" are required by a patient, is the order entered by you in the prescription book?—No; the Governor manages all about the wine and such things with great care and prudence.

3014. You are not aware whether there is any record in any book of what patients have been ordered, wine or such things?—Except in some very few cases, I do not think I have ordered wine in the book. Wine is occasionally given by the Governor, where there is a sudden sinking. In such a case he may give wine or brandy, or some stimulant that is required, without each being regularly ordered. On the whole, we give very little of those stimulants.

3015. Is much restraint practised in the institution?—None, except in one or two cases. We have one unfortunate man there, whom it is a charity to restrain at times, and at other times he is as quiet as any one in this room.

3016. What restraint is used with him when he is violent?—He is put into a padded room and shut up. He will roar and try to break every thing he possibly could; and if let loose, he would destroy every person he could. He is a very powerful and violent man, and we use a slight restraint with him—straps merely on his arms—when an attack is expected to be coming on him. The attendants know when it is coming, by a peculiar mode he has of laughing for a day or two before, after which he will break out violently. He will endeavour then to kill any one near him. The straps are not painful.

3017. Is that considered an incurable case?—I am afraid it is: it is connected with epilepsy; and I do not think insanity and epilepsy are curable—that is my experience.

3018. Is any report made when restraint is practised?—Not in a case of that kind, it is so frequent; perhaps every week there will be restraint of that kind. Two servants know when it is necessary, and they tell the Governor, and he permits it. They never do it without his permission. That is the only case under restraint.

3019. It is stated the female patients are not in the habit of taking exercise in the open air, except on Sundays and a couple of days in the week?—Yes. I do not approve of that. The difficulty arises from the ground not being divided. If the females were let out when the men were out, they would get into contact, and confusion would arise. In fine weather they are let out in the evening, and the men are brought in. I have often suggested that the ground might be divided, and have a piece railed off, in which the females could exercise.

3020. Would the sacrifice of an hour's labour on the part of the men previous to dinner time admit of that hour being allocated for the females to walk about?—It might; but they like to make the men work as long as they can.

3021. You have spoken of chaplains being attached to the institution: what is your opinion as to the advantage of the attendance of ministers of religion upon insane persons?—On the whole, I think it is rather useful than otherwise. I know there is a difference of opinion about it. I have observed that, on the days of service, two or three very weak-minded creatures were more excited, and their minds were more full of religious notions, and they even used opprobrious epithets; but, on the whole, the inmates generally are decidedly pleased with religious ministrations, and I think it improves them. I should be sorry to see religious service done away with in the institution, for the inmates behave very well during service, and very seldom any of them have to be removed; and I think any thing that makes a patient conduct himself quietly and calmly even for an hour or so, when it is not in the nature of restraint, is of advantage.

3022. Would the deprivation of the means of attending religious worship have an injurious effect upon the minds of patients in the habit of attending it?—Yes. I am for keeping up divine worship in the institution. There are few people so totally mad as to be altogether insensible to religious duties. They have lucid intervals when the mind may be acted upon by various things, and religion is one of those that act beneficially. At the same time, I think too much interference, or an indiscriminate supply of religious books, or any thing of a disputatious nature or of a controversial character, would be extremely injurious. They are very well managed, however, in the Dundrum Asylum, as far as my observation goes, by the two chaplains attending at present.

3623. Of course, if you felt that the effect of religious ministrations was injurious as regards the patients, you would say that their attendance at divine worship was not desirable?—Yes; and I would forbid a patient to go to prayers on any particular day, when it would not be of service to him.

3624. When a patient is so much recovered in the institution as to lead you to believe he is no longer insane, what steps are taken to communicate with the proper authorities on the subject?—The Governor and I draw up a joint report, and submit it to the Chief Secretary or to the Lord Lieutenant, for him to decide upon it. I always feel a great deal of diffidence and a great deal of timidity in giving any such report, because I know that very often those people appear very well, whether from presence or self-control, for a time; and I am apprehensive of letting many of them out again, lest they would relapse when they went back to their old haunts. Many of these we have in the asylum are not what I call very insane; there is a vast deal of cunning amongst many of them. They have, perhaps, done acts in their time that might pass for those of insane persons; and when on trial, or at the time of receiving sentence, they have feigned madness, or their friends have come forward and made out a strong case of madness for them. I think there are many persons in the asylum who are not, strictly speaking, insane enough to be confined; but at the same time I think it would be very dangerous to let them out; and the circumstance of their having once escaped punishment by a plea of insanity would make them reckless in running into crime again, knowing that they might on another occasion set up the same plea. I should be always more willing to recommend the discharge of persons, if I thought they were to be removed to another country by their friends.

3625. Does not this difficulty arise with respect to a patient who may be a prisoner on the ground of insanity, that although ordered to be detained during the pleasure of the Lord Lieutenant, yet once he is transferred to a lunatic asylum, it would not be considered proper to remove him to a goal, where, in point of fact, he would be undergoing punishment to which he was not sentenced?—Yes; it is a case full of difficulty.

3626. The insane are liable to internal and local diseases, spasmodic diseases, and accidents to which the sane are liable, who would you charge with the responsibility of treating them for those diseases, as a general principle?—I think that the two medical men should always act together. They both feel anxious with respect to every case, and both are equally responsible where they are acting together. That is the way that Dr. Corbet and I have always felt.

3627. In the cases last referred to, would the medical officer of the institution, who is conversant with the treatment of lunatics generally, have any advantage in their treatment beyond the visiting physician, who is more familiar with general disease?—I think it is possible; but the visiting physician would soon make himself acquainted with the cases.

3628. The difference would not be sufficient, in your opinion, to obviate the necessity of having a visiting physician?—I think not.

3629. With whom would you leave the medical responsibility of treating cases of internal disease, or epidemic disease, or accidents which occur amongst the insane, apart from the treatment of their insanity?—I think partly to the visiting physician. Dr. Corbet and I both take a part in the treatment of such cases at the asylum.

3630. Suppose a difference of opinion arose, with whom ought the main responsibility rest?—I think the direction was, the visiting physician should be the principal, for it is his special duty to attend to the health of the patients. The resident medical man has to attend to the whole establishment, and to the moral care of the patients, and to carry out the directions of the visiting physician. We have never had any difference of opinion between us that would render it necessary for us to decide who was chiefly responsible.

3631. Do you think it would be well to have a visiting medical officer in every institution, as well as the manager, who should have the charge of the insane, as insane patients?—I think it would be very advisable.

3632. Would a medical manager be sufficient to take charge both of the cases of insanity as such, and the cases of ordinary disease as such, or would there be any objection to his being placed in the charge of all?—I think it would be far better for him to have the assistance of the visiting physician, especially in cases of acute disease, or diseases apart from insanity.

3633. Why do you think it would be advisable to have the visiting physician's assistance in such cases?—In the first place, the visiting physician is a man more in general practice, and pays more attention to disease in general than the mere medical manager of an institution can do, as he is confined to a particular class of patients; and I think it is of great advantage to the resident medical manager to have the occasional assistance of the visiting physician, who possesses a more extended practice.

3634. Are there fireplaces in the ordinary sleeping rooms of the institution?—No.

3635. Would it be advisable, then, to treat cases of pulmonary disease, which form so large a proportion of the diseases amongst the insane in this climate, in those ordinary sleeping apartments which have no fireplaces?—It is not advisable, and I generally remove such cases to the warmer apartments on one of the corridors. There are two apartments with fireplaces; and if we have cases that require warm temperature, we place them in one of those rooms.

3636. Would an infirmary give you that advantage?—Yes.

3637. Nunsentending is equally necessary with medical treatment: do you think there can be as efficient nunsentending where patients are scattered through the various sleeping apartments of an asylum as if the sick were collected in an infirmary?—I think certainly not; and it would be well to have them in an infirmary if there was any considerable number of sick; but we have very little sickness in our asylum.

3038. Then, considering both the necessity of equable temperature and economy in nursing, is it your opinion that when there are cases of disease at all serious, it would be better to have them in an infirmary appropriated for the sick, than to have them treated in separate rooms throughout the asylum?—Yes. I may here also observe, that we want in that asylum additional wards or rooms for noisy or refractory patients. It is very desirable to classify patients as far as possible. I do not mean classifying them with reference to forms of insanity, but placing the quiet, gentle, or very weak-minded but docile class, apart from the rude, noisy, swearing, and foul-speaking persons that are occasionally met with in the asylum.

THE RICHMOND DISTRICT ASYLUM (in continuation from page 117).

The Rev. James Faulkner sworn and examined.

3039. I believe you are the Roman Catholic Chaplain to the Richmond Lunatic Asylum?—Yes.

3041. What are the arrangements for the celebration of Divine worship in that institution?—If the question be as to chapel or church accommodation, I have to state that a chapel has been lately built, in either end of which is performed, on Sundays, Divine worship. The larger portion of the building is given to the Catholic inmates, and the smaller portion to the Protestant inmates. A screen runs between the two places set apart for Divine worship.

3042. What proportion of the inmates of the Catholic persuasion usually attend Divine worship?—I should say, without undertaking to be perfectly accurate, at least 300. The number of Catholic patients in the institution is about 511, according to a return I have recently received.

3043. Is their demeanour when attending Divine service usually decorous?—Extremely so.

3044. Do you feel it your duty to give any instructions or to preach sermons on Sundays?—Almost invariably.

3045. Do you attend during the week also at the institution?—Yes; I visit daily, except when ill, which very rarely occurs. I frequently go in more than once in a day, for after I have paid my morning visit, I am sometimes called on in the evening to attend persons who get suddenly ill, such as apoplectic patients and persons of that class.

3046. On each occasion of your daily visits do you enter into communication on religious matters with those patients of your persuasion who may not be suffering from sickness, or may not be in danger of death?—Rarely upon the subject of religion, except a person may ask my opinion upon a particular point, or put to me a particular religious question—then I endeavour to relieve their minds, and to give them consolation.

3047. In visiting the asylum on those occasions do you communicate with any of the authorities of the institution previous to seeing a patient, or are you enabled at once to proceed to the ward where the patient may be whom you desire to see?—I proceed at once to the division, except when called upon to attend, and when an official report has been made for my attendance.

3049. I understand you feel you should be guided in a great degree by the state of a patient in offering him any religious consolation?—Yes. I should add that any, even the most excited patient in the asylum, when visited by me, very often becomes tranquil, and receives me, although he or she may treat any other person, or officer of the institution, roughly, and perhaps abuse them, even at that time the patients will treat me, as a clergyman, with the greatest possible respect, and listen attentively to what I say.

3050. How many years have you been chaplain to the institution?—Nearly eight years. I was appointed on the 24th July, 1849, I believe.

3051. Were you the first Roman Catholic chaplain to the institution, or did you succeed others?—I succeeded the Rev. Dr. Murphy, who was preceded by several other chaplains.

3052. Is it your opinion, from your eight years' experience of the institution, that your ministrations, as a clergyman, have been of great value to the patients, and attended with great advantage to them?—I think so.

3053. What proportion of the 300 who attend worship do you conceive are really capable of benefiting by any religious instructions that may be afforded?—I consider all who go there are capable of benefiting. Of the other 200 who do not come, some might be improved by it; but it is not considered prudent to send them to a place of worship.

Religious ministrations and services, made for the Roman Catholic patients.

Advantage of religious instruction.

Sometimes they are epileptic, and subject to fits, and therefore it is not considered advisable to send them; others are idiots, who cannot profit by instruction.

3054. My question is based upon the supposition that there might be many whose conduct would be orderly and docorous, and yet, at the same time, whose intellect would be so far impaired as to prevent their profiting in any great degree by instruction?—That might be. There is scarcely one of those who go to mass on Sunday;—do not profit by religious instruction. Those who are incapable of receiving any benefit, very generally are not allowed to come, acting under the advice of the doctor, and at my own suggestion.

3056. Are there any matters connected with the institution to which you think it advisable to call the attention of the Commissioners?—In reference to the place of worship, I think it is necessary, in the first instance, to remark to the Commissioners that we have nothing like suitable accommodation for the number of patients belonging to the Catholic persuasion who attend. It was originally built, as I was told, to afford accommodation to 300 patients. At present we have more than 350 Catholics who attend, and we have only a portion of the building set apart for Catholic worship, although if we had the whole of the building, it would be scarcely enough. From our being crowded in that way, a great inconvenience arises. If such patients are crowded closely together, they have not the same control as others over their temper, and very often one may turn around upon his neighbour, and say, angrily, "why do you press upon me," or something of that kind. Such things are very rare, yet, we are liable to such interruptions. The church accommodation is extremely insufficient, and it is felt to be so both by the Protestant chaplain and myself.

Chapel accommodation.

3057. If the whole of the building were appropriated to Roman Catholics during their service, and equally to Protestants during their service, as is the case in gaols, might not the difficulty be obviated?—It might; but it would result in great inconvenience, for this reason: at present a great number of Roman Catholics refuse to go even into the place of worship, because the worship of persons belonging to another persuasion is carried on in the same house—I speak of many of the lunatic patients. In gaols or workhouses, such an arrangement might be carried out; but we must try to defer to the opinions or wishes of those poor creatures, who are insane. You can reason with persons in prisons or workhouses; but you cannot with the insane, and even now a great many of them stop away from Divine worship in consequence of what I state; and I must add, that there are some Protestants in the house, who, if they went into a Catholic place of worship, and found there a picture representing the Crucifixion or the Blessed Virgin, or any thing of that kind, it is almost perfectly certain they would break down such things. I know persons in the house who would do it. Having the same place of worship for persons of the two religions would be extremely inconvenient in such an institution, and, in my opinion, would never work well. I should perhaps state, that the Protestant chaplain and myself have both represented this inconvenience to the Board of Governors, who have represented the matter to the present Lord Lieutenant.

3058. Is there any other matter you would desire to call our attention to?—You asked me a question a while ago relative to the effect my ministrations have upon the patients. I have sent in a report lately to the Governors, in every word of which they state they agree; and this report sets out in detail several instances of the most extraordinary effect which my ministrations have had upon patients. If you wish me to produce a copy of the report I will. It is connected with my salary. I thought I was required to represent the effect of my ministrations in the institution, and, accordingly, I went into details, and they are recorded in this document, in every word of which, recommending it to the Privy Council, the Board stated they agreed. (Same is delivered in.) I have also to state that I was requested some time ago to inspect the food of the institution in conjunction with the Protestant chaplain and the physicians.

Effect of religious ministrations.

3059. Has your inspection of the food caused you to be satisfied with that which is usually supplied?—Formerly our inspection of the food led us to believe the contractors had not done their duty as well as they should. We reported accordingly to the Board, and three of the contractors, in the habit of supplying the institution, were discontinued, and new contractors were appointed, who sent in meat, bread, and milk, of an excellent description lately. I would here remark, that the reception of any gratuity or dowry by any officer of the institution from a contractor should be punished, if discovered, by immediate dismissal. My eight years' experience leads me to think such a course would be desirable.

Inspection of food.

3060. At present you have no reason to believe the food is of an inferior quality?—At present it is very good.

3062. From your constant visits to the asylum you are enabled to form some opinion as to the attendants who are employed. Have you found, generally speaking, that they are a class fitted, from their intelligence, for the care of lunatic patients?—Well, with respect to their intelligence, we have some of them who were attendants in a lunatic asylum some twenty-five or twenty years ago, when severity and cruelty, I am only too much afraid, were the order of the day. Those persons have not forgotten their old habits of being cruel towards the patients, and, therefore, I am not perfectly prepared to say that every thing is most satisfactory in that respect.

The attendants.

DEBATES.

The Richmond
District Asylum.
Rev. J. Fanshawe.

Superintendence Act.

3063. Are many of the attendants there considerably advanced in life?—Many of them. Some of them are totally inefficient, and in consequence of not having pensions to enable them to support themselves in their decline of life, the Governors do not send them out of the place, and hence it is they are more a burden in the institution than a service; though scarcely able to do any thing in the place, they are still continued on as a matter of mercy.

3064. Are you aware whether it is in contemplation, or whether any steps have been taken, to pension off these attendants?—The pension spoken of last year, as about to be awarded to those persons by Sir Robert Ferguson's original bill gave great satisfaction; but the Act that was ultimately passed, gave no satisfaction on that score, so much so, that even the oldest and most infirm servants and officers in the house, all totally declined to accept any pension under it.

Laxity of discipline.

3065. Your long connexion with the institution and your daily visits must have afforded you an opportunity of judging whether proper order and discipline have been maintained in the Richmond Asylum: what is your opinion generally on that subject?—I regret to say that, from the want of the necessary supervision, order and discipline are not as strictly enforced as would be desirable.

3066. Do you mean amongst the patients, or amongst the attendants and domestic generally?—I mean that, from the want of the ruling authorities being as strict and active as it would be desirable they should be, the attendants are not as strict in discharging their duties towards the patients as they ought to be.

3067. To what do your observations particularly apply?—I mean that, in a very extensive lunatic asylum, such as the Richmond, where the ruling authorities are not to be expected almost every hour, night and day, and when it is known there is no fear of their coming round, several delinquencies, and even several acts of cruelty towards the patients, very often are the result.

3068. To what particular acts of cruelty do you refer?—Acts of cruelty on the part of the attendants towards the patients.

3069. Have you yourself observed those acts, or have you received information about them?—I speak from my own observation; any thing by hearsay I would not wish to give in evidence.

3070. Do you consider the establishment itself too large for the supervision of one master and matron?—I would not undertake to say that; but I say, that if you have one master and one matron, that they must be extremely efficient, active, and energetic in such an institution; and they must be expected to visit at all hours, to prevent cruelty or disorder. And while upon that point I am most desirous to remark that we have no established rules in the place to direct the officers or the subordinate servants in the house in their different departments; we have not a code of rules or laws, so that each person would know his respective duties.

3071. Are you aware of the regulations of the Privy Council of 1843, which prescribe the duties of each officer?—Yes; they prescribe, in a certain general way, some few duties, but, I think, not so much in detail as would be desirable for each officer and servant to have. It would be desirable to have the line well marked out for them to guide them in the discharge of their duties.

Drunkenness.

3072. Have frequent cases of drunkenness on the part of the attendants been brought before the Board?—The document that I have just now placed before you shows that frequent cases have occurred, for the words of the Board to me are to that effect.

3073. Would you be so good as to read the resolution of the Board to which you refer?—“Resolved.—Inasmuch as repeated complaints have been made to the Board of servants being found in a state of intoxication in the asylum, the chaplains be requested to announce, after divine service, that any attendant who, for the future, be discovered drunk, is to be immediately discharged by the Manager. Board-room, Richmond District Lunatic Asylum, 22nd April, 1856.”

3074. Do you know by whom the complaints were made which led to this resolution being adopted?—I think by the local resident officers.

3075. Has there been any amendment lately on the part of the attendants as regards sobriety?—Well, I should hope so. I have not heard so many complaints lately on the subject as I did before.

3076. I understand that your observations generally go to this, that the establishment is not as efficiently conducted as an institution of its size would require to be?—Precisely.

3077. Have you been requested by the Board to report to them all cases affecting the morality and well-being of the institution?—Yes.

3078. Did that arise from occurrences taking place in the institution, which involved serious immorality on the part of domestics connected with the establishment?—Yes.

3079. The request of the Board to which you have referred is, I believe, contained in the Minutes of their proceedings, under date “21st September, 1852?”—Yes.

Course of Officers
by Board.

3080. Was not a vote of censure passed on the manager and matron on that occasion for laxity of discipline and the want of general supervision which prevailed?—Yes. I think it would prevent a great many evil results if the families, male and female, of the resident officers had no communication with the patients or the servants of such an institution, and that the officers alone should deal with the patients and the servants; for the members of the officers' families, both male and female, may do what is improper, without the knowledge of the officers themselves.

3081. Has the discipline of the institution improved since this proceeding in 1852?—I think it has considerably.

3282. Have you yourself had occasion to remonstrate with the manager or matron, or any of the superior officers, with reference to the conduct of the attendants towards the patients?—When I found cases of cruelty to have occurred on the part of the attendants towards the patients, I generally represented the matter to the physician in that particular department, finding it of little use to make the representation to the manager or matron.

3283. Have you found your representations attended with any beneficial result when made in the manner which you have described?—Sometimes.

3285. Do you know, from your experience, whether the attendants are in the habit of having recourse to restraint without any authority or direction from the medical officer or manager?—I believe it sometimes happens with the old servants of the institution.

3286. Have you seen violence used to patients by the attendants, without their having been actually put under regular mechanical restraint?—I have frequently seen patients put under severe restraint; and, upon inquiry, found that it was not done by order of the doctor. The practice of twisting the arm by a person behind the back, which is a very severe mode of torture, and subdues the patient at once, and causes him to scream, is extremely objectionable. Sometimes a sheet or a coverl is thrown across the head of a patient, who is blindfolded thereby, and is dragged off to some cell, when he becomes any way useful; and it has been stated to me, by patients and others on whom I can rely with confidence, that patients have been dragged into beds, and have received cold shower baths, without the order of the doctor.

3287. Have you yourself seen the violence to which you have referred—that of twisting the arms behind the back—practised upon the patients?—Not that particularly; but I have seen an instance of the sheet or coverl thrown over the head of a patient, even by a person in authority. Some years ago I saw it done with a patient named Sarah Maguire; and, from the quickness with which it was performed, it seemed to be a matter of ordinary occurrence.

3288. Have you represented those things to the medical officer?—Yes; I took notes of those cases, and I frequently mentioned them to Dr. Mollan, the senior physician.

3289. Did you ascertain from him whether he approved or disapproved of those proceedings?—He disapproved of them, and he told me he was perfectly dissatisfied with the system; but that it was better not than to report, as we were likely to have sweeping changes in the place.

3290. Have any such sweeping changes since taken place?—I cannot tell what he exactly meant when he made that statement, or what he referred to; but I understood him to mean changes in consequence of the Commission now in operation. The second case to which I refer, and which I reported to Dr. Mollan, was that of Miss Connolly, who, when complaining to the matron of harsh treatment by an attendant in the morning, was, in the presence of the matron, dragged from the day-room along the corridor, and placed in a cell. That was Miss Connolly's statement.

3291. Was the patient violent at the time?—She is never violent; she is a most gentle, quiet, inoffensive person.

3292. Has the evidence which you have given, as regards cases of restraint and violence, reference to both the old and new Richmond Asylum?—Considerably more to the old than to the new.

3293. Are we to understand that such practices do occur at the new asylum also?—I should say, very rarely. We have an excellent matron in the new asylum, who is constantly through it, and is constantly exposed at every hour. There is no cruelty in that part of the establishment, except very rare instances, which are scarcely worth mentioning.

3294. Have you made representations to any officer in the new asylum when those cases came under your observation?—Yes.

3295. With what result?—An expression of disapproval on the part of the officer to whom I made the representation, and a guarantee that such would not occur again.

3296. I presume, before your appointment as chaplain to this institution, you discharged parochial duties in some portion of the archdiocese of Dublin?—Yes; I was curate of Lincan.

3297. What is your opinion as to the condition of the insane of the farming class, that may not be considered exactly pauper lunatics, and whose friends may not be sufficiently wealthy to provide for them in a private asylum?—I think the present arrangement respecting that class is most unsatisfactory; for their friends are not able to place them in a private lunatic asylum, and they have a decided objection to subscribe to the affidavit stating that the patient is a pauper.

3298. Does that lead, so far as your experience goes, to many of those lunatics being detained in their homes, and therefore not enjoying the benefits of curative treatment?—I am not personally aware of many instances of that kind, but I know that it has a most injurious effect upon persons of that class, who have been formerly respectable to some extent, to oblige them to beard in a district asylum with the unfortunate felons from gaols.

3299. Then we are to understand that you do not consider it advisable that patients of this middle class should be admitted into pauper lunatic asylums?—I think it would be most desirable to have a place set apart for those people, whose friends could pay something towards their support, according to the amount of their means, and not to have them to beard with persons of a very inferior class, which would irritate and wound their feelings.

3100. You advocate, therefore, the establishment of wards for a certain class of paying patients?—I think it would be highly desirable.

3101. From your experience, as a clergyman who discharged parochial duties, do you think there is any disposition on the part of the poorer classes to keep their lunatic relatives at home, rather than allow them to go to asylums?—I have not, at this moment, any instance of the kind before my mind.

3102. We want to know whether there is any indisposition or not on the part of the poorer classes to send their lunatic relatives to asylums, or whether they wished to keep them at home?—I have not known any instance of relatives being desirous of sending them, when insane, to lunatic asylums; but I have known instances in which they wished to keep them in the asylum after they had been, to a certain extent, cured in it, for there is a great fear of such persons outside.

3103. I believe you are the Protestant Chaplain of the Richmond Lunatic Asylum?—

I am.
3104. For what length of time have you held that office?—Since March, 1852.

3105. In the capacity of chaplain, do you visit the asylum more than on those occasions when Divine worship is celebrated by you there?—I go to see sick persons and others.

3106. Is every facility afforded you in your visits?—Always.

3107. Have cases ever arisen where the manager of the institution, or the medical attendant, has felt it necessary to represent that communication on your part with a patient was not desirable?—Never, that I remember.

3108. Are you satisfied, from your experience, of the advantage of the attendance of chaplains on persons of unsound mind?—Certainly; I have seen many advantages follow frequently from my ministrations to sick patients, especially to those who are dying. Religious ministrations to Protestant inmates.

3109. What proportion of the members of the Established Church in the institution usually attend Divine service?—I think about three-fourths.

3110. Has their conduct been at all times decorous?—Not at all times; but generally speaking exceedingly good.

3111. Are you satisfied with the arrangements which have been made for the performance of Divine worship?—I should prefer a distinct place of worship; the present arrangement is inconvenient. The Roman Catholic chaplain and myself have the same place of worship; and the Protestants have to wait a considerable time till the Roman Catholic service is over, which exposes the patients to the weather. Last Sunday we were half an hour in the rain before we could get in. Chapel accommodation.

3112. The church, which has been erected for the use of the two communions, is a detached building, a considerable distance from the institution?—It is a long way from the old building, and a long way also from the new.

3113. Could not an arrangement be made, by which sufficient time would be allowed for the performance of the service of one church before the service of the other commenced, so as not at all to admit of any reasonable chance of your being detained?—It so happens that both the Rev. Mr. Faulkner and myself have other engagements. He occupies from nine till ten o'clock, and I from ten to eleven; sometimes his service is prolonged, and our people are detained outside.

3114. There is no shed or apartment adjoining the church where they could be protected from the weather?—None at all; the infirmary is the only place.

3115. Have you been enabled to procure, when you required them, the necessary books for the instruction of your people?—Always; every facility is given by the Board. Books, &c.

3116. From your constant attendance at the asylum, perhaps you have been enabled to form some opinion of how far the patients have profited from reading, even of a secular character?—There is such a variety of insanity, that in many cases providing a book for a patient, or even allowing him to church, would not be of any use, I believe; but in many more cases there is a beneficial effect.

3117. Is there any provision made in the asylum for the supply of books to patients, not speaking of religious books?—Not sufficient. There is a small library; but it is very small.

3118. What is your opinion, from your acquaintance with the asylum during the four years of your connexion with it, as to the order and discipline maintained there?—Well, I never had an opportunity of comparing it with any other asylum; but I consider it exceedingly orderly and well managed. Now and then I have had occasion to remark upon the irregularity of servants; nothing beyond that. Treatment of patients—discipline.

3119. Irregularity of what character?—Losing their temper with the patients. I had occasion lately to bring a matter of that kind before the Board.

3120. Will you state briefly the circumstances of that case?—In the infirmary, on one occasion, which I visited after my usual rounds, I saw one of the nurses in violent altercation with a very irritable patient. The result was, that the patient rejoined in as sharp terms as the nurse, and the scene was, I thought, very unbecoming. I remonstrated with the nurse, and she seemed to think very little of my remonstrance. So I passed on; but I thought her conduct so improper that I wrote to the Board at once, and she was degraded. She had been first nurse, and was then degraded to a very inferior position in the house.

3121. Had she used any personal violence towards the patient?—I believe not; but she used abusive language.

3122. Have any cases of personal violence on the part of the attendants towards the patients come to your knowledge?—Never.

DEBATE.

Rev. Alex. Leaper.

3122. Have patients complained frequently of bad treatment that they received?—Yes; I have heard complaints from time to time.

3124. Of restraint being improperly applied?—I have heard of things of the kind. I do not remember any definite case. Generally, I think, the attendants are very kind and considerate.

3125. Without placing more reliance than is fair to be placed upon statements made by persons of unsound mind, is it your opinion that any great harshness is used by the attendants towards the patients?—Well, I have no reason to say that I believe there is extreme harshness used. I was never myself a witness to any thing of the kind.

3126. Have you had reason to know whether drunkenness prevailed amongst the domestics to any extent?—Yes.

3127. I believe a communication was made to the chaplain by the Board of Governors with reference to that?—Yes.

3128. Does your experience lead you to believe that that resolution of the Governors was founded upon sufficient data?—Indeed, I believe so.

3129. The resolution to which I refer is a notification that in future cases of drunkenness will be punished with dismissal?—Yes.

3130. Have you observed any improvement in the conduct of the servants in that respect since the adoption of that resolution?—Well, I never knew a case since that.

3131. Did you before?—Yes; persons were dismissed by the Board for it. It was a matter of notoriety.

3132. Have cases of immorality occurred during the period of which you have been chaplain?—Yes; and I believe the guilty parties were dismissed.

3133. To what do you attribute the prevalence of those drunken habits amongst the servants, and the occurrence of those immoral proceedings in an establishment where they would be supposed to be prevented?—There is a great number of human beings assembled there, and wherever that is the case there is very frequently great irregularity.

3134. Was the surveillance of the establishment sufficiently minute and strict on the part of those charged with the management?—As I am a mere visitor, I could not speak as to that.

3135. Have you been requested by the Board to inspect from time to time the provisions which are received?—Yes; I remember I got one notice of the kind, which was modified by a subsequent letter. The first was a peremptory one, and I should have resisted it, certainly; for I did not think it my duty, as chaplain, to inspect the food of the house.

3136. You have exercised that inspection from time to time?—Never officially; I have heard complaints, and I have mentioned those complaints to the Governor, and had conversation with the people of the place about it; but I never brought the matter formally before the Board.

3137. Have there been any recent complaints of the bad quality of the provisions?—Not recently; but there were very great complaints, and, I think, well grounded—about four months since.

3138. Is there any thing you would wish to suggest with reference to the subject of our inquiry—the condition of this institution and the treatment of the patients?—I would just make one suggestion that I would think very desirable to have adopted, and that is, that in each division there should be at least one nurse of each persuasion. The patients would have then somebody always at hand to sympathise with them, and those attendants would know at once when a clergyman was to be sent for; and I think it would tend very much to the comfort of the patients to feel that they had some one of their own religion about them, which is not the case now.

3139. You say nurses; but, of course, you mean male attendants also on the male side?—I mean a nurse or keeper, as the case may be; that a Protestant patient should have a Protestant attendant to communicate with, and the Roman Catholics have the same advantage.

3140. Have you reason to believe there is any dilatoriness in sending for you, as a clergyman, to attend to any member of your persuasion?—Well, I could not absolutely point out any particular case; but I know very well that certain Protestant patients, who are not very insane, have complained to me of not having one near them to sympathise with them, to see whether they wanted a book, or to whom they might state that they required me, and so on.

3141. Your visits are, I believe, entered in a book kept for the purpose?—Yes.

3142. When you have any representations to make to the Board of Governors, do you make them verbally, or in any book for that purpose?—I generally write to the Board.

3143. With reference to your suggestion that a distinct place of worship should be provided for the members of each church, are you aware that there is any indisposition on the part of any members of your flock to go to a church in a portion of which Roman Catholic service is performed?—Yes; and that is the reason that some of them will not go to service; they say it is not a church at all. To some violent patients it is a continual source of irritation, the fact of there being a Roman Catholic chapel under the same roof.

3144. Do you think that objection would have arisen in their minds if the church had not been separated or divided; but had been, on the contrary, left like workhouse and god chapels?—In my opinion, they would not be excited, provided the altar in the Roman Catholic chapel, and the decorations, were covered, as is usual in the cases you have mentioned. I proposed, upon one occasion, that a curtain should be drawn across the altar, &c., and that the partition-wall should be taken down. I wrote a letter on the subject to the Board of Governors, and I also mentioned it to the Lord Lieutenant when he visited the establishment some time last year.

3145. Have any steps been taken in consequence?—Nothing has been done as yet. The Rev. Mr. Faulkner is very anxious about it. There was a little difference of opinion between us on the subject. He desired a distinct place of worship; I thought if the partition was taken down, and what I suggested done, it would answer the purpose.

3146. Have you any members of the Presbyterian body attending your service?—Several, and also Wesleyan Methodists.

3147. Is there any other matter you would wish to bring under the notice of the Commissioners?—I think a good library would be very important. I lend my own books very frequently to patients. There is a man reading Hebrew there; he is a very good Hebrew scholar; and there is another who had formerly been a scholar in Trinity College, to whom I lend some classical books; he was both scholar and scholar. A good library, not purely religious, with amusing and instructive books, would be very important and beneficial.

WILLIAM CORBET, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S.L., further examined on oath.

3148. I understood from your examination on yesterday that no medical journal, such as I pointed out, is kept in the establishment?—I am not aware that any medical journal is kept except the Case Book and my Daily Note Book, which is the basis of my Case Book.

3149. There appears to be a book called a "Daily Report Book"?—Yes.

3150. Was the form of that book furnished by the Inspectors?—I am not exactly certain; it was clearly under the direction of the Inspectors that it was prepared.

3151. That book gives a statement of the manner in which the patients are employed?—Yes.

3152. It also gives a statement of the consumption of various articles in the house on each day?—Yes.

3153. Is there any book which gives a statement of the medical condition of the patients on each day?—There is not, except, as I say, my own note-book.

3154. Is there any book which records the cases of restraint or seclusion upon each day?—Nothing further than my note-book; and such cases are as very rare, that I can turn easily to them. I have those things marked over, so that I can turn to a particular case; beyond that there is nothing to show restraint or seclusion.

3155. When such a thing does occur, is it entered in any book?—No; not further than being put in my note-book.

3156. Would such a case be transferred to your Case Book from your note-book?—Yes.

3157. Is there any thing kept in the institution, showing the hours at which the visiting physician attends each day?—Yes; there is a Book of Attendance, signed by the chaplain and the medical attendant.

3158. When wine or hospital extras are ordered for patients, in what manner are instructions conveyed to the nurses, as to the parties who are to receive those extras?—Either myself or Dr. Harrison informs them; I usually do that myself.

3159. Is the instruction given verbally or in writing?—Generally verbally, as I go round; and I also speak to the clerk about it. Latterly I have got a book, in which I make a pencil entry of any thing that is out of the ordinary course.

3160. When a patient is ordered those extras, do they continue from that day, unless you give orders to the contrary?—They may sometimes have continued a little while longer than I probably intended; but not long at any time.

3161. Do the Inspectors record their visits on each occasion that they come to the asylum?—I think it has very often occurred that they did not record them; but they ought to do so.

3162. How frequently are their visits paid?—I cannot take on myself to say how often; sometimes they are more frequent than at other times. I think as long as two months has passed without their coming; but that is not a frequent case. At the same time, I must say that I have, in the intermediate time, seen the Inspectors very frequently, and they have asked me questions about the asylum, and I have brought matters under their notice. I usually see them in or about twice a week.

3163. You stated in your examination yesterday that you did not get as full information as you would desire on the occasion of lunatics being transferred to the asylum?—Frequently I have not got as much information about them as I would wish.

3164. I observe that, in the case of William Blodden, there is no entry whatever as to his crime?—It was not forwarded to us. The crime was a shameful one, and, I suppose, that was the reason they did not send it. There was a particular reason for not making that statement in his case, if we could avoid it.

3165. Was it not of importance that you should have been made aware of his crime as well as that of any other inmate?—I am perfectly cognizant of what was imputed to him.

3166. I observe that the column which is intended to contain a statement of the mental and bodily health and condition of the patients, on admission, is frequently not filled up; can you explain the cause of that?—No; except that occasionally we would wish to have a little time to consider before making the entry.

Central Criminal
Asylum, Dendrum.
William Corbet, Esq.,
M.D., F.R.C.S.D.
Entries respecting
patients.

3167. My observation has reference to entries of enace four years back?—There may be some other book that will, probably, give supplemental evidence of their state when they came in.

3168. I presume this book now before me is to be kept by you?—By the clerk.

3169. The entries are to be made from your own observation of the state of the patients, and are not merely to be transcribed from any document you receive with a person when admitted?—At times the entry is taken from a document accompanying the patient.

3170. I observe, in some cases, entries to this effect: for instance, in the case of Catherine Coleman, under the heading of the "State of Mental and Bodily Health on Admission," the entry is, "Sound in mind and body;" does that mean that the patient was not insane?—That would clearly be the inference. Perhaps that is taken from the very return we got; but since that time she has shown that she was not perfectly sound in mind. When a person is brought in we cannot well see at once whether he or she is sound in mind and body, or in either; we must have some experience of a person before we can determine that.

3171. On reference to the papers in that case, I observe that the certificate of the medical attendant of the Carlow Asylum, from which she was transferred at the opening of the Central Criminal Asylum, states that she was then sound in mind?—That is the explanation of the entry in the book.

3172. How soon after she came to the Dundrum Asylum did she exhibit signs of insanity?—She is always weak in mind; but she occasionally gets into passionate fits.

3173. Am I to understand that the entries in the column which purports to convey a statement of the mental and bodily health of the patients on admission, used at first to be filled up from the medical certificate accompanying the warrant of transmission, and not from your own personal observation?—That is my impression.

3174. But that for some time past you have abstained from making any entry at all, being satisfied with the note made in your own Case Book?—Yes; being satisfied with that and the return given to the Inspectors.

3175. I observe in the register the case of "John Daly, admitted 14th January, 1851," with respect to whom there is no statement whatever?—I detail from my own notes the circumstances of this case: "John Daly, admitted 14th January, 1851, on letter from the Inspector. This man is quite sane; had been three years in the Carlow Asylum, and lately was admitted to his liberty, on condition of his quitting the kingdom. He embarked; but the vessel was wrecked, and he got to Dublin, where, having reported himself, he got the letter above referred to." I have an entry, dated October 15th: "Has been constantly steady and useful as a caretaker in the grounds." Under date November 10th: "Has been put under pay by the Inspector, Dr. Nugent, and forms one of the servants of the establishment." There is an entry on the 15th April, 1855, stating "He got leave to go to Dublin;" he deserted from his post.

3177. Did he exhibit any signs of insanity during the period that he was in the Dundrum Asylum?—None, properly speaking, of insanity, except that he was a man that went out of his way to be troublesome; where it was his interest to be steady and quiet, he could not keep himself so. Since his removal to the Philipstown Depot he has been discharged altogether, by order of the Lord Lieutenant.

3178. In the case of John McCann, it appears that he was transferred to your asylum by warrant of the Lord Lieutenant, dated 5th July: did you ever receive any warrant for his removal?—Only a letter from Dr. Nugent, stating that he had the Lord Lieutenant's warrant for his removal. I have it entered, "Under a letter from Dr. Nugent, stating that it was so ordered by the Lord Lieutenant," to be transferred to Dr. Eustace's asylum.

3179. No warrant was ever received by you, releasing him from the custody in which the previous warrant had placed him?—Nothing, except the letter.

3180. Did you feel justified in allowing the prisoner, who was in your custody under the warrant, to be removed without a warrant for the purpose?—I had the letter stating the Lord Lieutenant made such an order.

3181. In the case of Catherine O'Brien, who appears to have been received by you on the 8th of June, 1853, and transmitted to Grangegreen Prison on the 14th of November, 1856, it appears that the warrant for her commitment to the Central Criminal Asylum states her to have become insane, and that is on the authority of the certificate of Alexander Read, surgeon, and Aweley Banon, M.D.; but it does not appear that the certificate of Surgeon Read was transmitted with the warrant, and that of Dr. Banon merely states that she has a strong tendency to mischief, and is excitable: did that person exhibit any symptoms of insanity when in the asylum?—She was very violent at different times, without much cause, but that was the only sign of insanity.

3182. Was she eventually discharged as a sane patient?—Yes.

Removal without warrant.

3183. Was the state of her mind different at the period of her discharge from what it was when she was admitted?—Oh, she was much better. She was very irregular at first. If she was insane, which I doubt, when she came in first, she got sane while in the asylum.

3185. In the case of Ishori Sullivan, it appears that he was acquitted, on the ground of insanity, at the Spring Assizes of Cork, 1848. He was removed to your asylum on the 20th November, 1850, with a medical statement to this effect:—"This man is not now, nor has he been since his commitment, insane." Had you any means of judging what his state of mind was while he was in the asylum?—No. He was very unwell, when he came to us, with disease in the chest. I saw nothing like insanity about him, but I had not sufficient experience of him to determine whether or not he was insane.

3186. Is that the case in which you have entered "Unfit to be removed at the time of his transmission?"—I may have made that entry.

3187. In the case of Catherine Teshugg, it appears that she was committed to Cork goal in 1845, and acquitted of the charge of murder on the ground of insanity subsequently. The charge was the murder of her mother-in-law. The statement of the medical officer of the Cork Lunatic Asylum was, "She never exhibited any aberration of mind during my experience of her case;" and on another occasion he says, "She is apparently in a healthy state of mind." What has been the state of that patient since her reception into the asylum?—She has been generally well. There were a few indications of insanity, but they passed off very quickly.

3188. In the case of Martin Whelan, who is at present in the asylum, he is stated to be an idiot, and the crime with which he was charged, homicide; what has been your experience of his state of mind while in your custody?—He is an idiot, subject to epileptic fits, and occasionally gets fits of insanity with his idiosyncrasy.

3189. In the case of William Williams there does not appear to be any medical statement accompanying him?—No; but the Governor of the Philipstown Convict Depot stated this person was very excitable, and, while in that state, was quite unmanageable; however, he is not very violent. He is industrious and diligent at his trade, as a joiner, except when excited. It has been necessary to keep him separate, to prevent any violence, as he is very quarrelsome. There is an entry, however, on the document forwarded, to the effect that the Governor of the Smithfield Prison stated him to be of unsound mind. The warrant stated that Drs. Carr and Glover, of Philipstown, declared him to be insane.

3190. Will you be enabled to furnish the Commissioners with a statement of the number of inmates in the Central Asylum who may fairly be considered incurable?—Yes, I will do so.

Sarah Mary McDonnell sworn and examined.

Sarah M. McDonnell.

The Matron.

3191. You are the matron of the Central Criminal Asylum, Dundrum?—Yes.

3192. You have held that office since the opening of the institution?—Yes.

Her duties.

3193. Are your duties confined to the female department of the institution?—Not particularly. Generally speaking, I go round twice or three times a week to the male side, and on the female side twice and three times a day. It sometimes happens that I only go once.

3194. You reside, I believe, in the institution?—Yes.

3195. You superintend the laundry and also the culinary department?—Yes.

3196. Is the state of the bedding and clothing also under your control?—I give them out every Monday morning myself from my own store. I receive them in the laundry, and check the laundry book. I do not leave the charge of the bedding to any of the attendants, nor have I ever done so.

3197. Are the female servants in the establishment under your control?—Yes; and when they want leave to go out, they first come to me; and if they have been disobedient, Dr. Corbett would oppose their going out.

3198. Does the Governor of the asylum exercise any authority in that portion of the institution which is under your care, without consulting with you?—If he wishes to make a change amongst the female patients, he generally tells me; as if, for instance, he considered it desirable to remove any of them from one division to another. This morning we had a case of the kind; but he never does so without apprising me of it. He leaves the care of the female patients principally with myself.

3199. Do you superintend the male side, so far as seeing the rooms and corridors, and so on, washed and cleansed sufficiently often?—Yes, generally; I look after the bedding, and the linen particularly.

3200. Is the clothing of the establishment made up by the patients?—Every thing worn in the house is made up by the patients. We never bought a pair of stockings since the establishment opened; they have all been knitted by the patients.

keeper?—When I get the samples I buy them myself. I generally bring the samples in with me, in order that I may see I get the same articles, and the invoices go to Dr. Corbett. I receive the articles in my store. The clerk has all the male clothing materials, but the shirting, cravats, and stockings come to me. I never receive the invoices.

3202. The material does not go through the hands of the storekeeper?—No; we never had that rule in the house.

3203. Do you keep any account charging yourself with the quantity of materials you have received?—Yes; I check all the articles on Monday morning, and enter them, I make an entry of all that I receive.

3204. When new articles are issued for the use of the patients, is there a similar number of old articles taken up?—Yes, and I have a great deal of management making up those old articles. We would, for instance, make out of three old articles two good ones. A great quantity of rags goes to the store, and they are sold.

3205. What becomes of the clothing which cannot be again brought into use?—The clerk has a man that comes for those old things.

3206. Are they handed over to the clerk for the benefit of the establishment?—That belongs to his department. What I have is very trifling. Sometimes I get six shillings for it, which I give to the Governor, and get a receipt, and sometimes I buy baskets, or such things.

3207. Are the greater number of the female patients generally employed?—We have twenty-nine employed this week out of forty-three. I have eight in the laundry, the rest are employed in the corridors, and through the house, knitting and making up. We are making beds this week.

3208. What are the arrangements for the exercise of the female patients?—On Sunday, if it is fine, they are out all day. In summer they are out in the evening, as soon as the male patients come in; in winter, if the weather is any way fine, they may go out for an hour or two.

3209. Practically, do they go out?—I cannot say they go out very often. On Sunday, if the weather is fine, they are out all day walking about.

3210. When you say they go out during the winter, do you mean into the airing courts or into the grounds?—If the evening is very fine we let them out; but, really, the work is so very heavy, and I have so few to do it, that I must keep them employed, otherwise I could not have the business done by the twenty-nine females. They work for the entire establishment.

3211. In point of fact, the females are not enabled to obtain greater exercise in the grounds, in consequence of there not being a sufficient number of attendants, and in consequence of the extent of the labour required from them in the establishment?—We consider we have enough of attendants. We find it is better to keep the minds of the patients occupied. If there is a fine hour of the day in winter they are let out. The bad cases are always in the airing yards; the other cases in the pleasure-ground before the house.

3212. Are the female patients ever employed in doing any work upon the male side of the establishment?—About twice a-year I allow them to give it a general cleaning. There is one old woman that goes daily to it. She is the only female patient that we allow to go to that side, except twice a-year, when we give it a general cleaning. The women are then under charge of a keeper, and we never allow the female patients, except on those two occasions in the year, to go to the male side.

St. PATRICK'S HOSPITAL, founded by DEAN SWIFT.

Mr. JAMES CHANNING sworn and examined

St. Patrick's
Hospital, founded by Dean Swift.
Mr. J. Channing.

3213. I believe you are the master of the St. Patrick's Hospital that was founded by Dean Swift?—Yes.

3214. You have the management of the institution, and the treatment of the patients is under your care?—Yes; and I superintend the servants.

3215. Are you a medical person?—No.

3216. How long have you held that office?—In that hospital about twenty-two years. I was twenty years in the service of the Government before that, in the Hardwicke cells I commenced in 1815. I subsequently went to Belfast Lunatic Asylum, which I opened in the year 1829.

3217. How is the hospital governed?—By Governors. The number is fixed in the charter. Those named in the charter are the Primate for the time being, the Chancellor or the Keeper of the Great Seal of Ireland for the time being, the Archbishop of Dublin for the time being, the Dean of Christ's Church for the time being, the Dean of St. Patrick's for the time being, the State Physician of Ireland for the time being, the Surgeon-General of Ireland for the time being, and seven other persons, whose usual places of residence, for three years at least, next preceding their election, have been in the city or suburbs of Dublin. The Deanery of Christ's Church being united to the Deanery of St. Patrick's, there is only one person to represent those two offices.

3218. I believe there has been no state physician in Ireland for several years?—Not since Dr. Jackson's death.

3219. The number of ex officio Governors is therefore reduced to five?—Yes.

3220. How frequently do the Governors attend?—The first Monday of every month, Their attendances, which is the day fixed by the charter.

3221. How often do they assemble for the purpose of electing officers?—Latterly there has not been any election. It is mentioned in the charter once a-year.

3222. Am I to understand that the provision of the charter which provides that the Corporation shall meet annually to elect or continue their officers has not been carried out?—Not that I know of.

3223. Is the attendance of the Governors numerous?—Sometimes three or four attend, and sometimes eight.

3224. Is there a committee of the Governors appointed?—There was a sub-committee.

3225. Does that still exist?—Latterly it has not assembled; I think one or two of the members of it are dead.

3226. Were the members of the committee members of the Board of Governors?—They were.

3227. You say that they have not met latterly, how long is it since the last meeting of that Committee was held?—I cannot say precisely; it is more than a year.

3228. Is it three years?—I think not.

3229. Do the Board of Governors themselves ever inspect the hospital?—Frequently.

3230. In all its details?—They visit it very often in a general way.

3231. Do the Board of Governors, or any portion of them, officially inspect the patients?—No.

3232. Do they visit, officially, each of the cells?—No.

3233. Practically, is there any periodical inspection or visitation of the hospital by the Governors, or by any Committee of the Governors?—No particular inspection.

3234. Is the number of elected Governors full?—No, I think not.

3235. State the names of the present elected Governors?—The Rev. Mr. Abbott—he resides in Dublin; Sir Robert Shaw—he was elected many years ago, and was a Governor at the same time with his father; the Rev. St. Barton, Rector of St. George's—he lives in Dublin; the Rev. Thomas Kingston, Rector of St. James's—he resides in Roundtown; the Rev. Dr. West, Archbishop of Dublin; and Sir Edward Brough.

3236. There appears to be one vacancy amongst the elected Governors?—Yes; there was one gentleman elected, but, not having time to attend, he resigned—that is Mr. Stewart, of Leinster-street. It is not more than a month since he resigned.

3237. Have any proceedings been taken with a view to the election of a Governor in the place of Mr. Stewart?—Yes.

3238. I observe, by the Charter, that the assent of a majority of the ex officio Governors is necessary for the granting of any lease: has any difficulty been experienced in obtaining the assent of the majority of the ex officio Governors when required?—Not that I am aware of.

3239. The number of ex-officio Governors being now reduced to five, and the assent of four being required, might not considerable difficulty arise in obtaining their assent?—I do not think the consent of four is necessary.

3240. What is the form of proceeding for the admission of patients?—There is a printed form filled up by the friends of the patient sent into the Board, addressed to the Governors; and if it is satisfactory, and if there is a vacancy, the application will not be refused. The document I now produce is the form to which I refer. The two first passages in it are by Act of Parliament.

Leonards in 1842.

New regulations.

3241. To what Act of Parliament do you refer?—The general Acts for the regulation of Lunatic Asylums.

3242. Are copies of this form of application transmitted in the cases of all applicants?—When they are required.

3243. Is it not necessary for any person applying to be previously recommended before one of these papers is issued?—No; that form was revised in Sir Edward Sugden's time.

3244. A portion of this document applies solely to the cases of paying patients?—Portion of it is used in the case of free patients; the latter part, containing the letter of obligation, is applicable only to the cases of paying patients.

3245. Is there any rule regulating the number of patients who may be received without payment?—There is; there is a regular Board order. We depart from it sometimes, when there is a pressing application, if there is room. Sometimes they have room for a free patient, and not for a paying patient; and sometimes for the latter, and not for a free patient.

3246. What was the last order to which you refer?—A resolution of the 7th of November, 1853, as follows:—"Resolved—That in the present state of our funds, the number of free patients shall not exceed seventy-five."

3247. Is any particular portion of the house set apart for the free patients?—There was at one time, but not now.

3248. According to the present resolution of the Board, there should be seventy-five free patients in the house?—Yes.

3249. How many are there actually?—I think about sixty-five at present, if I do not mistake; but the Morning Book is here.

3250. How many is the hospital capable of containing altogether?—One hundred and fifty is the number.

3251. And the last resolution of the Board on the subject fixed the number of free patients at one-half the total number?—Yes.

3252. How does it happen that the number of paying patients has increased by eight, thereby infringing upon the number of free patients?—They were pressing cases, and the payments are small.

3253. Am I to understand that the rule, stated to have been based upon the financial position of the hospital—namely, that seventy-five free patients should be admitted—has been departed from, in consequence of the pressure of paying patients?—Yes; but the payments by them were very small.

3254. Have there been any applications from persons seeking to be free patients?—Yes; there was one taken in lately.

3255. Have there been no cases of application for free places which were not admitted?—I am not aware of any lately.

3256. Do you keep a list of the applications?—They go before the Board. I have a small memorandum book, in which there are entries of the papers before the Board.

3257. I find that, on the 25th November last, there were only sixty-six free patients in the institution, although the rule of the Board states that seventy-five shall be admitted: how do you account for a pauper application being refused on that day; I refer to the case of Olivia Doyle?—It might be that the case was not considered suitable for admission.

3258. The entry is "Olivia Doyle; no pauper vacancy." How do you account for the number of paying patients on that day being eighty-three, whereas only seventy-five places should have been allotted for that class of patients; Terence McDermott being admitted as a patient at £13 per annum that day, thereby adding to the number of paying patients?—I could not tell the reason.

3259. In point of fact, matters do not appear to be in conformity with the resolution of the Board?—The Governors relax the rule as to free patients sometimes—that is what I suppose. I really do not know any thing about it. I have no voice in the matter.

3260. Will you furnish the Commissioners with a return of the number of free patients and paying patients in the hospital in each month: we will send you a form to fill up on the subject?—Certainly.

3261. You remember the period of Sir Edward Sugden's visit to St. Patrick's Hospital in 1842?—I do.

3262. It appears, from a minute made by Lord St. Leonards on that occasion, that out of 155 patients in the hospital, there were 61 who paid, and 94 who were free. I believe Lord St. Leonards called the attention of the Governors to that state of things, with a view to a greater amount of accommodation being provided for the free patients?—Yes; there is an order on the subject.

3263. Do your minutes contain a memorandum of the alterations with regard to the hospital, in consequence of Lord St. Leonards' representation?—Yes; there is an order of the 3rd of April, 1843, as follows:—"It is moved by the Lord Chancellor that the classes paying 100 guineas and sixty guineas per annum each, be, in future, discontinued; and that the present inmates of the hospital, comprising the above classes, be permitted to remain for the remainder of the present quarter, and one quarter immediately following, when the friends of the parties must remove them, unless some very urgent reason be alleged to allow a further delay; and that notice be given to the several parties of the above resolution." "Resolved—That a certain number of patients, paying the sum of forty guineas per annum, and lower sums, to be determined according to the circumstances of the applicant, be continued on the establishment, the proportion of such patients to be determined at a future period, when a new arrangement shall be put in practice." I think that refers to the state of the funds.

3254. From the present returns it would appear that the number of paying patients has increased since Lord St. Leonard's inspection, by twenty-one?—Yes; the payments are small.

3255. What are the present rates of payment?—From forty guineas down to £10 a-year.

3256. What is the average cost of maintaining a patient in the asylum?—We took the average cost last year at £38. In that was included the cost of a great many alterations and repairs. I should suppose the general average is from £30 to £35 per annum.

3257. The cost per head last year was above the ordinary average?—Yes; the average in ordinary times would be about £30 a-year; but provisions here, of late, been very dear.

3258. Of the paying patients at present in the hospital, there appear to be two paying £50 per annum and upwards each?—Yes; they are old patients. The Governors clothe and provide all necessities for them.

3259. There are fourteen paying from £30 to £40 per annum each, twelve who pay from £20 to £30 per annum, and two who pay from £10 to £20 per annum each. On the female side there appears to be one paying about £50?—All her friends are dead, and she has been left in the institution; the Governors clothe her.

3270. There are four on the same side who pay from £40 to £50 per annum, thirteen paying from £20 to £40, twenty-one who pay from £20 to £30 per annum each, one paying £10, and another paying £4?—Yes.

3271. Is there any classification of the patients?—As far as we can it is done. It is very hard to classify them properly in the house.

3272. According to what rule or principle is the classification made?—The state of their disorder.

3273. They are classified according to their mental condition?—Yes; the violent are removed from those who are quiet.

3274. Is the classification made by direction of the medical attendants?—They suggest very often.

3275. Who are the medical attendants?—Surgeon Canuck and Dr. Croker.

3276. How frequently is the hospital visited by the medical attendants?—Every day by either; sometimes by both.

3277. Are the patients divided between the two medical attendants, or do they each attend all in turn?—Yes, each attends all.

3278. Am I to understand that each medical attendant visits on alternate days?—Yes; they seldom come on Sunday, unless when necessary.

3279. When there is an acute case, requiring careful particular treatment, in the hospital, is the patient treated on alternate days by a different doctor?—I think he is. They both consult together as to what to do, when a case of that kind arises.

3280. What opportunity have they of consulting together when they do not attend together?—They come together very often, when there is any occasion for it.

3281. Is there an infirmary in the institution?—No.

3282. Are there any associated dormitories where the patients sleep?—None; there is one room in which there are three beds.

3283. Are the rooms generally provided with fireplaces?—The sleeping-rooms are not.

3285. Is that eighteen on each side, male and female?—No; nine at each side.

3286. Are fires usually kept up in those long corridors?—Always in winter; and in summer we generally have a fire to heat water.

3287. What arrangements are there for bathing the patients?—There is a kind of tub, in which they generally wash all over.

3288. Is there any regular bath in the establishment?—Yes; but it is out of order at present.

3289. Do you mean an ordinary bath?—A reclining bath and a shower-bath.

3290. Is the shower-bath out of order also?—No.

3291. How long is it since that reclining bath has been in use?—The bath of the establishment has been out of order two or three months. We use slipper-baths.

3292. Is that bath on the male or female side?—It is on the male side.

3293. Is there any bath on the female side?—No.

3294. Are the female patients who it may be desirable should take baths, obliged to be removed to the male side for the purpose?—Yes; there is a passage leading to the bath from the female side.

3295. How far distant may that be from the remote cells on the female side?—More than 300 yards.

3296. Are the female patients washed in the day-room?—Yes.

3297. Are there any regular lavatories?—Yes; they are not used; they are considered too cold. Tubs of water are brought into the day-room.

3298. What use is made of the lavatories?—They are not used at all, except for washing patients' hands occasionally when passing by.

3299. Are they used as sculleries?—They are.

- Dress. 3300. Is there any regular day for giving a bath to the females in the establishment whose health may require it?—The females are washed when they require to be cleansed. They wash in a large tub, in which they can recline.
- St. Patrick's Hospital, founded by Dean Swift. 3301. How many patients are bathed in this tub to which you refer?—I could not answer that.
- Mr. J. Cumming. 3302. How many patients are washed in the tub without the water being changed?—I could not tell that.
- Washing; baths. 3303. There are no baths at all on the male side?—We never give a bath unless ordered by the medical men.
3304. My questions have not reference to warm baths, which might be used for a medical purpose, but baths for the purpose of cleanliness?—The females are washed in the bath, and the men are washed up to the knees in tubs.
3305. Has the water which is used in the day-room for washing to be carried all through the house?—Yes.
- Lighting; ventilation. 3306. I believe some of the corridors are 330 feet long?—Something about that.
3307. Is the establishment lighted with gas?—No.
3308. How are those long passages lighted at night?—With candles.
3309. How many candles in each passage?—Two or three, I think.
3310. Has it ever been under the consideration of the Governors to light the institution with gas?—They considered it, and declined the proposal at the time; and, upon farther consideration, they brought it to the gate, but they declined to introduce it into the house.
3311. For what reason?—For fear of explosion.
3312. Is there any particular risk of explosion in Swift's Hospital more than in any other house in Dublin?—No.
3313. Is there any artificial means of ventilating any part of the house?—There is nothing but the windows.
- Restraint. 3314. There are no ventilating flues?—No.
3315. Do you find that in the rooms the atmosphere is close and impure in the mornings?—Not since the windows have been altered; it was so at one time in former years. I should remark that the patients have day-rooms to sit in.
3316. Is restraint much practised?—Very little.
3317. Do you keep a record of the cases in which restraint is practised?—Always; it is in the books.
3318. Is restraint ever used without your authority?—Never.
3319. Do you keep the articles of restraint in your own possession?—Not always; we sometimes intrust them to keepers.
3320. What sort of restraint is used?—Generally the waistcoat, and belt, and "the chancellor."
3321. Do you consider it proper that such articles of restraint, as "the chancellor," the waistcoat, leg-straps, and breast-straps, should be in the possession of the keepers?—They are not always in their possession; only sometimes.
3322. Of course, these articles could be applied without your knowledge?—They are not applied without my knowledge, so far as I know.
3323. If they are left under the control of a keeper, may not the keeper use them without your knowledge?—I am not aware of any such thing being done; it is not allowed.
3324. Have you ever had complaints from the patients of such restraint being used?—No. Sometimes some of them think that they are hardly treated.
3325. Have you ever received complaints that you had reason to believe, on investigation, were well founded?—Seldom, if at all.
- Amusements. 3326. Who superintends the female department?—Mrs. Cumming, the matron. Her health has become delicate, and her daughter assists her.
3327. What amusements have you for the patients?—They walk about; they have music; they exercise in the grounds; and they have periodicals to read. Everything we can devise.
- Heating the house. 3328. Are those things provided for the patients indiscriminately?—Yes.
3329. Are there any arrangements for heating the house besides the fire-places that you have described?—Not at present. There had been an apparatus, and it was pulled down by order of the Board.
3330. For what reason?—The patients complained of it as suffocating them; but it was before my time, and I cannot speak positively about it.
- Hospital grounds. 3331. What was the nature of the arrangement?—I think the object of it was to heat the building by means of hot water. The apparatus had cost a considerable sum.
3332. What extent of ground is there about the building?—Six and a-half acres altogether, which include the ground the building stands on.
3333. That comprises all the ground to which the patients have access?—Yes.
3334. And the portion to which they have not access?—Yes.
3335. Have you reason to think the ground is not sufficiently extensive?—Yes. I have frequently complained since I came of the want of accommodation in that respect. It is an old establishment, and we have endeavoured to modernise it as well as we could. It cost £3,000 or £4,000 to do so. Lord Normanby, when he was here, watched closely the progress of our reform. He took a strong interest in the establishment, and saw every thing that was done.
3336. Is there any apothecary attached to the establishment?—Yes; Mr. Nicolls.
3337. How are the medicines supplied?—By him. The compounded medicines are got in his shop, and the simples are got from the Apothecaries' Hall.

3338. Is there any surgery in the establishment?—No.

3339. Has Mr. Nicolls a salary?—No; he charges for the medicines he supplies.

3340. I suppose at the usual shop price?—Yes.

3341. What arrangements are made for religious worship?—There is a clergyman connected with the Board, who attends every Sunday morning for the Protestants; and the Roman Catholics are allowed to go out to church when they wish to go. The Protestants have service in the establishment.

3342. Who selects the patients that are to attend the Protestant clergyman?—He does so himself, generally once a week, and recommends them, and tells me or the nurse-attender.

3343. Who selects the Roman Catholic patients that are to be allowed to attend religious worship?—If they appear well enough, and wish to go out, they get a pass for the purpose.

3344. Does any Roman Catholic clergyman attend the house?—They come whenever they are wanted.

3345. Have they access whenever they wish?—Always. This very week one was in the house.

3346. Is any salary paid to the Protestant clergyman who officiates?—Yes, but not as a clergyman; he is paid as secretary of the Board.

3347. What is the salary?—£20 a-year.

3348. What proportion of the inmates are Protestants, and what proportion Roman Catholics?—I cannot say exactly; but I should say from about half to two-thirds are Roman Catholics, and the remainder Protestants; but I will be enabled to give a correct return.

3349. Amongst the Protestants you include the Presbyterians?—I include all who are not Roman Catholics.

3350. Does any Presbyterian clergyman attend the institution?—Sometimes they attend members of their own flock, but not regularly. When the friends of Presbyterian patients desire or request clergymen to do so, they call and visit those patients.

3351. Does any Catholic clergyman come to select the persons of his church who are fit to go to divine service?—No.

3352. Then, am I to understand that no Roman Catholic inmate is sent out to attend divine service unless he expresses a wish to go?—Yes, and provided he is well enough to go.

3353. How many Catholic patients went out last Sunday?—We do not keep an account of that.

3354. Do male patients ever go out to Catholic worship?—Yes; there is the same liberty for all.

3355. It appeared, on the occasion of the Commissioners' inspection of the asylum, from the evidence of the gate-keeper, that no male patient had been sent to religious worship for a considerable time?—That may be so; he ought to know, for there is a pass always given to each of those persons, and he sees the pass.

3356. About how many Catholics, do you remember, generally go out to religious worship?—There used to be very often three or four.

3357. Three out of about seventy?—Yes.

3358. Are any religious books provided for the inmates of the institution?—No, except books according to the Church of England.

3359. No other religious books of any kind?—No.

3360. How are the provisions and the articles required for the establishment provided; by contract or otherwise?—By contract, upon tenders.

3361. Are advertisements for those tenders published in the newspapers?—Always.

3362. Can you furnish the Commissioners with the scale of dietary in use?—Yes.

3363. By whom is the dietary fixed?—It is generally submitted to the medical men. They order other articles, when they do not think what is given is fit for the patients.

John B. B. Yeates, Esq., sworn and examined.

J. B. B. Yeates, Esq.

3364. You are accountant to Swift's Hospital?—Yes.

3365. How long have you held that situation?—Since February, 1858.

3366. Do you keep the accounts of the receipts and disbursements of the establishment?—I do.

3367. By whom are the accounts of the institution audited?—By the Audit Board.

3368. Can you inform us of the various sources of income of the institution, and the amount received on the last account under each head?—Yes. Rents, £2,766 1s. 8d.; interest on Government stock, &c., £623 19s. 4d.; casual receipts, £6 12s. 3d.; received for maintenance of boarders, £2,077 10s. 9d.; total, £5,414 7s. Disbursements—provisions, £2,192 9s. 4d.; garden expenses, £52 11s. 1d.; clothing, £350 3s. 5d.; bedding and furniture, £280 1s. 2d.; repairs and alterations, £216 2s.; coals, soap, and candles, £416 0s. 8d.; medicines, £386 19s. 4d.; stationery, £31 1s. 1d.; incidental expenses, £40 3s. 9d.; rents, £130 19s. 1d.; law expenses, £24 1s. 2d.; salaries and wages, £889 15s. 9d.; total expenditure, £5,619 6s. 10d., for the year ending 31st March, 1856.

3369. With reference to the large amount for medicines in that statement of disbursements, will you furnish us with the details setting forth the various items included in that general disbursement for medicines, and specifying the various sums paid under each head, distinguishing the sum paid to the apothecary for medicines, and the sum paid to the Apothecaries' Hall for drugs?—Yes. - DOYLE. 3370. From that general abstract of the receipts of the institution for one year, it would appear that, irrespective of the receipts for the maintenance of the boarders, the institution had an income in that year of upwards of £3,300?—Yes.
- St. Patrick's Hospital, founded by Dean Swift.* 3371. By whom is the account kept of each article received?—By the storekeeper.
- J. B. B. YONCE, Esq., Clothing. 3372. Are most of the clothes used in the establishment made up there?—The female clothing is. The friends of paying patients usually provide their clothes. The male clothing is supplied by contract. Shirts and stockings are made by the females.
- Minutes of Board. 3373. Who keeps the minutes of proceedings of the Board?—The secretary, in the first instance, and I copy them into the fair book.
3374. Is any statement laid before the Board each day of meeting of the number of vacancies in the establishment?—Yes.
3375. The Board will, therefore, be aware whether there are any vacancies for paying patients or for free patients?—Yes.
- JAMES Wm. CROOK, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S.E., sworn and examined. 3376. I believe you have been for some years connected with Swift's Hospital?—Since the year 1813.
3377. Independently of your medical connexion with the hospital, I believe you have taken considerable interest in the institution?—For many years I have devoted much time to its interests, and I also lived a lengthened period in it.
- Medical attendance and arrangements. 3378. Is there any other medical attendant for the hospital?—Yes; there is a physician, Dr. Croker.
3379. What arrangements are made between you and Dr. Croker for attending upon the patients?—We attend upon alternate days.
3380. Do you consult together, on the admission of a patient, as to the course of treatment which should be pursued with regard to him?—We do, and as to his sanity.
3381. The manager of the institution is not, I believe, a medical man?—The manager is not a medical man.
- Advantage of having a resident medical officer in asylums. 3382. Do you consider it an advantage that the manager of such an institution should be a professional person?—It certainly is an advantage.
3383. With regard to lunatic asylums generally, and not speaking of Swift's Hospital in particular, do you conceive that any difficulty would arise in prescribing the particular duties of the medical manager of the asylum, distinct from those of the visiting physician?—I do not think there would be any difficulty.
- Responsibility for medical treatment. 3384. Who would you consider should be responsible for the treatment of the patients as regards insanity?—The attending physician. In that case the local medical man would occupy the position which the moral Governor does at this moment, uniting with it also the medical charge, in the absence of the superior physician.
3385. The responsibility for the treatment of the insane patients should rest with the regular visiting physician, whose opinion should, of course, prevail?—I think his opinion should prevail.
3386. Would the medical manager, in that case, be pretty much in the position of a house-surgeon in a large hospital?—Yes.
3387. Is there an apothecary, or other person of the medical profession, resident in Swift's Hospital?—There is not; there never has been since I became connected with it. We felt the want, but had a deficiency in endeavouring to remove a party who had been in charge for such a number of years. There were not arrangements for such in the building.
- No resident apothecary. 3388. I believe the apothecary of the institution resides at a considerable distance in the city?—The apothecary resides in the town. When I first had charge of the hospital, many institutions in Dublin were supplied with medicines on the same principle as Swift's. A book was sent to the apothecary to order what he supplied. That was the case, for instance, with the Marshalsea. The house of Craven and Nicolls had the supplying of medicines to a very large number of the public institutions.
- Resident in case of emergency. 3389. In a case of sudden emergency, such as an attempt at suicide of a serious character, might not the consequences be serious, owing to the absence of some professional person?—The resident surgeon of St. Stevens' Hospital has been always at hand, and when accidents or sudden attacks of illness did occur, the apothecary and resident pupil at St. Stevens' also assisted.
3390. I believe the institution to which you refer, Madam Steevens' Hospital, immediately adjoins the asylum?—Yes. Dean Swift in his will gave directions, that the asylum should be placed as near as possible to Steevens' Hospital; and I heard a kind of tradition amongst the old people, that he did so with the intention of getting for the asylum medical attendance gratis.
- Medicines. 3391. Do you approve of the principle upon which medicines are at present supplied by the apothecary to the hospital, in the same manner as to an individual; or would you prefer having a house surgery, and that the drugs should be purchased by the institution?—I certainly would prefer the latter.
3392. Is it on the ground of convenience as well as economy you would approve of that arrangement?—Yes; both for the sake of convenience and for economy; but there would be very little economy, for the medicines would be still about the same price. I would recommend it more for the convenience, and because it would be safer, though I never knew any accident to arise, under the present arrangement.
3393. Is the construction of the building, on the whole, not very well adapted for a curative hospital for the insane?—It is not well adapted. Dean Swift directed not only that it should be built in the vicinity of Madam Steevens' Hospital, but he directed that it should be built in such a way that it would be capable of unlimited additions, according as the funds increased; and the present building consists of three parts or additions.
- The building not adapted for a curative hospital.

3394. Do you think the internal arrangements generally are suitable for an hospital of that character?—No; I think it could be reconstructed on an infinitely better principle.

3395. The corridors are stated to be of immense length and considerable breadth?—They are.

3396. Have you found, practically, that in winter sufficient means are taken to keep up a proper temperature in the hospital?—I should mention, that when I went there first, there were no windows in the rooms; there were great wooden bars. Our first effort was to get rid of those, and have windows put in. Then the directors tried to heat the building; they employed a Dr. Meyer at very large expense, and the attempt was a total failure. The same plan was tried, I think, also at the Dublin Society. The object was to heat the building by means of warm air. The arrangement was upon a false principle, and did not succeed, although the experiment cost the hospital a large sum.

3397. Are sufficient precautions taken to preserve a proper temperature in the winter months in those large corridors?—I do not think it can be accomplished.

3398. With regard to the lighting of those galleries, have you ever visited the institution in the evening, so as to enable you to judge of the lighting?—I very often visited in the evening, and it is most dismal to see one of those large corridors with only a small candle in it.

3399. Do you see any objection to the introduction of gas?—I see none.

3400. Are the arrangements with regard to baths suitable and adequate for an institution of that character?—No; they should be constructed on a different and improved principle.

3401. Do you consider that a mere portable reclining bath is sufficient for the use of an establishment of that kind?—No; we have only a shower bath in addition to the reclining bath.

3402. Have you reason, from your experience of the hospital, to be satisfied that restraint is not unduly used by the attendants?—I do not think undue restraint is used. I must certainly say that I think some patients, that are singularly violent, would be better secured by absolute restraint than by men contending with them, and their being exhibited to the patients in that state. I believe restraint to be necessary under certain circumstances.

3403. Am I to understand that the quiet secured to the patients by the use of mechanical means is preferable to that secured by keepers struggling with them?—I think so, on certain occasions.

3404. What is your opinion as to the use of padded rooms?—In some cases they are very useful.

3405. Are there any in Swift's Hospital?—No.

3406. Do you consider that sufficient occupation and amusements are provided for the patients in the hospital?—I do not think there are.

3407. I presume you attach considerable importance to the minds of the patients being occupied, and to their relaxation, by means of amusement?—Certainly.

3408. Do you consider that amusements, interesting objects in the shape of pictures, and various things of that kind, in an asylum would be advantageous, even to the most illiterate and ignorant patients?—I am sure they would.

3409. Do you consider that the excitement which may be occasioned by playing at cards is at all a reason why an amusement of that kind should not, in certain cases, be provided?—I should say not. I have played cards and backgammon, over and over again, with patients.

3410. Do you consider the arrangements in that respect in Swift's Hospital, as regards the supply of books and papers, at all suitable for the treatment of the insane?—They are not at all sufficient.

3411. With regard to the dietary of the hospital, is the ordinary dietary fixed after consultation with you and Dr. Croker?—When a patient first comes in, of course he is seen, and if the usual diet is not suited to him, he is ordered a different diet. The class of people we generally receive are the worn-out, the cast-off from private asylums—patients who have been, in fact, a long time subject to the disease; and they require better feeding. In the first instance, than if they were recent cases of insanity.

3412. I presume that, such being the class of patients you receive, the asylum must contain a large proportion of incurable cases?—We have scarcely a curable case in the entire establishment.

3413. Under those circumstances, the hospital has become one more for the detention and cure of incurable lunatics than a curative hospital for the insane?—Yes. We have more unmanageable cases than, perhaps, any other institution of the same extent. The private asylums get rid of dangerous cases as far as they possibly can. It is not a service free from danger.

3414. How far do you consider that the detention of incurable patients in the hospital is consistent with the will of the founder?—When the medical officers objected to the continued admission of incurable patients, the Governors' reply was—"There is the will." We are bound to take idiots and lunatics; or, if there are no idiots or lunatics, then to take incurable cases. We have no right to turn any one out. That is the principle upon which the Governors have acted since I became connected with the institution. I do not think Dean Swift looked to curable cases being in the hospital. I believe at that time the number of what they call sturdy idiots—people who went about the country, beggars, half idiots, and half rogues—was very great.

DEBATES.
*St. Patrick's
Hospital, founded by Dean Swift.*
SIR JOHN W. GURNEY,
Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S.I.
Management of asylums generally;
female patients.

3415. Generally speaking, as regards the district lunatic asylums of the country, would you not consider it advisable they should be kept as hospitals for the cure of insanity?—

Certainly.

3416. Do you coincide in the opinion that an hospital for the mere cure of incurable lunatics could be conducted much cheaper than a curative hospital?—Assuredly; and if they were classified, I dare say two-thirds of them would be found perfectly harmless. I always had a notion that female hospitals could be constructed on more economical principles, and managed with greater freedom from restraint, than if they were united under the same management with male establishments.

3417. In visiting hospitals for insane, have you generally found that female wards are more quiet and the patients more orderly than in the male wards?—Yes, and the wards were cleaner.

No chaplains at Swift's.

3418. I believe there are no particular arrangements made at Swift's Hospital for the appointment of chaplains?—No.

3419. We understand that the secretary is a clergyman of the Established Church, and that he is in the habit of reading service for the inmates of his religious persuasion who attend?—Yes. I suppose the Dean did not contemplate a chaplain; he thought he would get that service performed gratis.

Advantage of allowing patients to attend religious

3420. What is your opinion as to the advisability or otherwise of the patients in lunatic asylums being allowed the same opportunity of attending religious worship, when their health admits of it, as if out of doors?—When their health admits of it, it is quite clear they should have every opportunity.

3421. Do you think being deprived in an asylum of that which in ordinary health is considered of importance, and is periodically attended to—namely, divine worship on the Sabbath—would have an injurious effect upon patients?—I would say, from my own experience, not in all cases. Wherever they were anxious to attend prayers, it was always conceded. Originally, I do not think any special care was taken about it in Swift's. Generally, I think provision ought to be made for the attendance of the patients on religious worship.

3422. Do you ever consult with the chaplain as to the persons who should attend divine service?—Not formally.

3423. I presume that if you felt, on visiting a patient, that attendance on divine service would cause him to be more excited, from his delusion being of a religious character, you would feel it your duty to prevent such attendance?—I would, certainly.

3424. We have understood that the practice in the asylum is to allow those persons who express a wish to attend divine service to do so?—Yes.

3425. With regard to Catholic patients, only those who express such a wish are allowed to attend a place of worship outside the institution?—I believe that is the case.

3426. Do you consider that it should be left to a patient's own option in a lunatic asylum to secure his having religious ministrations, when it is not left to his own option to procure any thing else he may require?—I am of opinion that all patients capable of feeling their position should be expected to attend their places of worship.

3427. Suppose there was nothing, so far as the medical attendant could see, to prevent his attending religious worship, do you think he ought to be reminded of the recurrent period of the Sabbath, when it is usual for Christians to attend religious worship, or that he should be allowed to continue on without any one seeing whether he went or not?—He should be reminded of the return of the Sabbath, certainly.

Provision for patients who could pay a portion of the maintenance cost.

3428. It appears, from statements we have received, that the number of paying patients in St. Patrick's Hospital is very considerable, being a good deal more than half the total number of inmates: what is your opinion as to the reception of paying patients into that institution?—My opinion is, that it is as great a charity to take a man in for £10 a-year as it is to take a pauper for nothing. Throughout the country there are asylums, of course, to provide for the pauper lunatics; but for the persons in an intermediate position, who have only small means, there is no such provision; and hence I have always considered that it was a mercy to take in those people, who might have, suppose, £200 or £300, and the interest on which would go towards their maintenance. I have had long conversations on the subject with many persons who took an interest in the institution; and the result is, that I think an hospital that receives paying patients is a great benefit to society.

3429. The hospital at present has a few patients paying upwards of £50 a-year each, who are understood to be old cases?—Yes. The general rule is forty guineas a-year each for the maximum. There is no rule as to the minimum; it descends to any amount.

3430. There is a profit to the institution upon a payment of forty guineas a-year for a patient?—Certainly.

3431. Your object, as I understand, would be to provide for all classes of lunatic poor, who, though not paupers, would not have the benefit of Dean Swift's charity if the view you adopt was not carried out?—Yes.

3432. I presume that the number of paying patients which Swift's Hospital can accommodate is not at all equivalent to the number of that class who require accommodation—namely, parties who could not pay the whole of what would be required for their maintenance in an asylum: how far do you think the State ought to make provision for the cases of parties able to pay a proportion?—The question resolves itself into this—whether a separate asylum should be erected for those who are able to contribute to their support, but who are not able to pay the full amount, in a private institution for the insane.

I certainly think that class would be better in a separate institution, and such an institution would amount to a self-supporting establishment in a great measure. There is a difficulty in it.

3433. I believe that, with the exception of the Bloomfield Retreat, maintained by the Society of Friends, there is no such self-supporting institution in Ireland?—No.

3434. Unless we include that portion of St. Patrick's Hospital set apart for paying patients?—Yes.

3435. Does your experience as one of the medical attendants of Swift's Hospital lead you to believe that the association of paying patients with pauper patients is attended with any injurious effect?—If no invidious distinction is made as to diet, I am sure there is no disadvantage.

3436. Suppose that no distinction is made as to the treatment of those patients, either in the diet or clothing, or otherwise, do you see any difficulty then in accommodating them with pauper patients in the same institution?—I observe a great unwillingness on the part of those who are capable of judging for themselves, and who pay a little, to associate with the pauper patients.

3437. Would your observation apply to the patients who are unable to pay even the smallest sum paid in Swift's Hospital?—I think there is a great feeling about gentlemen, in such matters; and those who are capable of judging object to such association. I have been often asked by a patient to have him moved from a particular place.

3438. Is there that which is offensive to their pride and feelings, and is calculated to have an injurious effect as regards their curative treatment?—I think a great number of them are very susceptible; in fact, they are a very susceptible and complaining class. My observation would not apply to the poor of the lower classes, who could pay only about £10 or £12 a-year. Those remarks go to show that there should be a classification of the cases in every asylum.

3439. Are you of opinion that there is a class of persons of small means able to pay perhaps from £10 to £12 per annum, who would not have this objection you have described to associate with pauper lunatics?—I think there is such a class.

3441. It sometimes happens that the resident medical manager of an asylum and the visiting physician do not concur in their views as to the treatment of patients; is it your opinion that it would be advisable to define their several duties, or to dispense with the office of visiting physician?—Their duties should be defined. If men have no common sense or discretion to unite in carrying out the business of the institution, and will not co-operate, it will be necessary to lay down rules for them; but the principal rules should be laid down for the Governor of the institution, and the duties of all these parties should be defined as minutely and accurately as possible.

3442. What would you think of an arrangement that would give the treatment of insanity, per se, to the medical manager as a paramount authority, and the treatment of bodily disease that would occur to the management of the attending physician as a paramount authority?—That is, that the resident physician should have the moral management or treatment of insanity, and the attending physician should treat the ordinary diseases. I certainly think that division would not be desirable. I think the external physician should be the superior authority and direct the treatment in both cases; but the resident physician must be, strictly speaking, the managing man, because he will see, on various occasions, the necessity of acting without consulting the other. That is a difficulty easily got over, however, if men have a proper feeling amongst them.

3443. The resident medical manager sees the patients every day, while the visiting physician sees them perhaps only every second day; ought not the resident medical manager, therefore, under those circumstances, be fitted to attend to the general moral treatment of the patients?—He should understand their cases best in that respect.

3444. Do you think that a physician or a medical officer, appointed as a consultant, to be called in at the option of the resident medical manager, would be a desirable arrangement?—I do not think that system would work.

3445. If a consulting physician were appointed in place of a visiting physician, would you recommend that, in such a case, he should be called in merely at the option of the resident manager, and paid by fees for his visits, or paid by salary?—He should be paid by salary; if he were called in only at the option of the resident, there would be always a jealousy, either if he called him too often or did not call him in often enough. There would be a difference between them on the subject. I think the external physician, if there is to be one, should be paid a salary, and his duties should be defined.

3446. Of course you adhere to your opinion, that he should be the chief responsible person for the medical treatment?—I do.

3447. Would the friends of the patients, do you think, be equally indifferent as to whether there was a visiting medical officer, or whether the treatment was confided to the medical manager?—I think, generally speaking, the friends are in favour of a visiting physician.

3448. Suppose that cases of disease occurred in the institution, or of accidents, apart from insanity, which of the two men would be the more capable of treating such cases—whether the resident medical man or the attending medical officer?—The man who has the most extensive practice would decidedly be the best to treat such cases.

3449. There is an opinion entertained by some that diseases are so modified by insanity, that a person who is in charge of the insane every day might be more capable of treating the patients than a man who is in general practice, but has not the same intimate connexion with the asylum?—I believe that is a delusion.

3450. Then is it your opinion that, in the treatment of any acute internal disease, it is of more consequence to be practically acquainted with the disease under which an insane patient labours, than with the insanity?—For the cure of the disease, I am of that opinion; at the same time, insanity may make the treatment of the disease more difficult than if it did not exist—in other words, if you have a man with a broken leg, and that he is insane, you will find the insanity makes the case more unmanageable; but the ordinary course of treatment for a broken leg must be the same.

3451. Then you do not attach any great value to the influence or modification which insanity may exercise over bodily disease?—I do not.

3452. In some institutions patients are treated in their own sleeping-rooms, and upon this point I will read the following passage from Dr. Connolly's work:—"In many of the old asylums there were no infirmaries: many patients, admittedly in a state of suffering and danger, needing repose and requiring the utmost medical care, were placed in or near wards containing noisy patients." Do you think generally with Dr. Connolly, that it would be better to treat patients suffering from sickness or accidents in an infirmary, rather than in their own sleeping apartments?—If the case permits, it would be much better to treat it in an infirmary set apart for the purpose, and which, of course, would be furnished with the suitable appliances. If a man is violent and unmanageable, you are necessarily compelled to put him into a separate room, and take him away from those who may be disturbed by his noise. In that case, you must have a separate apartment for a person such as I have described. A very large number of the patients could be treated, I am sure, in an infirmary.

3453. As a general rule, you think the patients should be treated in an infirmary, or in a room appropriated for the purpose?—In other words, I would have an infirmary attached to each asylum.

3454. Then, both as regards economy and as regards proper attention, the treatment either in an infirmary or in the rooms appropriated for such would be preferable to treating a patient in his own cell?—Certainly.

3455. From your experience and general practice, what is your opinion as to the propriety of the Legislature providing for the visiting, by competent officers, of patients who may be detained for payment in the house, suppose of a professional person?—I think those persons ought to be visited, but it is difficult to draw the line. Suppose my sister, unfortunately, is afflicted, and that she resides in my own house, then comes the question of my reporting that case, and of officials coming in to visit in private families. Again, suppose my sister resides with you, then it becomes the case of a patient in a house for hire. There is great delicacy required in dealing with the subject. Wherever a patient is maintained for hire, I should say he ought to be visited.

3456. The moment a patient ceases to be maintained in a family as one of the family, and is maintained and trusted by another person, who does so for a consideration, you think that some supervision, which would not be justifiable in the former case, would be justifiable in the latter?—Certainly.

3457. Has your professional experience led you to the conclusion that even in cases where the alleged lunatic may be residing with his or her own family, it would still be desirable that an inspection of such alleged lunatic should take place?—There are cases in which it would be desirable.

3458. I presume, in a case where a party has been declared a lunatic by a competent authority, your opinion is, that there should be an inspection of that patient?—Certainly.

3459. You are aware that the law at present requires a licence in a case where two lunatic inmates may be detained in a house; but that in the case of a single patient, though the law requires certificates of insanity to be transmitted to the Inspectors, yet the house in which the patient may be detained is not required to be licensed: what is your opinion as to the extending of the law so as to provide for the licensing of these houses?—Suppose a person becomes suddenly insane, and that he is not properly declared a lunatic, you take a lodging for him in the suburbs. If the law were extended, that house should be licensed directly, and the fact of the person's insanity blown about.

3460. Would you prefer that immediate notice should be given to the Inspectors of such a patient having been received, rather than the publicity that would be involved in obtaining a licence: the notice must now be given in three months?—Yes.

3461. I believe you are one of the medical attendants of St. Patrick's Hospital?—Yes, since the 3rd of August, 1840.

3462. I understand that you and Surgeon Cusack attend on alternate days?—Yes.

3463. Do you consult about each case on its first admission as to the course to be pursued?—Generally, the cases that come in are chronic, cases of long standing, brought from other hospitals, particularly since the change was made in Lord St. Leonards' time.

3464. That involves the incurability of a large proportion of the inmates?—Yes.

3465. If such has been the operation of the change, the hospital has become, therefore, one less noted for the education of those who desire to give their attention to the cure of insanity?—Yes. If we had recent cases, it would be better adapted for that purpose. Formerly, when we had one hundred guinea and sixty guinea patients, we had fresh cases coming there from different parts of the country, and we sent them out rapidly. Each of those one hundred guinea and sixty guinea boarders enabled the institution to support additional free patients. When I first came to the hospital, we had twenty more free patients than at present. Lord St. Leonards made a change, with the best intentions, so as to make it more available for those with small means.

3466. Do you think that the reduction of the amount of the annual payment might be considered as leading to a smaller number of acute cases coming into the institution?—When the change was made, the cases were then sent in from the other hospitals the very moment they began to cease paying in them, or that they began to get dirty, or filthy, or vicious. We got acute cases only in a very few instances.

3467. Has the number of applications for the admission of paying patients increased very much since the alteration made by Sir Edward Sugden?—Yes; the number has increased. At present there are only sixty-five free patients, and there are eighty-five paying patients. They pay from forty guineas down to as low as £10. Two or three cases pay something more than forty guineas per annum, which is expended on clothing, extra comforts, &c.

3468. Is the system pursued one of non-restraint generally in the asylum?—Restraint is used but very seldom. There are some cases very violent. There is one man who carried a person's nose with a knife and fork, the keeper in another asylum. He is inclined to homicide.

3469. In such cases you consider restraint necessary?—Occasionally. It is, however, very seldom used, and never when it can possibly be avoided.

3470. Have you any reason to think that the servants make use of restraint without the knowledge of the manager?—They always tell him of it when a case is getting violent. Mr. Cumming, the Moral Governor, is told of it.

3471. Practically, we find that the means of restraint are left with the keepers?—The keepers are not at liberty to put any person under restraint without the Moral Governor's sanction, or that of the medical officers—if they do so it is at their peril, and not at all allowed, except in extremely violent cases suddenly occurring, when a loose vest, introduced by Sir Edward Sugden, then Lord Chancellor (and from him called "the chancellor"), is applied. In two cases this has been absolutely required from the ungovernable character of the attacks; one in a patient whose skull was fractured, and who has periodical paroxysms; the other in a person much disposed to commit homicide, and who, in another asylum, snatched up his keeper's knife and fork, and literally carved the poor man's face. A properly padded room, would, in a great measure, supersede the use of the chancellor.

3472. Are the grounds attached to the institution sufficiently large to permit of the patients taking the exercise that is essential to their proper treatment?—Yes; they have plenty of ground there; but it would be very well if the building had been better arranged. If a patient is noisy, we have not a detached place to put him into; and a noisy patient will set all the others going, who were previously quiet.

3473. Do you consider the ground sufficiently extensive for the employment and exercise of a large number of patients?—I do. If there were flowers in the garden, or that it was a pleasure-ground, the patients of the higher order would, perhaps, then be more inclined to work at it. There are two gardens at the female side, and a considerable piece at the other side.

3474. You are aware that the entire of the ground, including the site of the building, does not exceed six and a-half acres?—I did not know the exact extent. Dean Swift is his will, and if they could get the ground near Dr. Stevens' Hospital, it would be desirable. The Dean was a Governor of, and contributor to, Dr. Stevens' Hospital.

3475. Do you find that the attendants generally pay proper attention to patients under your charge?—I think so.

3476. Are they a class that, from education and otherwise, are suitable for the employment?—From what I have seen, they appear very kind and attentive. Occasionally a person may get into a passion, and they have been several times fined. But that rests with the Moral Governor.

3477. In what manner do you and Surgeon Cusack make any representations which you may desire to convey to the Governors; is it in writing, such as by an entry in a book, or otherwise?—Verbally and in the book. The Governors meet four times a year, and once a month the Committee of Management meet. Any of the Governors may come to that monthly meeting.

3478. We understand those meetings of the Committee do not take place regularly?—They do; but, perhaps, there may be only two, three, four, or five members present. Sometimes they have a difficulty to elect a Governor in consequence of its being necessary to have a certain number—seven—present at the quarterly or adjourned quarterly board meetings. Three is the number necessary to do business on the Committee of Management.

3479. Is there any thing connected with the institution or the subject of our inquiry about which you would wish to make a suggestion to us?—The institution is of so great an age, that it has not the advantages that would be found in a new establishment of the kind. It has neither baths nor padded rooms, nor the other various appliances that you would see in a modern asylum. We want retiring rooms for those who are very violent, and various other matters; for instance, there is only one place in which to give baths.

The Board of Governors.

3480. I believe you act as secretary to the Board of Governors of Swift's Hospital?—I do.
3481. How long have you held that appointment?—Since November, 1852.
3482. The Board of Governors are partly ex officio and partly elected?—They are.
3483. Is the attendance of Governors on all occasions sufficient to enable the business to be carried on?—Not always.

3484. Have there been frequent occasions on which they failed to form a quorum?—Well, I should say there have been several occasions.

3485. I believe some of the ex officio offices, which entitle the holders to be Governors, have merged in others?—Yes, three, I believe.

3486. With reference to the deanery of Christ Church, which is now merged into that of St. Patrick's, is the Dean of St. Patrick's considered to have two votes at the Board?—He is.

3487. The office of State Physician, the holder of which would also be a Governor, no longer exists?—It is not in existence.

3488. Is any Committee of Governors usually appointed to superintend the hospital, and see that the resolutions of the Board are carried out?—Yes, when repairs are being made and alterations, such committees are appointed.

3489. Is there no permanent sub-committee, as contemplated by the Charter?—What was contemplated by the Charter was not, as stated in the question, a permanent sub-committee, but a committee of seven, three to be a quorum, to meet once a-month. The spirit of the rule is carried out by the Governors, as the Board meets once a-month, instead of quarterly only, which was all that was required by the Charter.

Rules and regulations.

3490. Have any rules and regulations been made from time to time for the government of the hospital, as contemplated by the Charter?—I am not very familiar with the proceedings of the hospital previous to my own appointment as secretary.

3491. Will you furnish us with a copy of any rules or regulations for the government of the hospital now in force?—I will.

3492. Can you inform the Commissioners what is the practice now with reference to the admission of free patients into the hospital—what is the number of free patients the Board consider they should receive?—The rule is that the number of free patients shall not exceed seventy-five.

Free patients.

3493. The number of free patients at present in the hospital does not reach seventy-five?—The number of free patients at present is sixty-six.

3494. Can you inform us upon what basis the calculation was made that seventy-five free patients should be received?—The resolution referred to respecting the number of free patients is as follows:—"Resolved—That in the present state of our funds, the number of free patients shall not exceed seventy-five."

3495. We wish to know whether the number seventy-five was resolved upon from any calculation of the funds at the disposal of the Governors?—It was upon a calculation, and was suggested by Governors long conversant with the institution.

3496. Are you aware that, since that resolution was adopted, the number never reached seventy-five?—Yes.

3497. Can you explain to the Commissioners why, considering that the number of free patients has not reached the maximum fixed, that, upon the first of the present month, a patient was refused admission, the entry in the minute-book being "No pauper vacancy"?—It will be seen, upon referring to the resolution, that it did not require that the number of free patients should always reach the maximum fixed, seventy-five, but only that it should not exceed that number. The number actually received would depend upon the state of the funds.

3498. Do you attend all the meetings of the Board?—I do.

Paying patients.

3499. It has been stated that the maximum sum received for a paying patient is £40 per annum?—The maximum sum received is forty guineas.

3500. Are the Governors in the habit of making inquiries as to whether a patient who may be a candidate for admission is enabled to pay a greater sum?—I know they are always very apt to receive statements upon that subject, and are always very willing to make reductions, where they are satisfied so much cannot be paid.

3501. In a case where a patient is able to pay a larger sum, would that be a ground for rejection?—Yes.

3502. We observe that within the last three years a patient was admitted who was a nobleman's son?—The nobleman's son referred to was admitted as a paying patient, at thirty pounds per annum, not as a free patient.

3503. Did the Governors make inquiries as to the inability of the family to pay more than that small sum per annum?—I believe they did, and they discovered there was a deficiency of means.

3504. Is he still in the hospital?—He is not.

3505. It appears from the minutes of the Governors that, on the 16th November, 1854, the memorial of an individual of the name of Kerr was considered, and it was stated not to be a case for a charitable asylum, and was rejected. At the ensuing monthly meeting the same case was admitted, paying £39 per annum; are you aware of the circumstances of that case?—Upon subsequent inquiry into Mr Kerr's circumstances, the Governors were satisfied that there were not means to pay more than the thirty pounds per annum.

3506. Has the question of the number of free patients that the charity ought to maintain been recently under the consideration of the Board?—The resolution which I speak of about the number of free patients was come to about three years ago.

3507. Since that period the matter has not been reconsidered?—No, I do not remember it being reconsidered.

3508. What is the usual course of proceeding in case a quorum of Governors may not assemble upon the appointed day to transact business?—We, generally speaking, merely go through routine business, such as passing the monthly accounts and things of that kind.

3509. It appears that on the 3rd of July, 1854, only one Governor was present, patients were admitted, and orders were made with reference to the general admission of cases—does that frequently occur?—No, I think not. I think I remember an instance of that kind, perhaps it is the one you allude to; Mr. Law was the Governor, and it was objected to on the next day of meeting by the other Governors.

3510. With regard to the granting of leases by the Board, is that confined to quarterly meetings?—It is strictly confined to the quarterly meetings.

3511. Do you remember any case of any of the ex officio Governors refusing to sign the minutes?—No, I do not.

3512. Are there any leases made to any of the officers of the institution?—There was an exchange of lands, in which Mr. Vaneboyle was concerned; I do not remember any other.

3513. Would you be enabled to furnish the Commissioners with a statement of the funds of the hospital and the sources from which they are derived?—Yes.

3514. Comprising also the bequests from time to time that have been made to the hospital?—I can do so.

3515. I observe a considerable portion of the funds of the institution are derived from land; by whom are the rent accounts audited?—They were generally audited by a sub-committee of two or three Governors. Mr. Albot was one of the committee, and Mr. French, who is dead, and Mr. Law, were, generally speaking, on it.

3516. With reference to the funded property of the institution, have the Governors of late years invested any money in Government stock?—There is £20,564 in stock; the last investment was one of £1,000, in 1843.

3517. Are the Governors in the habit of inspecting the institution from time to time themselves?—They are.

3518. It appears from the minutes that some years since an order was made for clinical instruction to be given in the institution?—It was not a positive order, but only a permission.

3519. Are you aware whether such lectures are delivered in the institution by medical men now?—They are not.

3520. Are you aware that in 1844 an order was made that keepers, waitresses, and persons of that class, might be admitted for instruction in the treatment of the insane?—It appears from the minute book, that an order was made to that effect.

3521. Are patients ever admitted in the intervals between the several Board days?—I think not for a considerable time. Some cases considered to be of a very pressing character have been admitted, pro tem, at a guinea per week, subject to the approval of the Board.

3522. Have those cases been scrutinized and examined by the ensuing Board?—Yes.

3523. There is a vacancy in the number of Governors; have any steps been taken to fill it up?—There were not a sufficient number of Governors present on the last Board day. There must be seven present for the purpose, and there being only six it was postponed.

3524. Will you be enabled to furnish the Commissioners with a statement of the number of admissions in the past year, distinguishing those admitted free and those admitted for payment, and stating the sums paid respectively by each?—Certainly.

3525. Have any propositions been under the consideration of the Governors of late years with reference to the extension of the hospital?—No; I do not at this moment recollect any.

3526. Has any scheme been proposed for expending the sum at present in the funds on any additional buildings?—No; not to my knowledge.

DUBLIN, 14TH JANUARY, 1857.

Present:—SIR T. N. REDINGTON, Chairman; Dr. CORRIGAN, and Mr. BARRY, Secretary.

FARNHAM HOUSE AND MARYVILLE PRIVATE ASYLUM (near Dublin).

JAMES DUNCOM, Esq., M.D., sworn and examined.

Farnham House and Maryville Private
Asylum (near Dublin).JAMES DUNCOM, Esq., M.D.General state of the Asylum.

3527. I believe you are the proprietor of the licensed establishment called Farnham House, for the reception of lunatics?—Yes; of Farnham House, and Maryville, the former for males, and the latter for females.

3528. For what number are those houses licensed?—Farnham House is licensed for thirty, and Maryville for fifty.

3529. How long have you been a proprietor of a licensed house for the reception of the insane?—Since the year 1815.

3530. What quantity of ground is attached to the institution?—Nearly fifty English acres.

3531. Are the whole of the grounds open to the patients?—No; I suppose nine or ten English acres are walled in.

3532. Does Farnham House consist of merely one building, or are there detached buildings?—There are detached buildings.

3533. And Maryville in like manner?—Yes; and Maryville in like manner.

3534. Were any portions of the building constructed expressly as an asylum for the insane?—The old building has had considerable additions made to it, and there were two buildings, one for females, and the other a few years ago, built expressly for the males.

3535. Did the old buildings, which were not built for the purpose of an asylum, afford convenient means of locating lunatic patients?—They did, with alterations which were made from the first.

3536. Is the asylum provided with baths and bath-rooms?—Yes.

3537. Is there a regular supply of water laid on in the establishment?—There is a force pump, and pipes are laid on.

3538. Is there a supply of hot water laid on in like manner through the house?—There is a boiler with a constant supply of hot water, but the hot water is not laid on in pipes.

3539. When warm baths are required for patients, how are they provided?—The hot water is carried from the boiler, through the house.

3541. Is there any separate room appropriated for cases for which seclusion is deemed advisable?—There is a padded room, but it has scarcely ever been made use of. We have a separate cottage for patients that are noisy and that occasion disturbance at night; however, for a number of years past, I suppose for six or eight, or ten years, we have not had occasion to make use of it. It is on one side of the lodge, and consists of a couple of rooms. You can see it on the plan.

3542. Is there any regular padded room, fitted up in the manner that such apartments usually are, for cases in which seclusion may be considered necessary?—There is one, but we have scarcely had occasion to make use of it. It is not in the cottage that I speak of, it is in the house.

3543. How long is it since you have had occasion to place patients in the padded room?—I don't think it has ever been used for the purposes of restraint, as such rooms usually are.

3544. Have you had many cases of violent patients in the asylum?—Yes; a good many.

3545. What is the system you adopt with violent patients?—Generally, where they are apt to strike, putting muffs on their hands, or putting on the waistcoat occasionally.

3546. Have you been obliged to have recourse to such mechanical means of restraint upon many occasions?—No, I think not; we have sometimes been, I believe, twelve months without making use of either one or the other, in consequence of having a sufficient number of attendants where a patient is violent, to watch and sit up with him in turn, or having sometimes a couple of attendants to sleep in the room with him at night, so as it were to overawe him and prevent him becoming violent, which he might be inclined to do with one individual, whom he thought he could overpower; but for years together we have not had occasion to use either one or the other of the means of restraint I have mentioned.

3547. Have you found that keeping a patient restrained, by physical force on the part of the attendants, has led to considerable excitement in that patient?—I don't allow the use of physical force on any account.

3548. Then have you found that in cases of extremely violent patients, the mere presence of the attendants has been sufficient to restrain them?—Not always.

3549. In such cases to what measures have you had recourse?—If they are extremely violent, then I would either have the muff or the waistcoat put on them, but in ordinary cases the presence of a couple of attendants in the room and speaking to the patients, have been in general sufficient.

Violent patients: means of restraining
them.

3550. Do you prefer the use of mechanical restraint, to removal to the padded room and to seclusion, in such cases?—I do; in many cases it is only to prevent them tearing their clothes that I put on mechanical restraint, but if a patient is violent and apt to strike persons I would put him into the padded room. In our institution the situation of the padded room makes it more objectionable to the patient than to be subjected to mechanical restraint, if the individual has intellect enough to be aware of the difference. I would say generally that I am for non-mechanical restraint.

3551. In whose charge are the instruments of restraint left?—They are left in charge of my son, with particular instructions to the attendants, that they are never to be put on without consulting him or myself.

3552. You are satisfied that they are always in your son's charge?—Yes; they are always in his charge.

3553. Is Dr. Nugent Duncan, to whom you refer, the medical attendant of the institution?—Yes; he and his wife reside there constantly.

3554. Do you keep any record of cases of restraint?—No; except generally by communicating with their friends; that is, when making the Report, stating that since the last Report the patient has been either violent or tranquil.

3555. Do you keep any medical journal according to the form given in the 8th and 9th Vic. cap. 107?—A private one has been kept, but not in the particular form given in the Act. For many years, from the first establishment of the institution, I kept a regular account of the cases, but I have not done so of late years. In some cases, such as military cases, I made a report to the Horse Guards monthly, as to the state of the patients.

The records of the establishment.

3556. Has any journal been kept according to the form in Schedule G, to the Act of the 5th and 6th Vic.?—No; I have come to the conclusion it is not required to be kept by the medical proprietor of a private lunatic asylum. That schedule refers only to lunatic asylums kept by non-medical proprietors. I have suggested to the inspectors to furnish me with any forms they wished to be kept, and I would keep them.

3557. Then, in point of fact, there is no record whatever kept in the institution of the cases in which restraint is used?—There is, but it is a private one; it is not kept under the Act in any way.

3558. Is there any book laid before the inspector on the occasion of his visits, that would show the cases of restraint that had taken place?—No.

3559. Is there any case book for reference as to the treatment of cases, if such things should be required into?—For a number of years I kept a regular account and report of the cases, but of late years I have not done so. In particular cases there is generally a report regularly made to the friends of the individual; it may be weekly or monthly.

3560. Do you keep a book containing a list of all the patients in your house, in conformity with Schedule C, of the Private Lunatic Asylums Act, 5th and 6th Vic. chap. 123?—Yes.

3561. Is there a patients' book kept in the institution as prescribed by the 25th section?—Yes.

3562. Are these books regularly laid before the inspector, on the occasion of his visits?—Regularly.

3563. There is a visitors' inspection book kept?—There is.

3564. Do the inspectors make entries in that book on the occasion of their several visits?—They do; sometimes they come down and pay a visit, and desire the book to be sent to the Castle, to their office, for them. They enter there their reports, not having time to do so on the occasion of the visit. Sometimes also, they come and pay visits, and don't always mark the date. Dr. Nugent, in particular, has frequently come down and paid short visits without entering anything; but they enter them generally afterwards.

3565. Then the entries are not regularly made on the particular occasion when the visit is paid?—There may be a few omissions, but they will be filled up afterwards. The regular course is to enter them when paying the visit.

3566. What arrangements are made for the attendance of the inmates upon religious worship?—The clergyman of the parish calls upon the Protestant patients, to visit them, as often as he is required. A number of these also go to church, and the Roman Catholic clergyman comes to visit the Roman Catholic patients, and has Mass celebrated in the house four times during the year, while those who are able to go out, go to chapel on Sunday regularly. The Roman Catholic clergyman is paid regularly for his attendance in the establishment. Formerly the Protestant curate was paid; now there is no curate, and the rector attends as often as is necessary. I have not considered it necessary to pay him, but he is just as attentive as if I did, and he never asked anything.

Religious worship.

3567. What employments, amusements, or recreations, are provided for the patients?—There is a billiard table, there are cards, backgammon, bogatelle; there is walking exercise, spring-boards, and some go out to catch birds.

Amusements and recreations.

3568. I presume you consider that providing employments and amusements for the patients is very material in their curative treatment?—No doubt. Some patients I had kept horses while they were there, and rode out. Portions of the grounds are allotted for gardening, sowing seeds, and growing flowers, and we have rabbits and pigeons.

3569. Are you careful that the patients, who may be received into your establishment, are detained there under such legal orders authorizing their detention as the Act requires?—Perfectly so.

The detention of patients; the legal orders.

3570. On the occasion of the Commissioners' visit, it appeared that in one or two cases such orders did not exist; one was the case of a Chancery patient?—I have found since that it was the patient's stepmother's brother, who signed the order. I don't know whether Dunnan.

Asylum (near Dublin).*

James Dunnan,
Esq., M.D.

the mother was in the country at the time or not. In another case the patient was received into the house before the Act of Parliament requiring the order came into force. He was a Chancery lunatic. In a third case, application was made to the brother of a gentleman on whose authority the patient was originally placed there, to sign the formal order, and he has never done so, but the party at my asylum is an undoubted lunatic. This third case was frequently visited by Surgeon Piche, for a number of years, upon the part of the Home Guards.

3571. In cases where Chancery lunatics are placed in your custody, do you require the order as in other cases for the detention of the parties?—Yes.

Rates of charge.

3572. What is the usual sum you receive for patients?—From 80 to 120 guineas per annum; the sums vary according to the attendance required. Where a special attendance is required, the payment is at the rate of £50 per quarter.

3573. In all these cases, the patients, I presume, have separate rooms?—Yes; in all these cases.

3574. Is the clothing of the patients provided for in that arrangement?—No.

3575. Are the patients generally clad by their families?—They are generally clad by their families. Sometimes we do it with their permission, and are reimbursed by them; but unfortunately I have one or two cases at present, and have had others, in which I get neither payment for their clothing nor for their maintenance for a number of years, and I cannot turn the patients out upon the streets.

3576. Are we to understand that you are sustaining such cases at your own personal cost?—Yes; at my own personal cost. I should state that from 20 to 30 guineas a quarter is the usual charge.

3577. Do the male patients dine together?—A certain number of them that are sufficiently well dine at my own table; others dine in their own rooms, according to their several classes. A few dine together.

3578. Have you ever had applications made to you to receive patients at a lower rate than you thought would be remunerative?—Very often.

Cases of patients who cannot pay the full charge.

3579. Can you form any opinion of what becomes of these cases you have been obliged to refuse?—I believe that generally they have gone to Swift's Hospital, or some other such establishment.

3580. Is it your opinion there is any considerable portion of the insane population who are above poverty, but yet unable to pay the lowest sum for which they could be adequately maintained in a licensed asylum?—I think there is; but I am sorry to have to add that there are some well able to pay, who are willing to get their insane relatives into institutions at a reduced rate, or free if possible.

3581. Are there any charitable institutions in this country that you are aware of besides Swift's Hospital, and the Bloomfield Retreat, maintained by the Society of Friends, in which patients will be received at a less sum than is requisite for their maintenance, or for the more cost of their maintenance?—I am not aware of any others.

Physical restraint.

3582. You mentioned that you generally substituted restraint by means of the attendants, for the use of the padded room?—Yes.

3583. You stated that you knew of no bad results from the exercise of physical force on the part of the attendants towards the patients; do you mean by physical force a struggle continued between the patients and the attendants?—Not at all.

Fire-places in rooms.

3584. Are there fire-places in the rooms of the patients?—Generally.

3585. So that in case of a patient being ill, you can have a fire made in his room?—Yes; always.

Religious discrimina-
tions.

3586. Can you make a rough guess as to the relative proportions of the religions of the various inmates of the establishment?—Yes; the great majority of them are Protestants; about five out of forty-five are Roman Catholics.

Suicidal case.

3587. I see that in 1854, one of the inmates committed suicide; will you state the circumstances under which that occurred?—The lady had been only two or three days under our care, and at the time the case in was very uneasy and very distressed; we watched her particularly, and had given strict charges to the maid that was sleeping in the room with her, as well as to the maid attending on her in the day-time, to be very careful about her. The one maid relieved the other in attendance. The maid who had been in attendance during the night, left at 7 o'clock in the morning, to call the other, and on this occasion while she was away for only a few minutes, she found on her return the lady suspended from the bedpost. She had been absent only about five minutes. All this is on the depositions that were taken before the coroner.

BELLEVUE PRIVATE ASYLUM.

Richard Gregory, Esq., Surgeon, sworn and examined.

3588. Are you the proprietor of a licensed house for the reception of insane patients near the City of Dublin?—Yes, Bellevue.

3589. Have you been long connected with that establishment?—Better than three years, since my father's death, and for very many years before his death; in fact I have been connected with it all my life.

Visits of Inspectors.

3590. Is the establishment visited regularly by the inspectors?—Yes; they come at different intervals, sometimes more frequently than at others.

3591. Do they visit you at least twice within the year?—Oh, certainly.

3592. For what number of patients is your establishment licensed?—Forty.

3593. What is the present number of inmates?—Twenty-two males, and ten females; there were thirty-five altogether on the 1st of January.

3594. What quantity of ground is attached to the institution available for patients to take recreation in?—I should say twelve acres; but all the patients have not access to that. The convalescent walk out there alone, and others with attendance. All patients have access to three acres.

3595. Is there a medical journal kept in the establishment, according to the form in Schedule G of the Act?—Yes.

3596. Is there a patients' book also kept as required by the Act?—No; there is a visitors' book and the visiting inspector's book regularly kept.

3597. Do the inspectors enter their visits therein and observations, at the periods of their visits?—Not always; they make three or four visits sometimes, and on the third or fourth occasion they make entries for all.

3598. Is your institution supplied with shower-baths, and such like?—Yes.

3599. Is it also provided with water-closets?—There is only one water-closet; but there are general necessaries.

3600. Was the building originally constructed for an asylum?—It was originally a private residence, and my father adapted it for the purpose of an asylum.

3601. Are there any padded rooms for violent patients?—There was a room built for such patients, but my father never completed it.

3602. Is seclusion at all practised in the institution?—There is a large place where a patient that is violent can walk about and be alone.

3603. Is it so fitted up that he would be unable to do injury to himself?—It is not padded.

3604. What is your mode of dealing with very violent cases?—To avoid all exciting causes; leave the patients as much as possible to themselves, and treat them as kindly as can be done.

3605. Are mechanical restraints used?—Very rarely, and when at all only for a short period, during a paroxysm.

3606. What mechanical restraints are used?—The muff, leather gloves.

3607. In whose custody are the means of restraint kept?—They are in charge of a confidential servant.

3608. Is it in the power of the attendants to administer shower-baths to patients, without your knowledge?—No; they never do. Patients ask me sometimes to get shower-baths. Every patient gets a reclining bath each week.

3609. Is a patient when he is in a violent state removed from the society of the other patients?—Yes; I believe when you visited the house I showed you a patient who had a yard to himself.

3610. On the occasion of the Commissioners' visit, there was a patient under restraint in the sitting room?—Yes; he is very mischievous, and also dangerous. He has been in the asylum some twenty years.

3611. Do you ever practise seclusion in those cases?—Never.

3612. What are the arrangements for religious attendance upon the patients?—A Catholic clergyman attends. The place is open to him to visit the patients of his persuasion. The Protestant clergyman also visits, and those who are able to go to church do so. Patients of other persuasions are visited by clergymen. The Roman Catholic clergyman is paid for his attendance by me.

3613. Can you give a rough estimate of the proportions of the various religious persuasions in your institution?—The majority are Roman Catholics.

3614. Are the apartments usually provided with fire-places?—The majority are. In twenty of the apartments for gentlemen there are fire-places, and in eight none. In ten of the rooms for ladies there are fire-places, and five rooms are without them.

3615. What employments and amusements are provided for the patients?—There are books, and many have their own musical instruments, which they prefer; they have walking exercise, driving; some have horses and cars.

3616. What is the payment you usually receive?—I get for one patient £270 a-year; from others I get as low as £25. The average is £80 a-year.

3617. Is it your opinion that in the country generally there is a considerable number of persons who are above the class of paupers, but who are unable to pay for their maintenance in private asylums?—I think there is.

3618. Do you form that opinion from having had many applications for admission at reduced rates, which you were obliged to reject?—Yes; I have had a good many applications made to me for admission at reduced rates.

3619. Have you ever had any cases of suicide in your establishment?—Never; nor any accident, I am happy to say.

3620. I believe the licenses are taken out annually at Quarter Sessions?—Yes; in the month of October.

3621. Are any interrogatories put to you, or any inquiries made by the magistrate relative to the working of the asylum or other matters?—The Reports of the Inspectors of Asylums, must be before the magistrate at the time. So far as I am concerned, they never have had occasion to find fault.

*Hampstead Private Asylum (near Dublin).
J. EVERTS, Esq., M.D.,

3622. I believe you and your brother are the proprietors of a licensed house for the reception of the insane, called Hampshire?—Yes.

3623. How long have you been connected with such institutions?—My brother and myself are the proprietors for the last year of the establishment, and before that, we superintended it since 1846.

*Number of inmates;
the building and ground.*

3624. For how many inmates is your house licensed?—It is licensed at present for thirty-six; twenty-three males and thirteen females.

3625. What is the present number of inmates?—Twenty-seven; eighteen males and nine females.

3626. Is the establishment one connected building, or is it rather composed of several detached buildings?—Several buildings.

3627. What quantity of ground attached to the asylum is accessible to the patients?—About twenty-five statute acres.

3628. On applying for the renewal of your license, is any inquiry made by the magistrate as to the condition of the establishment?—The reports of the inspectors for the year are usually laid before the magistrate, but there was no remark made upon them, they were satisfactory.

The orders for the detention of patients.

3629. Are all the inmates detained in your establishment, placed there by proper authority; are the orders in due form?—Yes.

3630. On the visit of the Commissioners, it appeared there was a lunatic in the asylum, with reference to whom there was only one medical certificate, and no order?—He was removed to our asylum from the Dandrum Asylum, where he had been previously sent, and we got a letter from one of the inspectors, Dr. Nugent, authorizing the giving him over to our custody and care. That letter we left with Dr. Corbet, of the Dandrum Asylum, and Dr. Corbet afterwards sent the medical certificate. I signed a paper also, stating I had received the lunatic into my custody.

3631. Do the inspectors frequently visit your establishment?—They do visit it frequently.

3632. How often in the year?—They are irregular as to the periods of visiting, and sometimes nearly six months might elapse without a visit from them. Then we may have two, three, or four visits in quick succession. Altogether I think the average of their visits would be probably at least six times a year.

3633. Do they make records of these visits in the inspector's visiting book?—Only at times when they consider it necessary.

The asylum records.

3634. There is such a book kept?—Yes.

3635. Is there a regular medical journal kept?—There is not now, but there was up to a certain date, when we left it off, having been advised that it did not apply to our establishment. It was kept up to the 13th March, 1854. We thought it applied only to establishments the proprietors of which were not medical men.

3636. By whom were you advised that it was not necessary?—By Mr. Foote, who is a practicing barrister.

3637. Is there a patients' book kept, as required by the Act?—There is.

3638. Is there a regular entry of the patients admitted, as required by the Act?—Yes.

3639. Is there any case-book kept by you, showing the treatment of patients in case of bodily illness, apart from insanity?—No, there was not a regular case-book; there were notes taken at times. There is not a regular prescription book.

3640. Then there is no book which, in the event of the sudden death of the proprietor or medical attendant, would indicate what might have been the treatment of different sick patients?—No; there is not. We have now got a book for the purpose, and are about keeping a regular case-book. We have done so on the suggestion of the Commissioners, when they visited, that we ought to keep such a book.

Baths.

3641. Is the establishment provided with baths?—Yes.

3642. Are they in the house, or in a detached building?—They are in a detached building.

3643. Are shower-baths much used?—No; they are not, except in summer. They are merely used for the purpose of improving the bodily health of the patients with us, as a tonic application.

3644. Are the attendants enabled to give shower or other baths to the patients, without reference to the attending physician of the establishment?—They are not.

3645. Is there any room or rooms set apart for violent patients, such as padded rooms?—Not specially. We use one of the common bed-rooms for the purpose, whenever it is necessary; a bed-room with the furniture removed out of it, or more frequently the patient's own bed-room, in which case the furniture would not be removed. When I say the furniture is removed, I should state that it is very seldom done. We have not had to use a room in that way for more than a year.

3546. What treatment do you apply in the cases of violent patients?—We give in the first place general directions to the attendants to interfere as little as possible with the patient, to allow him as much licence as can possibly be done, so as not to appear to be taking too much notice of him, to use all possible forbearance; and in case they find they cannot manage a patient, they are to come and tell us immediately. I usually leave an additional number of attendants in such cases; besides we generally use medical means. We give sedatives, and sometimes porter, and wine even in cases of great violence.

3547. Supposing cases of patients labouring under violent paroxysms, and with respect to whom those remedies could have no immediate effect, what is the course you adopt for quieting them?—If a patient is totally unmanageable, we give directions to try and get that patient to remain in his own room; if very violent, with the furniture removed into one of the other rooms, as I stated before, for a short time. We see the patient soon after. In answering that question I can only tell you from recollection what we have done in those very violent cases. We do not often meet them.

3548. Is mechanical restraint used in the asylum?—Not at all.

3550. Is the establishment provided with water-closets?—It is partially provided with water-closets. That portion of it which is occupied by the ladies is. The gentlemen's house is not.

3551. Are the rooms generally provided with fire-places?—About one-fourth of the bed-rooms are.

3552. Are there any artificial means of heating the house?—Yes; portions of the establishment are heated by warm air.

3553. What amusements are provided for the patients?—They have periodicals, books, newspapers and writing; the periodicals are regularly taken. And they have athletic games, quoits, poles, backgammon, chess, cards, and music.

3554. What arrangements are made for religious attendance on the patients?—The Protestant clergyman attends at the establishment and performs religious service for the patients at irregular intervals, usually not less than once a month. The Catholic clergyman visits the establishment, and such of the patients as are fit to do so attend church and chapel, accompanied by the warden, or some of the attendants.

3555. How many patients on an average go out to religious worship on Sundays?—I could not say more than one, on an average; on some occasions there are three or four, and sometimes none at all. There was not one on last Sunday.

3556. If a patient expressed a desire to go to a place of worship, and that there was nothing in the state of his health to prevent him, or that would lead you to suppose the excitement of a house of worship would be injurious to him, would any obstacle be raised to his going?—No obstacle whatever.

3557. What is your opinion as to the advantage of religious communication with the patients?—We think, where it is judiciously conducted, it is rather beneficial. We have found it so.

3558. State the maximum and minimum sums you receive for patients?—Excluding the persons we have kept at a low rate on the ground of charity, the lowest payment which we receive is £40 a-year at present, and the highest is £150.

3559. Have you frequently had applications to receive patients of the middle class into your establishment, whom you were obliged to refuse, they being unable to pay a sufficient sum for their maintenance?—Yes.

3560. Can you form any idea of what becomes of those cases; are they kept still in their private residences, or do they seek admission as paupers into district asylums, or elsewhere?—They are usually taken into some of the other private asylums at a lower rate, or into the district asylum.

3561. Is it your opinion that there is a large class who cannot be considered paupers, but who at the same time are really unable to pay, from their limited means, a remunerative sum for their maintenance in a licensed establishment?—Yes; that is my opinion. It is of course on the understanding that they would be properly treated.

3562. Are you accustomed to restrain patients mechanically?—Not for the last twelve years. Within that time there was an exception in this way: in the case of a patient who refused to take food, the stomach-pump was used to administer food, and restraint was used during the introduction of the tube. We have a strait waistcoat, which came to the asylum on a patient. I may answer that we never use mechanical restraint.

3563. What proportion of the inmates in your establishment are of the Established Church?—About twenty of the number belong to the Established Church.

3564. I believe you are the proprietor of a licensed house called Hartfield, at Drumcadder?—I am.

3565. For what number is it licensed?—For fifty; twenty-five males, and twenty-five females.

3566. What is the present number of inmates?—Twenty-one of each sex; in all forty-two.

Visits of the Inspectors.

3667. When was your licence last renewed?—In October last. It is for twelve months from the time of its being granted.

3668. How long have you been connected with an institution of this kind?—I have been the proprietor of Hartfield, thirteen years last September.

3669. Is the institution regularly visited by the Inspectors of Asylums?—It is frequently visited by them.

3670. How often in the year?—I think, last year, it was visited about six times.

3671. Do they make entries on the occasion of each visit, in the Inspectors' visiting book?—Not on every occasion; on some occasions they do, and at other visits they do not report.

3672. Do they examine the orders and medical certificates, to see that everything relative to the detention of the patients is according to law?—They do occasionally during the year, but not on all occasions.

3673. On the occasion of the Commissioners' visit, it appeared that in one instance there was no order?—I believe I explained at that time that the patient had come in for some property, and the Lord Chancellor ordered her to be sent to a private asylum from the Richmond, where she had been for some years. One of the Inspectors asked me would I take her, I said yes, and they stated a medical certificate would not be required under the circumstances, but I have got a medical certificate since.

3674. There were two other cases in which there appeared to be no medical certificate?—In one case there was a certificate, signed by the Committee of the person. As the case came from another institution, and as the person was a Chancery patient, it was not thought necessary to have the certificate.

3675. How is it officially communicated to you that parties are Chancery patients?—On signing the ordinary certificate it is always mentioned, and also how long the party has been under the Commission. In the one case, Dr. Harty, to whom the patient was originally entrusted, had the original certificate. It was with the knowledge, and by the authority of the two inspectors the patient was transferred to me. The second of the cases you have just referred to, is not a Chancery patient. He was many years at Dr. Harty's, and was transferred to me by his brother, who is the next of kin, and the Inspectors were aware of this also. He came without any additional medical certificate the day after the last-mentioned patient, and Dr. Harty holds the medical certificate.

3676. Do you keep a regular registry of the patients who are received into your establishment?—I do.

3677. Do you keep a medical journal according to Schedule G of the Act?—I do not; and it is considered that does not apply to cases where the proprietor of an establishment is a medical man.

3678. Do you keep a patients' book, as required by the Act?—I do.

3679. What is the extent of ground attached to your establishment, which is accessible to the patients?—The garden, about an acre and a quarter, and there is a lawn in which the quiet patients can walk; altogether there are five or six Irish acres. None but the quiet patients enjoy the advantage of the lawn. The others are confined to their own garden, and they occasionally take a walk through the country, along the road.

3680. Is your house supplied with baths?—Yes; it is supplied with six baths, and shower-baths.

3681. Is there any fixed bath, with water laid on?—No.

3682. Are there any means of giving a bath to a patient, except by means of the slipper-bath?—There are not. It is moved from room to room, according as it is required.

3683. Are the rooms generally provided with fire-places?—All the sitting-rooms are provided with fire-places, and all the bed-rooms, with the exception of three or four.

3684. Is there any padded room for secluding patients in?—No, I have not one; I did not see any necessity for it. I would have one made if I saw that it was required.

3685. What measures of restraint, if any, are used with regard to violent patients?—It is very seldom I use restraint, even with violent patients. The muf is very rarely used. I suppose I was for several years without having a strait waistcoat in the house.

3686. In the event of a patient being in a violent paroxysm, which in the course of time must occur in almost all asylums, what means do you take for quieting such a patient?—The moral treatment is by placing them in a middle-sized room, well ventilated, and removing all the furniture from it, where they are watched by the attendants, and visited by myself.

3687. What protection has a patient against injuring himself in such an apartment, considering that the walls are not padded?—There is always an attendant within call to prevent anything of the kind, and I never had any case of injury.

3688. When you speak of a patient being confined in a room, do you mean that the attendant remains with him in the room?—Sometimes inside, but mostly outside, in an adjoining apartment. As to restraint, I have a muf at present, and lately within six or seven months, I got a waistcoat, which I thought necessary on one occasion.

3689. With whom are those instruments of restraint deposited?—Generally an attendant in whom I have confidence.

3690. A confidence that the use will not be abused?—Such an abuse could not well occur without my knowing it, I am there so constantly.

3691. What means of recreation are provided for the patients?—They have reading, walking exercise through the country; such as are fit, digging, planting potatoes, for exercise and amusement; they have occasionally cards, haggadic, and conversation.

Means of recreation.

3692. Practically do the patients avail themselves of these means of recreation?—I find they are very reluctant to do so; very few will avail themselves of them.

3693. Are they provided with any musical instruments?—There were musical instruments, but they were broken almost immediately on their being got. There is a piano.

3694. What arrangements are made for religious attendance upon the patients?—We have an oratory, and there is a regular attendance of clergy every Sunday and holiday.

3695. You mean a Roman Catholic oratory?—Yes.

3696. What proportion of the inmates of your establishment are not Roman Catholics?—I have only four or five Protestants.

3697. What arrangements are made for religious attendance upon those who are not Catholics?—I have proposed to have a parish clergyman there, but nearly on all occasions I was told it was quite useless; and the clergyman himself told me that from the state of mind of the person I called him to, it was not necessary for him to come again. I allowed patients, when able, to go to church, and several have gone. Some went regularly to the Rev. Mr. Gregg's church, in Lower Gardiner-street, and others to Drumcondra church.

3698. State the maximum and minimum sums received for patients?—I think the highest at present is £120, and there are some poor relations that I take very low, they being unable to pay. The lowest of those is about £20. I have one at that sum, but the lowest ordinary charge is thirty guineas, and I have rarely any at that sum.

3699. These are the cases you take as a matter of business?—Yes.

3700. Have you frequently had applications for the reception of patients who were unable to pay a sum that would remunerate you for your maintenance and care of them?—Yes; I have had a good number of applications from such persons.

3701. What generally becomes of those cases?—I have known some to go into other private establishments. I don't know what becomes of the generality of them.

3702. Is there any case-book or prescription-book kept with reference to the ordinary bodily ailments of the patients?—There is no prescription-book; there is a case-book in which I enter any thing particular. It is more a note-book than a case-book.

3703. Have you had many patients who are lunatics under Commissions of the Court of Chancery?—I have had a good many.

3704. In those cases the arrangement is made with you by the Committee of the Insane?—Yes, by the Committee.

3705. Is there anything defective in the law as regards the custody and care of such lunatics?—So far as their maintenance is concerned, I think there is a great deficiency. I have known cases where the lunatic had a maintenance ordered by the Court of Chancery, we will say in round numbers, of £150 per year. The Committee will generally make as hard a bargain as he possibly can with the proprietor of an asylum, and even after doing that will not pay him regularly. In a great many instances I think a great deficiency is, that when Committees are passing their accounts annually the receipt of those persons having the care and maintenance of the lunatic is not sufficiently regarded, or at least I don't think it is ever asked for; and the Committee takes credit for the full amount allowed by the Court, and gets that credit without its being known whether the medical man or other person having the charge of the patient, is paid or not. I have known cases in which I sustained heavy loss, I did not get what was due to me for the maintenance of patients. The money was not paid regularly during the lifetime, and after the death of a lunatic, the proprietor of the asylum is generally not paid.

3706. In the case to which you refer, a contract for the maintenance of the patient having been made with you by the Committee, would you not have a ready remedy against the person who entered into that agreement with you?—I believe not; it is to the property of the lunatic you have to look. In a case that occurred lately, there was nearly a simple means in court to pay me the balance due to me on the death of the lunatic. The payment was let to fall into arrear by the Committee, and I applied to the Lord Chancellor, through my solicitor, for the money in Court. The Chancellor ordered me £100 out of it, leaving a balance in Court, with the proviso that I would bring the Committee before the Court, and make him pass his account, and lodge the balance due by him. I was driven to that in order to get the rest of the money, about £70. I was obliged to urge him to pass his account, and the expense of my application exactly absorbed the sum that remained in Court to the credit of the estate, and which would have paid me off. My solicitor, I suppose, has got that money. The Committee is insolvent, and his two sureties are insolvent, and I was left unpaid the balance. The solicitor's bill of costs came to about £50, and I suppose he has got the balance out of Court. Another great grievance connected with Chancery patients is the great neglect by the Committees of the clothing of the patients. They appear to think every farthing given for a lunatic is thrown away. I have one case, at present, in the house, of a lunatic who is under the Court of Chancery, with upwards of £2,000 in bank, and a nice property besides, and yet I cannot get sufficient clothing for her. She is in a most disgraceful state. When I asked for a warm muff or cloak for her, at the commencement of the winter, I was sent a little brown mantle that would scarcely fit a child, and not more than a pound and a-half weight.

3707. The clothing of the patients in your establishment is not included in the stipend you receive?—No. I may add, that this lady has not been out of the house for some weeks or months, in consequence of not having sufficient clothing. I have written frequently to the Committee, and I always got a very short answer. Arrears of maintenance are due to me also.

BLOOMFIELD RETREAT.

John Moss, Esq., affirms, and is examined.

3708. I believe you are the superintendent of the Bloomfield Retreat?—Yes.

3709. I believe that is an institution supported by the Society of Friends?—Yes; and belonging to the Society of Friends.

3710. Will you describe exactly the nature of that institution?—It is an asylum for members of the Society of Friends in the first instance, and if there are vacancies in the institution they at the same time admit individuals belonging to other communities.

3711. Are the members of other persuasions who may be admitted under those circumstances received on the same terms?—No; those who are belonging to the Society of Friends have an especial claim to be admitted at the lowest rate, which would be 8s. per week; because the Society in the first place subscribed the money for the purchasing of the ground, and for the building, and so forth, and also additional sums in order that the additional expenses may in a great measure be defrayed. But those who are wholly unconnected with the Society of Friends are called upon to pay such a sum as it is considered will compensate the institution for the care and the necessary expense attending upon the case. The circumstances of the parties who pay for the individual are also borne in mind.

3712. Is the institution managed or conducted by a Committee?—The institution is managed by a Committee of twelve members of the Society of Friends, who meet weekly at the institution to inspect the books, and also the various accounts, receipts, and disbursements. There is a Sub-committee appointed of the men who visit the institution at least two or three times during the month, and there is also a Sub-committee of the ladies who do the same. The Sub-committees visit those of their own sex, unless there are peculiar circumstances indeed to prevent their doing so. They also acquaint themselves with the entire working of the institution—the general domestic arrangements.

3713. By whom are the admissions regulated?—Suppose a person was about to seek for admission, in the first place application is made to me, and I acquaint myself with the particulars of the case, and see whether it is one suitable for admission, so far as I am capable of judging from the conversation that takes place. I also acquaint myself with the pecuniary circumstances of the individual, the nature of the case, and the probable requirements, and upon those circumstances I state to the individual what I consider it is very likely the Committee will require. It might be £80, or £100, or £120, or £200, according to the attendance that may be necessary and the expense that may be incurred. Having acquainted myself with those particulars, I bring the case before the Committee, at their meeting, and state that there has been an application made to me for the admission of a patient, and I communicate to them the general particulars to which I have already referred. If they feel satisfied the case is clear, so far as I have been able to lay information before them, they authorize me, upon the production of two medical certificates, to admit the individual, and upon the necessary payment in advance of the sum stipulated. When a patient comes I expect to receive the two medical certificates, and at the next meeting of the Committee, who hold their meetings weekly, I lay upon the table the certificate and the guarantee for the payment, and any other information that I may possess, in order to show them, as far as we are capable of judging, that we have acted with strict integrity; that so far as the law is concerned, we believe the case is a bona fide one of insanity, within the meaning of the Act authorizing us to receive it.

3714. Is the course you have sketched that which is pursued with reference to the reception of patients who are not members of the Society?—Yes; the same course is pursued in connexion with all who come under our notice, and the same care in inquiring privately, if we can, into the nature of the case and the particulars. I was brought up as an apothecary, and practised for many years, and that it was I believe gave me a taste for this pursuit.

3716. How often does Dr. Harvey attend?—He comes upon an average three times a week, but frequently four, five, or six times if we have any case at all that requires it. Never less I think than three times, if we are all quite well. And in other cases, if we think it all necessary, we call in Dr. Croker, or any other medical man we think proper, regardless of any expense.

3717. The institution is not considered to be one, I believe, coming under the provision of the Private Asylum Act?—So I understand.

3718. I mean that it is not a licensed house?—It is not; but we are regularly visited by the Inspectors-General of Lunatic Asylums in Ireland.

3719. How frequently are these visits made?—The entries made in the book, I think, are not very frequent. There are not above three in the year, as entered in the book; but I ought to say that they very frequently pay visits in connexion with things in the institution; for instance, suppose a certificate arrived, I frequently have had a visit from one of them to inquire into the particulars of the case. They have also called upon me to give my opinion, from my experience, of the various cases I have had under my care; but those visits have not been entered in the book. Though they are important to us, they do not make any entry unless they have gone through the whole establishment.

3720. Is the establishment provided with baths?—Yes; we have warm baths, and we have also an apparatus for shower-baths.

Baths.

3721. Can a shower-bath be administered to any patient without your authority?—Not without its being an utter violation of all rule.

3722. Is there any padded room for the seclusion of violent patients in the establishment?—There is not.

3723. What is your course of treatment for patients who may get into violent paroxysms and require to be restrained?—Well, in some of those cases where they become exceedingly excited, we have found it beneficial to put them into a room for a short time alone, and in some instances, where there has been a reasonable probability that they would do injury to themselves or to others, if we come to the conclusion that such was very likely to be the case, we then, under those circumstances, which very rarely occur, use the strait waistcoat. This we put on in a very loose manner, and only allow it to remain on until the excitement is gone down; but I do not allow, under any circumstances, any of the attendants to apply any of those means without our approbation, and I may say our ordering the thing, taking it in fact upon ourselves and in consultation with our physician.

3724. When a patient under such circumstances is confined to a room, do you mean a room without furniture in it, or an ordinary sleeping room?—We have found in most cases of female patients that putting them into a bed-room was enough, only taking out the furniture; but in cases of male patients, we have found it well to remove all articles, unless the bed is fastened to the floor, and just shut the door.

3725. Have you had many violent cases in connexion with this institution?—Yes; I have had some exceedingly violent cases, some of the worst of cases; and some of the worst cases have become the most subdued, the most orderly, the most affectionate, and the most respectful.

3726. How long have you been in connexion with this establishment?—About eight years.

3727. Have any accidents occurred in the establishment from the violence of patients during that period?—Not any. It might have occurred that a patient struck another patient on one occasion, but nothing resulted from it.

3728. Have you had any cases of suicide?—Not one. We have suicidal patients, very bad cases. We have some most determined cases of suicide mania.

3729. Have they attempted suicide?—Yes; and we have had homicidal cases. They made attempts upon myself in three instances.

3730. What provision is made for religious attendance upon the patients?—The religious attendance, or the religious care of the patients, appears to devolve pretty much upon ourselves as the head of the household. We endeavour, as far as we are capable, to diffuse amongst them those means which we believe are best calculated to keep alive a religious feeling; but we are not visited by any ministers of other denominations, unless a patient requires it, or his friends. We invariably name it to them when they enter the house, that if they wish at any time, subject we would desire, to our approval—we do not make that imperative—but subject to our approval, that we have not the least objection to the ministers of their respective religious denominations visiting them.

3731. What recreations or amusements are provided?—We have an ample provision of books of various kinds, a good library, and also a number of books which we bring to the house from the various libraries in the city with which I am connected. We have daily papers, London papers, various serials, journals, and periodicals, as many as it is possible for them to read. We have also chess boards, bagatelle, and out-door amusements, gardening principally.

3732. What extent of ground is accessible to the patients?—There are about four acres accessible to the patients. We endeavour, as far as we can, so to arrange our grounds that they may be made available for the patients, and if they are not in a condition to enjoy one garden, they may another.

3733. Are those recreations to which you have referred frequently made use of by the patients?—Indeed they are very eager about them, and will remain me, if I am one day or half a day without them, several of them will remind me that they have not seen the Illustrated London News, or Chambers's Journal, and so on. The amusements of the ladies are also reading, needlework, fancy work, and walking. We also drive them out when they are in a state fit for it, to give them country exercise.

3734. Have you tried, in the treatment of excited patients, the benefit of seclusion in a padded room as compared with the imposition of mechanical restraint?—I have not, as there is no padded room.

3735. You stated £20 16s. per annum is the lowest sum received?—Yes, that is fixed; because the monthly meeting within which the individual resides or may be a member of, subscribes £100 in its collective capacity; it then has a right to recommend any individual to be taken in at this low charge, and it is only upon this special recommendation an individual will be admitted for that sum.

3736. Is that sum, with the interest upon £100, £3 a year, supposed to pay for the maintenance of the patients?—Certainly not. It does not half pay for it.

3737. How is the balance made up?—At the present time the income of the institution from patients who are paying a remunerative sum for the care and attendance bestowed on them makes up a portion of the deficiency caused by the small payments for other patients.

3738. Has the institution any other source of income except that from the payment of patients?—There is a small income, but it is very trifling; I think it is not above £50 a year.

3739. How many patients are there in the institution?—Twenty-four—eleven males and thirteen females.

3740. How many of those belong to the Society of Friends?—About one-half. I should state that £26 16s. is the lowest sum received under any circumstances. Some members of the Society of Friends are paying £78 a-year. I think about four pay the reduced sum; they are needy and dependent upon the Society. The others pay pretty near a remunerative rate, and some of them more.

3741. What is the lowest sum for which patients not belonging to the Society of Friends will be admitted?—£78 a year.

3742. Is the institution rent free?—Yes. We only pay about £22 a-year for a portion of a field. The rest was purchased by the Society. The lands and buildings cost about £5,000. Since the house was bought a wing has been built.

3743. Were the wings built by contributions or money accumulated?—The house and lands were bought by contributions, and a wing in the first instance was added, and an appeal made for the second was responded to.

Suggestions to the Commissioners.

3744. Are there any suggestions you would wish to offer to the Commissioners with reference to the subject of this inquiry?—There were one or two little matters that I thought this might be a suitable opportunity of referring to. I was looking over to-day the object of your important Commission. Two or three points have often come under my notice in connexion with my position, that I thought were really of some consequence. The first is with respect to medical men signing medical certificates as to lunatics. I think, with all due respect to you and to them, that medical certificates, when they are brought to us with patients who are to be received, ought to state the length of time that has been occupied in the visit to the patient by the medical man, and he ought also to state in the certificate why he deems the person fit to be confined in a lunatic asylum. We receive medical certificates stating "I have this day examined so and so, and consider him a fit person to be confined in a lunatic asylum," and they do not assign to us, or to the Inspectors-General, or any one else, any reason whatever for this statement. I make this observation because I have frequently found in the course of my experience, and I am sorry to say it, that medical men, I have thought, have been very ignorant on the subject of insanity. It may be assuming a good deal, but this is the result of my experience; and I think medical men rely too much upon the statements made by the friends of patients, as to the insanity of the individual, that they do not take sufficient time and bestow sufficient care to ascertain whether the case to which their attention is called is merely one of moral obliquity, and therefore responsible, or whether it is bona fide a case of insanity, and consequently irresponsible, for which the individual ought to be consigned to a lunatic asylum. This has been so frequently brought before my mind during my experience, that I have inquired from medical men who have signed certificates, upon what ground they did so. I believe it to be a very serious thing to take away the liberty of an individual, and the law considers it so, and therefore the grounds for such a proceeding should be very clear. Though I was aware the individual was insane, I have asked the medical man upon what ground he believed him to be insane, having certified him to be such, and I have found no data at the time sufficient to warrant such a proceeding, and I found that they relied a great deal on what was stated to them. I think that is a matter that calls for some amendment.

Medical certificates.

There is another subject which has appeared to me to be one deserving of a little notice. When we receive a certificate with a patient, we send copies to Dublin Castle, merely certifying that he has been examined. These I sign, and say I have received the certificate. I thought of suggesting to you whether it would not be a much safer plan to have the certificates themselves sent to Dublin Castle, and initialled by the Inspectors-General, and then, by sending the original document, put it out of the power of any superintendent or other person to take away the liberty of an individual irregularly, although apparently proceeding legally, by furnishing the Inspectors-General with that which is only a copy. Again I think that visiting medical officers should on all occasions record the time when they enter the asylum for the purpose of visiting, also the time when they leave; and that they should be legally required on every occasion to see all the patients in the institution, so that their visits should not be merely just calling in, but that they should be answerable for the consequence of not seeing the patients. In this way the Inspectors-General would have a direct supervision over every person confined as insane. The medical man should also make regular entries of the state of any patient requiring medical treatment, so as to be able to furnish a history of the case, and state what medicines were prescribed. I make this remark because in the event of a Commission de lunaticis inquirendo, I think that full evidence should be furnished as to the state of the patient during the time he has been confined in an asylum before the issuing of the Commission; and it would enable a jury to judge whether the proper time was come when they might bring in a verdict that would show they considered it a permanent case of insanity. For this purpose I think such evidence as I have pointed out would be very material. There is another matter, if it is within the province of your inquiry, upon which I would wish to say a word or two. I think the servants of the asylums, so far as I have visited them and have had them under my own charge, should be of a better educated class, that they should be better paid for their services, for we find it one of the most difficult things to obtain good attendants. If this improvement was effected, we would find the number of excited cases requiring padded rooms or strait waistcoats would very materially diminish. My experience has led me to the conclusion that the large majority of those cases that require such appliances have resulted from the want of care and caution in the treatment of those liable to become excited. A little thought or care on the part of attendants would frequently prevent the ebullitions of feeling which lead to the necessity of resorting to these appliances. Another thing which I have observed in connection with these people, which leads me to think they ought to be of a better class, and much better paid, is that their duties appear to incapacitate them to some extent to maintain themselves at any other employment in life. There is a strong tendency in them to become either immoderately excited or extremely depressed. I have had some servants under me whom I found it necessary to get removed and provided for elsewhere, owing to the great danger there was of them becoming insane, from their constant contact with the patients, and from their not having minds so trained that they could discipline themselves to guard against the effect of such contact. With respect to restraint, a subject upon which so much has been said, I believe it is necessary in some cases, where patients are disposed to injure themselves or injure others, but even under those circumstances I think a great deal of care and discrimination are needed as to its application, as to the time of its duration, and as to the nature of the restraint. Again, I have observed in some asylums servants in livery, and I have a strong objection to this, as my experience of the insane has brought me to the conclusion, in reference to their sensibility, that every thing ought to be avoided that has any thing of the appearance of criminal detention. I have heard patients complain of these things.

Visits of medical officers.

3745. You mean servants in livery, like turnkeys in gaols?—I do. Calling them keepers, and putting livery on them, and every other appearance whatever of a criminal character ought to be strictly avoided, and every thing ought to be introduced that has a moral and decidedly social character, approximating as nearly as possible to a well-ordered house. There is one remark I would like to make with respect to private asylums. It would be well, I think, if individuals applying for licences to conduct private asylums were to satisfy the authorities who have the power of granting those licences, as to their qualification in respect to pecuniary means. We find in our own experience, that it requires all the ability we can command to make our patients and servants comfortable, and to carry out curative purposes. Where an asylum is carried on as a speculation, or in a commercial way more than any thing else, it is likely to become exceedingly injurious to the patients, and a great hardship to them to be exposed to such circumstances. Whilst there is much required to be done for asylums, so far as regards the enforcement of the law, in order to secure for the insane the proper care they require, I think there is also a great deal to be done in enlightening the public mind on the subject. It is often found that those who have ample means are very unwilling to pay a compensating sum for their friends, if they consider them not curable cases. They are apt to regard the case, if it is incurable, rather as a burden than any thing else, and they express a desire that the patient might be relieved from his sufferings, and themselves from the payment. I have found great difficulty in getting the payment from parties well able to pay. They look upon it in this light, that the lunatic cannot enjoy any thing, that he is incapacitated, and they therefore cut down the payment to as little as possible. I may observe that I will be exceedingly glad to see your labours attended with the good I hope to result from them. I remain in the institution with which I am connected, not because of the pecuniary payment, but because of the interest I take in those matters. Although we have a Committee, I may say the management does devolve upon myself to a very considerable extent, from the confidence they repose in me, and I have therefore a full opportunity of becoming acquainted with the matters I have stated.

COMMITTEE OF LUNATICS TO GAOLS BY MAGISTRATES OF THE CITY OF DUBLIN.

Richard Stanley Ireland, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S.I., sworn and examined.

3746. What official appointment do you hold?—I am medical attendant to the Dublin Metropolitan Police, and I am also appointed for the examination of such alleged dangerous lunatics as may be brought before the magistrates in the City of Dublin.

3747. How long have you held the appointment connected with the examination of dangerous lunatics?—In February next, twelve years.

3748. Are all the lunatics charged as being dangerous, brought before the several divisional magistrates in Dublin, examined by you?—Yes, all of them.

3749. Can you give the Commissioners an idea of the number of dangerous lunatics that have been examined by you in that way?—I will give you an exact account, showing the number charged and the number not pronounced insane. [The Return is delivered in and is as follows:]—

"RETURN showing the number of persons charged within the Dublin Metropolitan Police District with being Dangerous Lunatics, from the month of February, 1845, to 31st December, 1856, being nearly twelve years—distinguishing Male and Female—and showing from Medical Inspection the number pronounced Insane, and the number not found Insane, by Dr. Ireland."

3750. From the return which you have handed in it would appear that the number of cases brought before you in the last year was about the same as in the first of the twelve years given in this document?—Yes, about the same.

3751. The period of famine, 1847, 1848, and 1849, appears to have exhibited a considerable increase of cases?—Yes, a considerable increase.

3752. In this return the term "not insane" signifies those cases not certified by you in such a way as that the magistrate could commit them?—They were either discharged as not lunatic, or if they had committed any offence, they were committed for that offence, but not as insane.

3753. In the cases in which you have examined, were the parties brought up in the custody of the police?—Yes.

3754. Have you had any cases of persons brought up as dangerous lunatics on a charge to that effect from their relatives or friends?—Many cases.

3755. From the return it would appear that over 800 cases out of 2,360 have been found not insane?—Yes.

3756. Then something more than one-third of the cases brought before you were found not to be insane?—Yes.

3757. I presume in all these cases the facts were detailed to you upon which the charge of being dangerous lunatics was founded?—I examine the cases, and I am sometimes not satisfied; then evidence is brought before me to satisfy my mind that the person is lunatic. The party is then brought before the magistrate upon this evidence and mine. I would not have signed a certificate to-day for a man only that his brother and a person lodging in the house with him swore that he attempted to leap out of the window, and would have done so were it not that his foot was caught.

3758. That lunatic appeared to be dangerous to himself?—Yes.

3759. Is the evidence which is given before you as to the alleged insane evidence in all cases disclosing facts, such as would indicate he was about to commit a crime or had committed one?—Yes.

Return of cases of alleged dangerous lunatics, examined by witnesses as Medical Officer of the Dublin Police.

Famine period.

Persons charged by relatives, &c.

Made of proceedings, the evidence of dangerous lunatic.

3760. You are not in the habit of certifying a person to be a dangerous lunatic unless such evidence is before you?—Not unless a person appears, as very often is the case, upon my own examination, to be mad.

3761. Are the alleged lunatics brought before the magistrate previous to being referred to you?—Generally they are not. If I cannot attend early, perhaps the magistrates see them. I very often cannot go till late in the day, between twelve and three o'clock.

3762. Have you generally found that in the cases which you have been called upon to examine, the alleged lunatics were charged by their relatives or friends?—Charged by their relatives or friends, unless they are very destitute, and then perhaps charitable people will charge them. If they attack houses of worship, then persons belonging to the houses of worship will charge them.

3763. Had a large proportion of those brought before you and whom you found not to be insane, no appearance of insanity?—In my opinion they had not. When a husband, or a wife, or a child becomes imbecile or soft in intellect without being a dangerous lunatic, the wife has attempted to get the husband committed, or the husband the wife, or the parents the children, or children the parents. It was an attempt to get rid of the party affected, which I resisted as much as I could.

3764. Have you found that to be a common practice?—Yes.

3765. Taking the cases of those you have certified to be insane, have you usually found that there would have been evidence enough upon which to indict them for a breach of the peace?—No, not in a great number of cases.

3766. I understand that the greater number of the insane you have certified to be dangerous lunatics, could not have been dealt with under the ordinary law, by which parties are bound over to keep the peace, unless those dangerous lunatics acted violently?—So I should say.

3767. Has your experience in these matters led you to believe that the Act has been much abused?—It is certainly attempted to be abused; whether it has been abused or not is another matter.

3768. In all those cases that come before you, I believe the first step is to commit the lunatic to prison?—Yes.

3769. What is your opinion as to the effect of such a course, i.e., committing the lunatic to prison?—I think it would be much more desirable if they were committed to lunatic asylums at once, and I have very frequently represented that.

3770. Are you aware, of your own knowledge, of the arrangements made in the Richmond Bridewell, or Gaol-governor's Prison for the reception of lunatics?—Yes, I have seen them. The lunatics are very well taken care of, but not so well as they would be in an asylum; they have not as good means in the gaol for the purpose as in the asylums.

3771. Is there a separate ward for them?—Yes, a separate ward in each place.

3772. With regard to committing lunatics from workhouses, the object of bringing a dangerous lunatic from a workhouse before a magistrate is to get rid of such a person?—Yes.

3773. In your opinion, is a workhouse a better place for the care of such a patient than a prison?—I think it is as good a place if they have the same arrangements.

3774. What is your opinion as to the propriety, with regard to transferring lunatics from the workhouse to an asylum, of having recourse to the law under which they are committed to gaol?—I think it would be much more desirable to have them committed to the lunatic asylum at once.

3775. I find by this return which you have handed in, that although the number of male and female cases you have had to consider were nearly equal, yet that the great proportion of persons whom you found not to be insane were males?—Yes.

3776. Can you give any explanation as to that?—I cannot. The women, generally, are much addicted to drink. I believe their derangement is greatly caused by drunkenness.

3777. Does the examination which you make in those cases afford you means of judging whether the persons who charge their relatives or friends as dangerous lunatics do so in order to get rid of the care of them?—Undoubtedly.

3778. In order in fact that they may be maintained at the public expense in a gaol or asylum, instead of at the private expense of those persons?—Yes.

3779. That observation refers to persons able to pay for them?—Yes; and I made this remark to the Commissioners of Police often, that there were persons committed able to support themselves, who ought not to have been committed. But we are told that, when parties are proved to be dangerous lunatics, the magistrate must commit them; they cannot take their wealth into account.

3780. In point of fact, a member of a wealthy family who may be thus committed as a dangerous lunatic, inevitably becomes a charge upon the public when transferred from a gaol to an asylum?—Yes; sometimes they are removed. In one instance, the son of a governor of one of our dependencies was committed to a gaol, and was removed from thence to a private asylum by his friends.

3781. Suppose such a step not taken, the necessary consequence of the commitment under the Act is, that the lunatic becomes an immediate charge upon the public in the gaol, and permanently afterwards in the lunatic asylum?—Yes.

3782. Referring again to the table which you have put in, it would appear that for several years succeeding the famine the number of cases you had to consider was still proportionately large?—Yes, the effect of the famine still remained—there was great distress.

3783. I observe that in the year 1854, the number of cases which you have had to conside, and which you found not to be insane, was very small proportionately; is there any explanation for that?—Sometimes there are three persons brought before me in a day, but on an average, I think the number is nearly twenty a month, and sometimes every person will be committed for a day or a month, or nearly so. At other times perhaps more than one-half of them will be discharged as not lunatic. There is nothing particular in relation to that year.

3784. Do you know how long generally the cases remain in prison before they are transferred to an asylum?—I do not. My knowledge of them ceases with the commitment.

Frank Thorpe Porter, Esq., sworn and examined.

3785. I believe you are one of the divisional magistrates of the City of Dublin?—I have been so for sixteen years.

3786. Is that capacity you are frequently called upon to administer the provisions of the law with reference to dangerous lunatics?—Yes. To make a guess, I would suppose that one per cent. of our custody cases are dangerous lunatics. The police returns will give you the numbers accurately.

3787. Your experience extends as far back as the first Act upon the subject, the 1st Vic. cap. 27?—I had to administer that Act from the day of my appointment.

3788. Do you think the amendment of that Act, the 8th and 9th Vic. cap. 107, sec. 18, which requires that the facts on which the charge was based should be certified on oath, was an improvement?—I do. It has been always our practice to call to our assistance the medical men, but in addition to that we always take information or evidence from persons acquainted with the habits or malady of the lunatic, to establish the fact of his being a dangerous lunatic and unfit to remain at large.

3789. The amendment of the law I presume has afforded some greater security that lunatics would not be committed to gaols without the actual facts being disclosed as to the crime they were about to commit?—They never were committed in my time from my office unless we were satisfied that the person was a lunatic and that he was dangerous, that he had done an act, which, if committed by a sane person, would be indictable, or that he had declared an intention to do, or had done something approaching to an act that would have been an indictable offence if committed by a sane person. We have committed lunatics on evidence of what they had done, quite irrespective of any intention that they avowed. We went upon this, that if a man assaulted another in a very dangerous and severe manner, that it is very likely if he was a demented person he would do the same thing by any one else that came before him.

3790. Do you consider you would have been enabled to deal with these cases, under the provisions of the law, which required persons to enter into sureties to keep the peace?—No; and where we were not satisfied that the persons were dangerous lunatics, when the medical man declined to give us evidence of his belief of their lunacy, but that still they had been guilty of violent conduct, in several instances we committed them to goal in default of sureties, and very bad scenes arose in the prison from their being classified with other prisoners. I have always felt it a very great evil that we have no power as magistrates to send to a place of safe custody and care persons who are not dangerous lunatics, but who are incapable of taking care of themselves and are decidedly out of their senses. I have had a great many cases before me of persons who were in a most pitiable state, with one way or whatever to look after them; but as they did not indicate any violence, we could do nothing with them.

3791. You refer now to cases of persons in poverty?—Yes, pauper lunatics. I put such a case as this. A poor creature who is decidedly demented, got into a railway carriage on the Great Southern Line, and came from Thurles to the King's bridge; that person was sent before us charged with defrauding the company of their fare. It appeared that he was quite demented, but at the same time, he showed no symptom of violence. He was very quiet. What a state was it for that poor pauper lunatic to be in, thrown on the streets of Dublin without any one to look after him.

3792. What alteration of the law would you suggest to meet those cases?—I conceive that a magistrate ought to have the power, if he was satisfied that the lunatic was not dangerous, but that he was thoroughly demented, to send him under a provisional commitment to some lunatic asylum, subject to the ultimate directions of the authorities of that asylum, a provisional commitment that would remove the poor creature from off the streets for his own sake and that of society.

3793. Have you had many cases before you of lunatics, not natives of Dublin, who had recently arrived from a distance, and whom you were obliged to commit?—We have had a great number of lunatics before us, who were not natives of Dublin.

3794. The effect of the commitment of those lunatics, as dangerous, to goal, is that they become charged upon the county of the city of Dublin?—Yes.

3795. Has that been complained of?—It has been complained of lately, I believe, in the municipal council. I may observe that I think there is a great tendency on the part of lunatics to betake themselves to cities.

3796. Does your experience lead you to believe that the Act of the 1st Vic. chap. 27, with regard to dangerous lunatics, has been abused for private purposes?—I have seldom had experience of a charge being made against a lunatic under any unfair circumstances. I have seldom or ever had persons before me, charged with being dangerous lunatics, that I could blame the persons bringing them, or that I had any reason to suspect improper motives in those who brought them.

The law with reference to dangerous lunatics.

No power in magistrates to commit to safe custody poor lunatics who are not dangerous.

Many lunatics, not natives of Dublin, become chargeable on the city.

3797. Are cases often brought before you where a medical man has already certified that the person is insane?—A person alleged to be a dangerous lunatic is found in the streets; he is taken to a station-house, and the case is placed on the charge-sheet. Notice is given to the medical man, Dr Ireland generally, sometimes Sir Arthur Clarke. He attends at the Police Court the next morning, and has an opportunity of inspecting and examining the lunatic previous to the case being brought before the magistrate. He is both a witness and assessor. We examine him as to his own opinion, and we associate him with us in the inquiry, so as to enable him to elucidate matters that would aid in forming a clear opinion.

3798. Have you had any instances of abuse on the part of friends able to pay, and who wish to get rid of the expense of maintaining the lunatic?—I seldom or ever had, or never had reason to suspect any thing of the kind. I cannot recollect a lunatic being brought before me whose relatives or friends appeared to be in a state even of respectability.

3799. The ability of the relatives to support a patient is no part of your inquiry, when he is charged before you as a dangerous lunatic?—No; but I very often find that persons charge lunatics in the expectation that they would be sent to an asylum, and that when they found that our first committal was to a common goal they have over and over declared that out of their earnings they would try to pay something if the person could be sent to an asylum at once.

3800. Does that arise from an indisposition to see their relatives placed in prison?—Yes; they did not wish them to be subjected to the degradation of a prison. I have observed a vast deal of good and affectionate feeling on the part of relatives towards lunatics. You will observe that the division in which my office is, takes in all of what I may call the wretched poverty of the city, the liberties, and that quarter. I am four or five years an acting magistrate of Kingstown, and I never had a lunatic brought there yet, to my knowledge, although that district comprises a very great extent, from Booterstown to Killiney, and from Kingstown to Sillorgan, inclusive. I would rather think we must have a greater number at the Head Office, than they have at College-street, or Capel-street police offices.

3801. You said you thought it would be desirable a magistrate should possess the power of at once transferring to an asylum persons who are not dangerous lunatics, but found to be insane?—Yes.

3802. Might not that lead to abuse, if there were not means of inquiring respecting the parties?—What I would wish to be understood as saying is, that it would be well if we had the power of a provisional committal. They allow us in the South Union an authority, when there are wretched paupers brought up, who say they are willing to go into the workhouse, to send them there provisionally, and the cases are inquired into on the next board day. I would suggest that a magistrate should have the power, where a person was brought before him as an insane, of sending that person to a lunatic asylum, subject to the orders and directions of the authorities of it, at the earliest opportunity. I do not ask an absolute authority; I would think it very unpleasant to have such an authority.

GENERAL QUESTION OF LUNACY AND LUNATIC ASYLUMS, &amp;c.

Denis Phelan, Esq., Surgeon, sworn and examined.

General Question of Lunacy and Lunatic Asylums, &c.

D. Phelan, Esq.

3803. What official appointments have you held from time to time?—The first was that of Assistant Poor Law Commissioner, in 1838; I held that till 1843. I was Governor of the House of Industry, in Dublin, from 1844 till 1847; and from 1847 till 1855, I was Poor Law Inspector, which is the same as Assistant Poor Law Commissioner, there being a change merely in the name. Last year I was secretary to the Dublin Hospitals Inquiry Commission; and I am now secretary to the Dublin Hospitals Superintendence Board.

Lunatic poor of Ireland.

3804. I believe you have devoted much attention to the condition of the lunatic poor in Ireland?—I have.

3805. In speaking of the lunatic poor, you include in that class idiots and imbeciles?—Generally they are all called insane; there is a distinction made by medical men, who classify them as lunatics, idiots, and imbeciles. I do not think that classification quite correct, though it answers ordinary official purposes; for epileptics are frequently lunatics, and very dangerous lunatics too.

Want of sufficient
their numbers.

3806. Do you consider that sufficient provision is made for the lunatic poor of Ireland?—I think there is not. That is my opinion, from the experience I have had, and from the reports I have read on the subject.

3807. Are you aware that the Census Commissioners of 1851 have estimated the number of lunatics and idiots in Ireland at 9,980?—Yes; I have seen that return of the Census Commissioners.

3808. At what number have the Lunatic Asylums Inspectors estimated, in their last Report, the lunatics in this country?—I see, by their Report, they have estimated the number to be 13,493.

3809. State the number who are there described as being under official supervision?—6,263, on the 31st March, 1856.

3810. Which statement do you consider gives the most correct view of the extent of lunacy in this country?—I cannot state positively. I would expect the Lunatic Inspectors' would be more accurate; but I consider a portion of their return must depend upon very vague information—that is, as to 7,230 at large; the returns as to those are from the police, who very frequently could not give an accurate report.

3811. I believe the returns to which you have just referred were made by the constabulary?—Yes.

3812. What number are described, in the last Report of the Inspectors, as being in public asylums?—3,522.

3813. What number in workhouses?—2,000.

3814. And in gaols?—156.

Imbeciles, idiots, &c.

3815. Are there any of those who are included in the returns just referred to—namely, lunatics, epileptics, imbeciles, and idiots—whom you think need not be provided for in curative establishments for the insane?—I am of opinion that a considerable proportion of those returned in the Appendix No. 3, general abstract of those at large, in the Report of the Inspectors-General, can be very safely and efficiently provided for in institutions, not exactly the same as our District Asylums. I beg to observe that this answer refers to a class that I have not had a sufficient opportunity of observing, except seeing some of them at large, and from my knowledge of their state throughout the country; they are parties you do not meet with except occasionally.

3816. Do you refer to imbeciles?—I refer to the classes described as being at large. My answer would imply that the idiotic portion could be provided for in institutions not exactly like our District Lunatic Asylums.

3817. I believe this return does not include merely the insane who are paupers, but all insane?—I would expect so. That is not exactly stated; so far as I recollect, they are stated to be wandering cases; but I take for granted it means all who are insane.

3818. Supposing the returns which are referred to, of the lunatics at large, furnished by the constabulary, to include all lunatics, whether paupers or otherwise, do you consider the State is bound to make provision out of the public funds for the maintenance of such as are not paupers?—The State is bound to make provision for a portion of them; they comprise two classes, one which are able to pay the full sum for their treatment in private asylums; another which can only afford to pay a portion of such cost. I think this second class should be provided for, and payment received from them.

3819. The Act of Parliament, 1 and 2 Geo. IV., chap. 33, under which lunatic asylums were established in Ireland, contemplated, I believe, merely the reception of lunatic poor?—Yes, so far as I recollect.

3820. Does the Act of Parliament relate to curable cases only?—No.

3821. Are you aware whether exception is made in several asylums to the admission of idiots and imbeciles?—I am very well aware of it.

3822. What is your opinion as to the classes who should be admitted into the existing lunatic asylums—speaking now of their condition as regards lunacy alone?—My opinion is, that it is very desirable that probably curable cases only should be admitted into lunatic asylums; ones that there was a tolerable chance of curing. Wherever there was a doubt, the benefit of that doubt should be given to the individual, and he should be received. And I am of opinion that another class, idiots and imbeciles, ought not to be received into the ordinary lunatic asylums, but into other institutions, distinct from what I would call curative asylums.

ceived into District

3823. Do you conceive that this latter class—idiots, epileptics, and imbeciles—should be maintained at a lower rate in the institutions to which you refer?—Certainly at a somewhat lower rate; at about one-fourth less.

3824. Having due regard to the provision of every requisite for persons in their condition?—I contemplate all that. They require good food and good clothing, therefore their maintenance would be very high; but the same staff would not be necessary.

3825. In what way would you propose that the medical charge of those imbecile cases should be provided for?—If I were to begin de novo, I would separate them; but inasmuch as they are now mixed up, I would feel a difficulty in separating them.

3826. Am I to understand you would contemplate erecting new buildings on the sites of the present asylums for those incurable cases, having these establishments under one medical supervision, in preference to having them in a totally distinct part of the country?—I would prefer having them distinct altogether, so that the Governor of one institution could have no communication with the other, and the same with regard to the officers. I would give each Governor, and each medical officer, quite enough to occupy his attention; but I would not mix the two classes. Where you have a house with a considerable number of lunatics in it, and where you have, in that house, buildings prepared from time to time for idiots and epileptics, and for incurables, I do not mean then to say I would alter that, and have another building established for those incurable cases; but if, as I published on the subject in 1845 and 1846, I were to have my choice, I would have the two institutions distinct.

3827. At some considerable distance from each other?—I should think it would be more convenient to have it so.

3828. Supposing it was urged, on the ground of economy, that the two institutions should be within the boundaries of the asylum grounds, so as to admit of the staff of one establishment being used, to a certain extent, for the other, would you object to that?—Yes; I feel that economy should not be at all considered in the case. If you have in the asylum on the one hand, 50 or 150, or any particular number of lunatics that require the special and anxious attention of the Governor and of the visiting physician—I speak particularly of those two officers now—and that you have, at the same time, on the other hand, connected with that asylum, an institution containing some 200 or 300, be the number more or less, of incurables; the attention of the manager and of the consulting medical officer should be, in my opinion, more specially directed to the curative cases, and the others would receive much less attention than if they were in a separate establishment, under a medical officer and a Governor specially charged with their care. I have no doubt whatever on that subject, from a great deal of official experience.

3829. Do you think that the two establishments being under one central direction of a medical officer, might possibly lead to curable cases being transferred to the incurable house, with probably less care and attention to the fact of their being curable than if the establishments were distinct?—I think it is very likely that would be the case, because the medical officer would say to himself, I can transfer that case back again whenever I choose; but if he had to send the case to another establishment, under a different control, where in some time it might be found that the person who was sent as incurable got well, that would have the effect of making him much more circumspect in transferring cases from his own establishment.

3830. Supposing institutions for the incurable cases to be erected, would you consider it advisable that the inmates should consist merely of those who were sent from a lunatic asylum declared to be incurable, or would you admit cases direct from the community at large?—I would send each case on its own merits, and according to its peculiar circumstances, into the one asylum or the other; for I would think it rather objectionable to be sending a case to a curative establishment, and in a short time to be transferring the same case to an establishment for incurables. If there was no apparent probability, in the first instance, of there being an improvement in the case, I would send it to the latter institution. I beg to add, however, that I would expect that the arrangements in that second asylum would be such, as that the Governor and the consulting physician would be equally capable of forming a correct opinion as to the course to be pursued if, at any time, as I have frequently seen occur, a supposed incurable case was so improved that it ought to be sent to the curative asylum. That would be much more satisfactory, and more likely to lead to beneficial results upon the mind of the inmate, than if there was a transfer from a curative asylum to one for incurable cases.

3831. Suppose this to arise—that the authorities of the institution for incurable cases considered a case curable, and that when the same case was brought before the authorities of the curative asylum, they were of opinion it was incurable, how would you act under such circumstances?—There would, of course, be a conflict there; but there ought to be some superior authority to decide the matter. To give a more distinct answer to that question I would expect that it would be imperative on them to receive the patient from the second class asylum into the first or curative asylum, and give him a trial; and if, after a trial, there was not found to be sufficient improvement to justify the removal, let the case be sent back.

3832. What medical evidence would you require, in the first instance, to justify an application for admission to the asylum of an incurable case?—I would expect the evidence of a physician or surgeon to the effect that he had carefully examined the patient, and formed his opinion on this examination, and on the history of the case.

3833. I understand you would require the medical certificate accompanying the application to state the opinion of the medical gentleman who signed the certificate as to whether the case was incurable or not?—Yes, provided the person giving the certificate felt enabled, from the history of the case and his knowledge of it, to state that he considered it to be a probably curable or incurable one. In many instances he could do so; where he could not, the patient should be sent to the higher institution.

3834. Do you not think it would be a simpler course that the application for admission for a lunatic pauper should be direct, in the first instance, to the asylum, and that the fact of insanity alone should justify admission, leaving it to the authorities there subsequently to transfer it to another asylum, with the approval of the medical officer?—That would be a simpler plan; at the same time, I think there are objections to it. Human nature is human nature; and I should apprehend that, in some instances, the superior officers of the other institution would not be so very willing to admit parties that they had a notion were not likely to be creditable to their institution. In other words, I think they would endeavour to have as many of the curable cases as they possibly could, and to get rid of as many of the incurable cases as they could manage to avoid receiving or retaining.

3835. Of course the admissions would always remain, as at present, in the hands of the Governors, though guided very much by the medical officer?—Yes.

3837. Does that afford any reason for requiring the admissions, in the first instance, to be at the curative hospital?—It is difficult to give a specific answer to that question, for each case must be decided by the medical man on the history and the appearances presented at the time. There are some cases in which the medical man could at once decide that they ought never to be sent to the higher or curative asylum; while there are others in which he would hesitate and say, "I doubt very much that this case will be ever cured, but there is a chance, and I will send it to the asylum;" and there is a third class of cases that he would at once send to the asylum to be cured.

3838. How do you think the transmission of a patient at once to the institution for incurable cases, after an application had been made for his admission as a lunatic pauper into the institution, would be received by the friends of the pauper—would it not be considered as permanently deciding the case against the patient, and bear the aspect of cruelty?—I think when an institution is managed and carried on as it ought to be, the friends of patients would have no right to find fault with the conduct of those in charge of it. No doubt the friends would generally, for various reasons, like to have the patient retained in the higher institution.

3839. If incurable cases be now absorbing the accommodation of the district asylums, would you propose the erection of new buildings for their reception, at a distance, or the enlargement of the present asylums?—If other buildings are required to any great extent, I would erect them at a distance.

3840. You are aware, I presume, of the details required to be gone through in procuring admission into the existing district asylums?—I am.

3841. Do you consider that in all cases adequate information with reference to the history of the case is furnished to the medical officers?—I am very sure adequate information is not furnished.

3842. What class of cases do you particularly refer to?—I refer to the cases sent immediately to the asylum from their friends, and to those sent from gaols and workhouses.

3843. Is not the information which the friends of a patient are required to give on making application for his admission intended to be ample?—It is.

3844. I believe no provision whatever is made for any such information being given as to cases that are sent from workhouses and gaols?—No; except that the medical officer of the gaol or the workhouse may give information, if he chooses to take the trouble, from his knowledge of the case.

3845. Does it not often happen that the medical officer of an institution is unable to give more information than what has actually come under his own inspection, and that he knows nothing of the case previous to its admission?—Yes; it frequently happens that he knows nothing of the previous history of the case beyond what he may have picked up from some friends of the patients, and probably he may never have seen any.

3846. What is your opinion as to the propriety of the resident manager of an asylum being a medical man?—My opinion is, that the resident manager should be a medical man.

3847. Although such is not required by law, I believe the practice of late years has been in that direction?—Yes; I think I was the first who drew attention to it. It is the law in England.

3848. Supposing it to be required by law that the manager of an asylum should be a medical man, do you consider that would obviate the necessity of a visiting physician?—I do not. I think it is very essential that there should be a visiting physician.

3849. Would you regard the visiting physician as the supreme medical authority in charge of the institution?—No; I would not.

3850. What position do you consider he should hold with reference to the medical management?—That of consulting physician.

3851. Am I to understand that the consulting physician should be called upon whenever in the judgment of the medical manager, his advice might be requisite, or that he should give periodical attendance?—I would expect the resident medical man to have charge of the patients, and I would expect the other to pay frequent visits, and see the patients with the manager, and I would expect them to assist one another with regard to any difficult case.

3852. Would you require that each case as it came into the asylum should be specially considered by the two medical men?—I think it would be very advisable that it should.

3853. Supposing a difference of opinion to arise between the two doctors as to the treatment of a patient for insanity, with whom would you leave the final decision and responsibility as to the course to be pursued?—I am of opinion such difference would very rarely arise, and supposing it did, I would call in a third medical man. I believe that two medical men attending in an institution, and working harmoniously together, will very rarely have a difference of opinion regarding the management of an insane case.

3854. Have you been at all influenced in the opinion you have given in favour of the attendance of a second physician in general practice, by the advantage that would arise in the treatment of ordinary bodily illness from the attendance of such a physician?—That would be an important benefit. The more a physician knows of disease generally, the better he is capable of treating insane cases.

3856. Would you make it imperative on the medical manager to submit all cases of illness, apart from insanity, to the visiting physician?—Every important case the manager should submit to the visiting physician.

3857. Do you see any difficulty in prescribing the duties of the two medical men whom you suggest should be attached to each lunatic asylum?—I do not see any difficulty in the way of doing so.

3858. I presume the medical manager should be a person required to withdraw altogether from practice?—He should.

3859. Do you consider that the salary now usually given, about £200 a-year, with house accommodation, fuel, &c., is adequate provision for a medical gentleman competent to take charge of such an institution?—I do not think it is sufficient; but unfortunately there are too many of them anxious to get it. I have a great objection to there being only one medical attendant for a lunatic asylum where there is anything like a large number of lunatics.

3860. Being a member of the medical profession yourself, will you give the Commissioners your opinion as to the propriety of an infirmary being attached to every lunatic asylum, for the treatment of ordinary cases of bodily illness?—I think that such cases should be treated in an infirmary, or a place set apart for that purpose. I have known very great injuries to arise from having patients treated in cells. I should never like to see a case of importance, or that was serious in its nature, treated in a cell. It is very surprising how very readily you can manage a number of insane cases in an infirmary, with proper supervision.

3861. I understand you do not consider a cell an appropriate place for the treatment of an ordinary case of bodily infirmity?—I do not.

3862. Do you consider that besides the more immediate and constant attendance which the nurses would be able to give to the sick in one large room, or in an infirmary, that there are other advantages arising from a better ventilation, and so forth, in a large place, specially devoted to the purpose, which would render it advisable that there should be an infirmary?—Yes, and a greater supervision generally would be exercised. There is also the association with other individuals.

3863. I believe most of the cells in lunatic asylums are not provided with fire-places?—Most of them are not.

3864. There would be many cases, therefore, in which that condition of comfort would be wanting if they were treated in the cells?—Yes. In the workhouses there are fire-places.

3865. What is your opinion as to the value of religious ministrations to the insane?—It is a question of extreme difficulty. If very judiciously exercised, I am of opinion that it would be useful; but, on the other hand, I would apprehend injury from it, unless it was very judiciously and carefully exercised.

3866. Does your answer particularly apply to the communications of the clergymen with patients, rather than the facilities afforded to the patients for attendance at ordinary worship?—Yes; I think an attendance at ordinary worship ought to be given.

3868. What communications do you particularly refer to?—I would state that of confession and penance.

3869. I understand you consider the communication of a clergyman calling the attention of a patient to the sins he has committed, and to the necessity of penance, may, if not judiciously timed, injuriously affect the condition of the patient?—Yes.

3870. But I understand your latter answer is no degree to modify your opinion, that the patient should have full opportunity of attending religious worship?—Certainly, when he is considered by the authorities to be in a fit condition to do so.

3871. I of course presume that no patients would be allowed to attend at religious worship unless they were considered in a fit state to do so?—Yes.

plate the admission of any patients who were to contribute to the cost of their maintenance?—No.

3873. Practically, I believe, some such cases are admitted into asylums?—Not that I am aware of, into district asylums; I never heard of any.

3874. What would be your opinion as to the admission of patients who would pay a portion of the cost of their maintenance?—I have always been favourable to it; and the more I consider it, and the more experience I have on the subject, the more I approve of it. I believe such an arrangement to be very desirable.

3875. How far do you consider the State should make provision out of the public funds for the partial maintenance of such cases?—I think the State is at least required to make provision for their safe keeping; and that, so far as they could fairly afford, they should pay for their maintenance themselves.

3876. The cases to which I refer, are cases in which the patients do not pay perhaps more than one-half or one-third of the cost, do you consider the State is called on to contribute towards a provision for such cases?—Yes; unless they are admitted into public asylums at a moderate cost to be fixed, they must be at large, as they cannot afford to pay the full amount for their maintenance in private asylums, and that should be guarded against.

3877. If they are at large, but are not dangerous to the community, do you consider the State would be bound to make any provision for them?—The circumstance of their being lunatics implies that they are dangerous to the community, though they may not be violent. They are very often great drawbacks to their families. I do not think the disposition to send such persons to asylums is at all so great as that many would be sent, except those that ought really to be in asylums.

3878. Are there any other grounds on which you consider that lunatics, not paupers, who are kept by their families, and are not dangerous to the community at large, should be provided for to some extent out of the public taxes?—They always injure their families, and frequently pauperize them—that would be one ground; another is, that the middle or small class of farmers or tradespeople pay a considerable portion of the taxation of the country, and they have a right, although they are not absolutely paupers, to have their insane provided for.

3879. You think that in that respect they are in a position somewhat analogous to those who receive relief in county infirmaries?—Somewhat; but the relief in county infirmaries depends upon the nature of the illness. A totally destitute person, having a bad fracture, or other serious surgical or medical disease, is as well entitled, under the Infirmary Acts, to be admitted into a county infirmary, as a small farmer, a tradesman, or a servant.

3880. I presume that in Ireland there is a larger proportion of the population of a class immediately removed from pauperism than, perhaps, in England or Scotland?—I should think there is, but I am not sufficiently acquainted with the social state of England and Scotland to state positively.

3881. Do you consider that a large proportion of those people in that condition would be pauperized by having to give proper attention and treatment to lunatic members of their families in their own houses?—I am sure of it.

3882. You consider it is of advantage to the State that insanity should be cured?—Certainly.

3883. Social evils might arise from incurable cases not being properly treated?—Yes. I may mention a case that occurred with me: a man was sent to the gaol of Clonmel while I was surgeon to that establishment, and he was about to be brought to trial for killing a horse belonging to a gentleman near Roscrea. I examined the man carefully, and found him to be insane, and after several days I reported him to be such. It happened, fortunately, that his insanity was very recent, and that soon after its occurrence he was sent into gaol, and before he left, he became sane again, and remained sane for several years. That, I think, is an instance of the benefit of early attention to cases of insanity, and shows that injury would be done by their not being treated in proper time.

3884. Is there not a danger, when patients are admitted into an asylum on the condition of their paying a portion of their maintenance, that after some time their friends come to pay that portion?—Certainly; but there might be a provision as there is in the Poor Law Act, under which the parties would be made to pay.

3885. The Poor Law Act does not admit of such a case as a person being relieved by the State or out of the public funds, except he is entirely destitute?—In the case of a person who may be admitted under the Poor Law Act, on the supposition of being a destitute person, if it be afterwards discovered that his relatives—such as a father or mother—are able to pay for the maintenance of that person, they are compelled to do so.

3886. But still there is no such thing as the admission into a poorhouse of a person who, at the time, is possessed of the means of paying a portion of the cost of maintenance?—No.

3887. How far do you think the class of lunatics in a position above pauperism, should be left to be provided for by private charity?—I should be very apprehensive that they would not be provided for in that way.

3888. Are there any charitable institutions in this country, for the reception of lunatics, besides those of Swift's Hospital and the Bloomfield Retreat, which is maintained by the Society of Friends?—Not that I am aware of.

3889. Is it your opinion that the establishment of such institutions is very desirable?—It is, of course, very desirable that such institutions should be founded by benevolent and wealthy individuals, but they should be under the same supervision as the public asylums, or, at least, under efficient supervision.

3890. Is it the case that Ireland, amongst its many charities, is singularly deficient in institutions of the kind?—Yes.

Advantages of, and reasons for, such an arrangement.

Burden of these.

Charitable institutions for the insane.

3891. What is your opinion as to the existing state of the law as regards the government of asylums?—I consider that it is capable of improvement. I know that respectable parties are appointed governors, but still I think the system could be improved.

3892. What alteration would you propose?—I think the chairman of each board of guardians in the district ought to be a governor; I think the appointment should not rest entirely with the Lord Lieutenant, but that there should be some local system of appointment.

3893. You would propose something like a system of representation of the ratepayers?—Yes.

3894. What is your opinion as to the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums being members of the Boards of Governors?—I am decidedly against it.

3895. I believe that arrangement is of recent origin?—I was not aware of its being the case until I read the late reports, from which I learned that they attended as members of the Boards. I would decidedly object to the arrangement.

3896. For what reason?—I think there are several objections to it. An Inspector becomes a member of a board at which some question in which he is interested is discussed; and suppose a division takes place, he votes on one side or the other, and may not carry the whole board with him; he may wish to have a particular individual appointed an officer of the asylum, and he makes an effort to secure that appointment; in this he is defeated or succeeds; but a portion of the board may be opposed to him. I think his function should be to attend the board as the Poor Law Inspectors attend at the Boards of Guardians. They have no vote, and merely report the proceedings to a superior authority, making whatever suggestions they think necessary upon the circumstances that arise.

3897. Are you satisfied the duties of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums would be more efficiently performed if their position at the boards were similar to that of Poor Law Inspectors attending meetings of Boards of Guardians?—Yes; I have no doubt of it. When I was an Inspector or Assistant Commissioner I seldom had any difficulty in carrying the Boards of Guardians with me on any question that I thought ought to be passed.

3898. In what manner do you consider that the superior officers of the asylums should be appointed?—I think it is best to have the appointment vested in the Government.

3899. Why do you think a different course should be pursued with reference to officers of lunatic asylums from that pursued with reference to the officers of other public boards?—The situations are very important, and I think the responsibility of the appointment should rest upon the Government, and that the Government should make their selections in the way I state. Where the appointment is vested in the local authorities, it may happen that the persons best fitted for the position are selected through the influence of individuals.

3900. Does not that observation apply also to Government appointments, which are stated to be made for political reasons?—I suppose it does.

3901. Would you be satisfied with the power of dismissal being vested in the Executive Government, giving the nomination of the officers, whose qualifications are prescribed by law, to the local authorities?—I would be satisfied with the dismissal being vested in the Executive Government, sufficient grounds to be shown for such dismissal.

3902. What is your opinion as to an arrangement similar to that which prevails with regard to Poor Law officers, that the appointment might rest with the local Governors, but that a vote should be vested in a controlling authority?—I see no objection to that arrangement.

3903. Would you consider that preferable to the absolute nomination being left with the local Governors?—Yes.

3905. What authority would you give to the local board with reference to the dismissal of the superior officers?—I am not quite prepared to answer that question; but the local authority should, I think, not be empowered to dismiss such officers without the concurrence of the higher authority, and after a full and open investigation. In well-proved serious offences, the power of the Board to suspend for a limited period is, I think, necessary.

3906. Having previously suggested that there should be a separate institution for the chronic and incurable cases, do you contemplate this institution, which, according to your view, should be distinct from the district asylum, being governed by the same board?—Probably it would not be very material whether there was another local board or only the one; it might be better to have the same board.

3907. With whom would you consider the appointment of the inferior officers of the asylum should rest?—With the Governors.

3908. Do you feel that the authority of the medical manager would be at all weakened by the power of dismissal not being left with him?—I would decidedly object to his having such power. He should report to the Board, and, in serious matters, ought to be empowered to suspend.

3909. Is there any thing with regard to the general inspection of lunatic asylums which strikes you as requiring amendment?—There is.

3910. So so good as to state your views upon the subject?—In the first place, I am of opinion the Inspectors should report to a superior authority; I am of opinion that they should divide the districts, and that each should have his own district, and be responsible for it.

3911. When you say that the Inspectors should report to a central authority, do you mean to a central controlling authority like the Poor Law Commissioners?—Certainly; I mean by a superior authority, a Board of Commissioners.

3912. You refer to periodical reports, from time to time, and not to the annual report laid before the Government?—I refer to a report of each institution which would be visited, so that report short or long, and then I would have a general report. Every report made by them should be to the superior controlling authority.

3913. Do you think it advisable that each Inspector should always keep to his own district, or that they should, in turn, visit the several districts?—I think each Inspector should keep to his own district. When they take it in turn, another is responsible for the district. An Inspector by keeping to a district comes to know the officers of the asylum, and the patients, and is better acquainted with the condition of the various institutions, than if he was changing from one place to another.

3914. Do you consider the inspection should extend to all places where lunatics are detained, such as workhouses and gaols?—I do. The law is so at present; but I am of opinion that the present arrangement with respect to the Inspection of Lunatic Asylums, and the inspection of several other public institutions, is very defective. I consider it in this light:—suppose a Lunatic Inspector goes to Castlebar, and inspects the lunatics in the gaol and in the workhouse there, the Medical Charities Inspector goes to visit the workhouse, and the Prison Inspector visits the gaol; then you have three classes of men—two of them medical men—visiting the same institutions, each to see a particular class of persons—the Lunatic Inspector seeing the lunatics, and the Medical Charities Inspector, the sick. I would suggest, that the Medical Charities Inspector and the Lunatic Inspector should each have a district, and inspect the lunatic asylum, the workhouse, and gaols, wherever there were lunatics in that district; and if that arrangement were made, I would expect that the inspection would be more efficiently done than it can be at present. You have now two Lunatic Inspectors and four Medical Charities Inspectors, each performing different functions in the same institution. These gentlemen are educated in the same way, and are fitted for the same duties, and therefore I think it would be easy and beneficial to adopt the arrangement I have proposed, and have no division of duties such as exists between them at present—the one visiting lunatics and the other visiting the sick, in the same building.

3915. You are, of course, aware that the Medical Charities Inspectors never visit the lunatic asylums?—I am. I would amalgamate the Lunatic Inspectors and the Medical Charities Inspectors, and give all the same functions.

3916. And that the visiting of the workhouses by the Lunatic Inspectors is merely occasioned by there being lunatics in those establishments?—Yes; according to the returns there are lunatics in all the workhouses in Ireland, except three.

3917. Are you aware that the law does not require, at present, that the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums should be medical men?—Yes; the Act merely says qualified and experienced persons; but, though one may have experience in the inspection of lunatics, I doubt that he can be qualified—if by it be meant competent—to do so unless he is a well-educated medical man.

3918. Would not the arrangements you propose place the Inspectors under two masters—the Poor Law Commissioners and the Lunacy Board that you contemplate?—I contemplate, that if the arrangement I suggest were carried out, there should be a modification of the superior authority of the Medical Charities Inspectors.

3919. That modification could only be effected by either placing the Medical Charities under the Lunacy Board, or placing the Inspectors of Lunatics under the Poor Law Commissioners?—I think both ought to be placed under a board distinct from the Poor Law Commissioners.

3920. Is there any thing else to which you would wish to draw attention with reference to the duties of the Inspectors in regard to the district asylums?—I do not recollect that there is.

3921. How often in the year do you consider the inspection of district asylums should take place?—At least twice a year, and I think if it were quarterly it would be very desirable.

3922. You have expressed an opinion that there should be separate reports made upon each institution?—Yes.

3923. Was not that formerly the case?—It was, I believe.

3924. Has there been any alteration in the law to cause its discontinuance?—I am not aware; the present Act does not make it necessary, nor does it relieve the inspectors from the duty.

Inspection of private licensed houses and individual cases.

3925. Are you conversant with the law as regards the power of inspection of private licensed houses?—I have read it.

3926. Would you suggest any amendment in that law?—No, I am not prepared to suggest any.

3927. How far do you consider that the State should have the power through its inspectors of visiting Chancery lunatics who may be in licensed houses?—I should suppose it would be very necessary that such a power should exist.

3928. Would you extend that power to the visitation of single patients, although they may not have been found lunatics by commission?—I think it would be necessary to have such an inspection whenever there was a report that there was such a case.

3929. Do you consider that the fact of a member of the community being deprived of his reason justifies a more scrupulous care of him on the part of the State?—I do; I think very great care is required.

3930. Do you consider that would warrant a stricter surveillance, such as would not be justifiable in the case of those who can take care of themselves?—I do.

3931. Your experience as a Poor Law Inspector has enabled you, I presume, to form an opinion as to the propriety of detaining lunatics in workhouses?—I think it has.

3932. What is your opinion on that subject?—I think a workhouse is a very unfit place for a lunatic.

3933. Does that observation refer to the mere construction and arrangement of the building, or to the system pursued?—To both. The places in which they are put are mere cells, away from the eye of the master or of all the officers; and, with the exception of eight or ten workhouses in Ireland, the lunatics are generally left to the care of a male pauper and a female pauper, and I have seen lunatics left in charge of a half idiot. There is no attention to the moral management where the cases are such as would admit of it, and as would be benefited by it, and very often lunatics of that class are very much injured by the annoyance they receive from the paupers.

3935. I presume under those circumstances the detention of lunatics in workhouses must be attended with serious injury, and must be calculated to place impediments in the way of their cure, supposing the cases to be curable?—Certainly. I have known recent cases to come in as to which I have exerted myself again and again to try and get them sent to the district asylum, but without effect, and then I have known them to become chronic cases after a time.

3936. The arrangements to which you refer and the small accommodation afforded, scarcely admit, I presume, of any classification of lunatics in those places?—I here is only the one classification, that of male and female; there cannot be any other.

3937. There is no classification as to their disease?—No; the violent insane patient is placed along with the epileptic and the idiot; they are all together.

3938. Are any arrangements made for the industrial occupation of those classes in any way?—There is no arrangement with a view to their industrial occupation in order to benefit them, but such as are able are employed in various domestic matters, such as carrying water and coals, and doing things in that way.

3939. Is it not the case in many workhouses that lunatics are left in a lunatic ward with a yard attached to it, merely for the purpose of taking exercise, rather as an infirm class, than to be afforded the opportunity of employment and exercise, such as the other inmates have?—Yes; that is the case.

3940. Is it your opinion that they may be considered as a neglected class in a workhouse?—They are a neglected class. I do not mean to say, but the master and the matron of a workhouse pay more or less attention to them, but there cannot be that attention paid to them that they require.

3941. I believe persons employed in domestic duties in workhouses are generally paupers?—Yes; the cook, for instance, in nine cases out of ten, is a pauper. There are ward masters and ward matrons, who are not paupers.

3942. I believe the law gives no power to the Poor Law Commissioners, the Boards of Guardians, or any other authority, to remove a pauper direct from a workhouse into an asylum?—None.

3943. Am I correct in stating that, in that respect, the lunatic pauper is in the same position as the lunatic out of doors—his friends must either seek admission for him by application to the Governors of the asylum, or if he is dangerous he may be committed to a gaol?—Yes; but the Boards of Guardians and the masters are in loco parentis.

3944. Have you found that the transfer of a lunatic from a workhouse to an asylum has been through a gaol?—A lunatic pauper is occasionally discharged from a workhouse, and commits an offence for which he is sent to gaol, but I do not know of any instance in which a pauper was sent to gaol by the workhouse authorities.

3945. Has a case occurred within your experience, where a pauper, having become dangerous to others in a workhouse, has been committed from the workhouse as a dangerous lunatic to a gaol?—Certainly; on the affidavit of the master or of the doctor.

3946. I presume you have visited some of the gaols in Ireland?—I have visited a great many.

3947. What is your opinion as to the provision made in gaols for the custody of such lunatic paupers?—The provision made for them in gaols is quite unsuited for such a class. I was nine years surgeon of a gaol myself, and I had there ample experience of the injury done to the gaol from the reception of lunatics, and also of the injury done to the lunatics from their being sent to such a place.

3948. Would you state more fully your experience on the point of the injury as regards the gaol, and the injury as regards the lunatic?—There being no particular officer or person appointed to attend to a lunatic, he is frequently left in charge of a very unfit person and very often left by himself. There is no moral management; there is no effort made to amuse or employ him; he is generally shut up in a cell, in place of being taken out for air and exercise.

3949. Is he usually left in charge of a turnkey or of another prisoner?—Sometimes of a turnkey, and sometimes of another prisoner, and very often he is brutally treated.

3950. The presence of dangerous lunatics in a prison, would, I presume, interfere very much with its discipline?—Very much.

3951. After what you have stated I need scarcely ask you whether the prospects of a lunatic pauper's cure are at all advanced by sending him to gaol?—They are not advanced, but always the contrary, except in very rare instances, such as the Roscorra case, to which I alluded.

3952. Are you aware whether the crowded state of the asylums is such, that lunatics are at times detained for considerable periods in gaols?—I am aware they are detained for a considerable time in gaols, owing to the crowded state of asylums, and I am aware that they are sent to gaol precisely in order to have them transferred to an asylum.

3953. Is that considered an entire mode of procuring the admission to an asylum, than by the ordinary course of application to the Governors?—I think that course is taken of having lunatics committed to a gaol, generally after their friends have made application for their admission into an asylum, and have been refused. They resort to this from the pressure of the case upon them, and from their anxiety to have him ultimately sent to an asylum, to accomplish which some of the friends make the necessary cash as to the lunatic being dangerous.

3954. Does any alteration of the law suggest itself to you with reference to the removal of lunatics from a workhouse to an asylum?—Yes; I would so alter the law that more would be afforded for sending curable lunatics into a lunatic asylum, and such as are idiots and incurables into an institution where they would be maintained at a cheaper rate.

3955. The power at present exists with the executive government of removing a lunatic from a gaol to an asylum?—Yes; but not of removing a lunatic from a workhouse to an asylum.

3956. Would you contemplate the giving a similar power of removing lunatics from workhouses to gaols, to the Poor Law Commissioners, or to the Executive Government?—To the Poor Law Commissioners, on a report made by the workhouse medical officer, joined, if the Commissioners chose, by the District Medical Inspector, or Inspector of Lunatics.

3957. You have described the workhouses as very unfit places for the detention of lunatics—is it the case that workhouses generally contain a number of imbeciles who are mixed throughout the wards of the establishments, not being considered suitable inmates for a lunatic ward?—Yes; that is the case.

3958. What is your opinion as to the necessity for providing for this class, either in an establishment for chronic cases, such as you suggest should be erected, or in a lunatic asylum?—I am of opinion that many of that class might be left in the poorhouse.

3959. I presume they are a class for the most part incurable?—They are incurable.

3960. Would you limit the selection of cases that might be sent from the workhouses, so as to transfer those whose residence in the workhouse was rather injurious to the discipline of the establishment, or a source of annoyance to themselves, from the treatment they experienced from the same inmates?—I would remove from the poorhouses all those that would be likely to be benefited mentally by their transfer to a lunatic asylum, and I would also remove all those who are incapable of helping themselves, and that would require the treatment of a more suitable place than a workhouse, without reference to their mental condition.

3961. That would leave a considerable number who might remain in the workhouse?—Yes; many who might as well be in a workhouse as anywhere else.

3962. To whom would you propose the selection of the cases to be removed from the workhouses, and to remain there, should be given, supposing such an institution as you have suggested were erected for incurable cases?—The inspectors might confer with the doctors of the house. In that way there would be no difficulty in arriving at a fair conclusion on the subject.

3963. Is it your opinion that the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums should be medical men?—Indeed it is.

3964. Are you aware that in England one half of the paid Commissioners of the Lunacy Board are barristers, and the other half medical men?—Yes. I am not prepared to say that barristers, and other persons well educated, will not answer for the purpose; but what I mean to convey is, that I consider medical men to be the most suitable for the office of inspecting lunatics in lunatic asylums. I am of opinion the system of inspecting in England is a very excellent one, having a barrister and physician going together. We have no provision for that here.

3965. Have you formed any opinion as to the limits which should be placed to the extent of a lunatic asylum?—Yes; I am very much against very large asylums.

3966. What would you consider to be the outside number that should be in an asylum?—As many as the governor and medical officer or officers would be able to supervise—say about 300.

3967. Would you limit the institution for chronic cases to that number?—No; it might be extended to a larger number.

3968. Have you formed any opinion as to what number this extra asylum would be required for in Ireland?—I think 600 should be the maximum.

3969. In the course of your evidence you have suggested the formation of a Central Board of Commission of Lunacy?—Not of lunacy alone, I would have it to include the Medical Charities.

3970. What authority would you give this Central Board in lunacy matters?—The direction and government of all institutions in which there were lunatics.

3971. Do you mean the formation of rules and regulations such as the Privy Council can now form; or, do you mean such a complete control as the Poor Law Commissioners exercise over the workhouses?—Well, I am not prepared to enter on that subject. What strikes me is, that there is a defect in the present system, from the Inspectors-General having no superior authority to report to, and to govern them.

3972. Do you think the formation of such a board might lead to greater uniformity in the management of the various asylums?—I think the asylums would be much more efficiently managed under a directing board and by inspectors, who would be able then to devote their whole time to inspecting and reporting.

3973. What is your opinion as to the practice in England, by which the Board have themselves discharged the duties of inspectors?—It appears, so far as I have been able to read the reports, they give satisfaction. That Board is made up of two classes—the paid and unpaid members. I would contemplate unpaid members as well as paid members on the board I suggest should be established in this country.

3975. Do you mean that the personal inspection the paid members of the Board are obliged to give every year to the different institutions, keeps them more on constant with the state of those institutions than they would be by reading reports supplied by other parties?—Yes. I may give an instance. The Chairman of the Poor Law Board in Scotland, Sir John McNeil, visits the institutions himself, and makes reports, and gives valuable suggestions.

3976. What would be your opinion of an arrangement by which, in addition to Inspectors' visits, the Commissioners, or members of the Central Board, should either be bound to visit, or have the option of visiting the asylums themselves?—I am of opinion they should have the option, and that it would be useful if they were to exercise it occasionally.

3977. Would you contemplate the Central Board, to which you have referred, having the power of prescribing the form of procedure, and the manner in which accounts should be kept in the institutions?—Yes.

3978. And all other matters of that kind, as is done under the Poor Law Commissioners?—Certainly.

3979. Do you consider the Central Board should have any power to lay down a table or scale of the ordinary dietary to be used in each asylum?—They should have a control over the dietary; at least, I think it would be judicious that they would suggest the dietary, and that no dietary should be used without their sanction.

3980. Always excepting that extra dietary which the medical man would have the power of ordering?—Of course.

3981. Have you given your attention to the statistics of Lunacy, as shown in the reports of the Inspectors-General of Lunatic Asylums?—I have read them. I wish to hand in a table I have framed from those returns, in reference to the cases treated in the district asylums. I do not mean it as showing that one institution is better or worse than another. I only mean to show that there was some discrepancy, and that there is something required to be explained. I will send you the table.

3982. I presume returns showing the number of probably curable cases in the several lunatic asylums will not be made upon any uniform principles, so long as they are made by the officer of each lunatic asylum, respectively, according to his own ideas?—I would expect a tolerable uniformity in such returns from the several medical officers of the various institutions: a probably curable case is as likely to be estimated as such by one medical man as by another.

LUNATIC POOR IN WORKHOUSES

C. S. Crawford, Esq.

Charles Sherman Crawford, esq., sworn and examined.

3983. What official appointment do you hold?—That of Poor Law Inspector.

3984. How long have you been in the service of the Poor Law Commission?—Just ten years. I was appointed in the beginning of the year 1847.

3985. Of what district are you at present in charge?—I am at present in charge of the Dublin district.

3986. How many unions are comprised in that district?—Eleven unions.

3987. Had you been previously employed in other districts?—On my appointment, in 1847, I was employed in the Cork district, where I continued for about fourteen months.

3988. During the ten years you have held your present office, you have had many opportunities of examining and becoming familiar with the arrangements in the various workhouses for the maintenance of lunatics?—Yes; during, I may say, the entire period, except for about two years, during which time I was employed on the Boundary Commission, and, whilst engaged on that Commission, very little inspection duty was thrown upon me.

Special arrange-
for lunatics.

3989. What special arrangements are made in the several workhouse buildings for the maintenance of lunatics?—The general arrangement is to have a lunatic department at each side of the workhouse—one for males and the other for females—consisting generally of about four or five cells, with a room for the ward-keeper—it is called the inspectors' room. In giving the answer, I am speaking generally, for there are exceptions.

3990. That is the arrangement in the workhouses erected under the direction of the Poor Law Commissioners?—Yes.

3991. Those buildings are nearly all on the same plan?—Nearly; with some trifling variations.

3992. The workhouses of the city of Dublin were formerly used for other purposes, and were not erected on that plan?—The North Union Workhouse was formerly the House of Industry, and the South Dublin Union Workhouse was formerly the Fendling Hospital; and the portion of the building appropriated to lunatics in the South Dublin Union was not originally intended for that purpose.

For carriage of accommodation for lunatics in workhouses erected under direction of Poor Law
Commissioners.

3993. Can you state what per centage of the accommodation of the newly constructed workhouses, or the buildings erected as such, was allotted to lunatics?—It was very small: in a workhouse having accommodation for 600 or 800 paupers, there would be about five cells on each side for lunatics, that is ten in all. I should think not above two per cent. of the total accommodation.

3994. Were those wards or cells constructed for the purpose of the safe detention of lunatics, or are they of that cheerful character which would be desirable in a custodial establishment?—I think they have been made as cheerful as the nature of the circumstances permitted, consistent with keeping the parties in safe custody. The place has to be surrounded by a wall, which prevents, probably, any very cheerful aspect; but there is always a good yard attached to the cells, in which the inmates can take exercise.

No classification of lunatics in work-
houses, except that of sexes.

3995. The limited accommodation, which you have described as being allotted in the new workhouses to persons of unsound mind, would not admit of any great classification of the different classes of lunatics?—Certainly not. We have only the one classification, that of males and females.

3996. And the violent, the idiotic, or the imbecile are all confined in the one ward?—If a patient become maniacal or violent, he is confined to one of the cells during the time the violence lasts. I may state that the number of those violent persons in the workhouses is very small, for whenever such a case occurs, an immediate endeavour is made to get rid of the party by having him sent to the District Lunatic Asylum.

3997. In the larger workhouses of the city of Dublin, is there any classification of lunatics carried out?—No classification beyond the two departments I have already stated, male and female.

Treatment of lunatics
in workhouses;
restraint, employment, &c.

3998. Is the treatment of the lunatics who may be confined in those lunatic wards of a curative character as regards their lunacy?—I cannot say that it has much of a curative tendency. I apprehend that the greatest part, if not all the cases that are in the workhouses, are looked upon as incurable cases. They are chiefly idiots.

3999. On what ground are they necessarily looked upon as incurable cases?—As being cases, I may say, of idiocy arising from natural defect, or from epilepsy. Those are chiefly the cases we have in the workhouses.

4000. The persons in charge of lunatics in workhouses are, I believe, paupers?—The party immediately left in charge is a pauper; but they are always under the care of the nurse of the infirmary as much as the workhouse patients are. She is bound to look after them, and see that they are properly attended to.

4001. Are any instruments of mechanical restraint in use in those lunatic wards?—Scarcely ever. There are cases in which I believe the strait waistcoat has been put on, or another kind of dress, called the "chancellor;" but those are very rarely resorted to. If any case arises requiring the frequent application of such means of restraint, they immediately endeavour to have the party removed.

4002. In whose charge are these instruments of restraint generally left?—In charge of the infirmary ward. I should certainly say that they are never, so far as I am aware of, left in charge of the pauper in attendance.

4003. Is there any employment or industrial occupation provided for the lunatics in the wards?—There is. Many of the females knit and sew. Those capable of employment in that way are so employed. Any of the males that are able to work are taken out of the cells, and do the ordinary work about the house. They are not confined at all to the idiot cells and to the idiot yard.

4004. Is there usually an idiot yard attached to each of those wards?—Always.

4005. Is it a large yard?—Not very large. The size varies in different unions in some degree; but it is always a good yard, except in the South Dublin Union, where it is a very confined one.

4006. Have you found in the workhouses any number of inmates of unsound or weak mind, who are not confined to the lunatic wards?—Yes; in a good many of the workhouses some parties that are idiotic are allowed to mix with the other inmates.

4007. Are the inmates, when suffering from bodily ailments, treated in the general hospital or infirmary of the workhouse, or are they treated in their own cells?—I think they are generally treated in their own cells. I know there are cases in which the medical officers have removed them to the infirmary; but, generally, I should say they are treated in their own cells.

4008. Have you found that when mixing with the other inmates they are subjected to annoyances by the paupers?—I never knew of any complaint on that subject. I think the general disposition is to treat them kindly.

4009. When a pauper who may be of unsound mind presents himself for admission to a workhouse, what is the practice with regard to admitting him, or is there any indisposition to receive him?—Such cases, I may say, seldom come before the Board. The cases are admitted provisionally by the relieving officer and by the master, and I never knew a Board of Guardians to reject one of those parties provisionally admitted.

4010. Of course a case provisionally admitted has to be considered by the Admission Board?—Yes; but the admission is at once ratified.

4011. Supposing patients, weak-minded and unable to take care of themselves, to demand their discharge, what is the practice in such cases?—I think the practice is to treat such a demand as the demand of an insane person that has no right to make it. If an idiot or insane person said he wanted his discharge, it would not be granted.

4012. Is that the view the Poor Law Commissioners have acted upon?—That is the view acted upon by the different Boards of Guardians in my district. I do not say that the Poor Law Commissioners have ever been applied to by the Boards of Guardians on the subject.

4013. Is any difficulty experienced in getting admission into district asylums for lunatic paupers in workhouses?—I constantly find great difficulty in getting admission for parties whom I do not wish to retain in the workhouse; the statement generally made is, that there is no accommodation.

4014. I believe there are about 200 lunatic paupers in the Dublin Workhouses at present?—Yes; about 200.

4015. When a lunatic pauper becomes dangerous, do the Guardians take steps to have him removed to gaol under the Dangerous Lunatic Act?—Yes, if they cannot get him removed to the district asylum. The informations are given in the usual way.

4016. Has any difficulty arisen in the admission of paupers into asylums from the workhouses, in consequence of the bond which is required to be given by the friends of the applicant upon his admission to the asylum?—I do not apprehend that any difficulty has arisen. I think the Guardians are ready in every case to give a bond of that kind.

4017. Have the Governors ever refused to admit a patient on the ground that the admission paper detailing the facts of the case, and the history, had not been properly filled up?—I am not aware of any such case. The refusals were always on the ground that there was not sufficient accommodation.

4018. I presume it may at times occur, from the fact of a patient being recently admitted to a workhouse, or from other causes, that his history would not be sufficiently known to the master of the workhouse to enable him to give such a statement?—There must be cases of that kind. There are parties of whose previous history nothing is known; they are unable to state it themselves, and are apparently strangers.

4019. How far do you yourself consider a workhouse to be a proper place of detention for lunatics?—I think a workhouse is a very fit place for the reception of lunatics of an idiotic character. I do not think it a fit place for any disease of maniacal tendency, or, I may say, a disease of the cure of which hopes would be entertained. I think the admission of lunatics to workhouses should be confined altogether to those cases of whose recovery there are no hopes.

4021. The letter of the Poor Law Commissioners appears in the evidence given before the House of Lords Committee, in 1843, regarding lunatics; have you perused that letter?—I have perused it. It is as follows:—

Lunatic Poor in Workhouse.

C. B. Cusack, Esq.
Objection to the reception of incurable lunatics in workhouses.

"Dublin, 23rd September, 1842.

"SIR,—The Poor Law Commissioners have had before them minutes of the proceedings of the Board of Guardians of the Cloughreen Union, on the 23rd ultimo, with reference to the resolution directing the Master to inform the Governor of the Lunatic Asylum, Clonmel, that there is accommodation for two quiet lunatics in the workhouse. The Commissioners desire to state that it would be very inexpedient to act upon it, or to admit any lunatics into the workhouse. The unfortunate persons here contemplated ought to be the inmates of an institution which admits of such arrangements as their peculiar case required; which arrangements cannot be made in a workhouse without much expense and difficulty; and incurable lunatics received from time to time into the workhouse, would soon constitute a large and permanent class, to the detriment of the primary object of the establishment, which is the relief and prevention of pauperism under ordinary circumstances.

"By order of the Board,

"ARTHUR MOORE, Chief Clerk."

4022. That letter points out that no incurable lunatics should be removed from a lunatic asylum to a workhouse?—It does.

4023. The view of the Poor Law Commissioners as to the course to be pursued, would not admit of the incurable cases being left in the workhouse, as you propose?—What the Commissioners, in this letter, seem to direct their attention to, is the establishment of a large and permanent class of such persons in workhouses; but I do not apprehend the objection stated in the letter I have just read would exist, if the number of the class to whom I have referred was not large.

4024. I presume the objection in that letter was very much based upon the fact that the law would provide for incurable lunatics in other asylums?—I should think so; and they feared that the entire support of the incurable lunatics would be thrown upon the workhouses.

4025. The class of persons referred to in that letter being, at the time, in asylums where they were maintained under the existing law, could scarcely be considered destitute poor?—I should say that they could not be so considered.

4026. I believe the cost of maintaining a pauper lunatic in an asylum would not be levied in the same manner as the cost of maintaining a pauper in a workhouse?—No, certainly not. I apprehend that, for cases in the asylums, it is raised by Grand Jury Presentments; it would be levied either on the county at large or on the barony. In the poor law case, the charge would fall either upon the union or upon the particular electoral division, if the pauper had been long enough resident in an electoral division.

4027. And in the former case the Grand Jury rate is altogether levied upon the occupier, whilst he has to pay only half the poor rate?—Yes. I may here add that in anything I have said about incurable cases being fit for workhouses, I did not mean to convey that a workhouse would be a suitable place for a large number of such cases. I do not see any objection to a limited number of them being maintained in a workhouse.

4028. Is the construction of a workhouse generally such, that if one was appropriated exclusively for such imbecile, quiet, and incurable cases, that it could be properly used for that purpose?—I do not see any material impediment in the way of its being used for that purpose; it would be, in fact, turning a workhouse into a lunatic asylum, and I do not see any difficulty in the way of doing so.

4029. I believe a large number of workhouses were erected since the period of the famine?—Yes, about thirty.

4030. Being an addition of upwards of twenty-five per cent.?—Yes.

4031. Suppose a lunatic who became violent is placed in a cell which is not padded, what provision is there for attendance upon him during his confinement therein?—I cannot say that there is any special provision, but I apprehend in such a case a party is never left alone. I have not heard of any injury occurring to any maniacal patient during the time of his being in a violent or excited state.

4032. Who is the attendant?—There is a pauper attendant who is under the supervision of the infirmary nurse, and the medical officer, and also under the control of the Master and Mistress of the workhouse.

4033. Is the cell in which a patient may be thus confined immediately adjoining the infirmary where the nurse is engaged?—It is in the infirmary range.

4034. In the course of your inspection, have you had reason to believe that the paupers in charge of the lunatics in workhouses treat them harshly?—I have not. I have heard no complaints to that effect.

4035. Would you be surprised to find a whip with a pauper in charge of lunatics for the purpose of keeping the idiot boys in order?—I should indeed. I never heard of such a thing.

4036. You are not, therefore, prepared for the statement that the Commissioners saw such a thing in the Carlow workhouse?—I am not.

4037. Is there any amendment you would wish to suggest in the law as regards pauper lunatics?—What I feel is chiefly wanted is some better power than the Guardians have at present of removing from the workhouse to some other place parties who appear unfitted for remaining in the workhouse. Great difficulty is experienced in effecting this.

Proportion of free patients and of paying patients received.

4438. I believe you are one of the Governors of St. Patrick's Hospital?—Yes.

4439. How long have you occupied that position?—I was elected in 1849.

4440. Can you state to the Commissioners what is the course at present pursued with reference to the admission of patients to that hospital; what proportion of free patients are admitted, and what proportion of paying patients?—That was formerly a matter of uncertainty, but about two or three years ago I suggested that it would be well if there were some certain data to go upon: 150 was the number received, and I thought if we settled upon having seventy-five free and seventy-five paying patients, that it would enable us at once to see whether we had a vacancy for a free patient or not.

4441. It was, I understand, therefore, upon your suggestion that the minute of the 7th November, 1853, which states that the free patients are not to exceed seventy-five in number, was adopted?—Yes; it is not stated on the face of the minutes by whom those things are proposed.

4442. In perusing the former minutes of the Board, it appears that the reception of paying patients commenced shortly after the opening of the institution, in the last century?—That I am not able to speak about; however it was found a very profitable arrangement, and a large sum of money was thereby accumulated—about, in Government stock, £20,000.

4443. Would you be so good as to turn your attention to the Report made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in the year 1800, on the Condition of the Hospital?—Yes. I read the following passage:—"The building was originally planned for the reception of forty-eight patients, but in such a manner as to admit of additions thereto, agreeable to the will of the founder, whenever the funds of the hospital would enable the Governors to make such additions. The bounty of Parliament, and requests from some very humane individuals, did enable the Governors to extend the building in the year ———" for the reception of forty-eight additional patients; and the applications for admission into the hospital increasing greatly, Parliament was pleased, by another grant, to enable the Governors, in the year ———" to extend the building still more, so that at present it is capable of receiving 158 patients—namely, 106 paupers and fifty-two boarders, according to an appropriation by the Governors, who early found it necessary to entertain boarders, in order, by some profit thereon, to enable them to receive a greater number of paupers."

Former condition of the Hospital.

4444. Turn to a subsequent minute of the 1st of August, 1808, in which a further statement of the condition of the house at that period is given?—Yes, I do so; and the statement is as follows:—"The committee also report, that they found the wards in as good order as could be expected, considering the description of patients contained in them. The following is the state of the chambers and wards for boarders, and the wards for paupers:—eight male chambers; boarders, eighty guineas; four female ditto, eighty guineas; twenty-four male ward boarders, forty guineas; fifteen female ditto; one ditto charged, but not paid for, forty guineas; thirty-five male paupers; fifty-one female ditto. Signed, 'James Vescomberle.'"

4445. Would you next turn your attention to the memorial to the Lord Lieutenant, which appears in the minutes of the 11th November, 1816?—Yes; I do so.

4446. I believe it is there stated, that at that time the number of free patients was 100, and the number of paying patients, fifty?—Yes.

Free and paying patients; charges for paying patients.

4447. The number of paying and free patients slightly varied therefore during those periods?—I should presume the number did vary; I have never examined those books.

4448. It appears from the evidence given before the House of Lords, in 1843, that at the period when Lord St. Leonards was Chancellor of Ireland he visited St. Patrick's Hospital?—Yes. He is a chartered governor.

4449. His attention was then attracted to the number of patients who were received free upon the establishment, and to the number of boarders who paid?—Yes; he disapproved of our receiving more than forty guineas a-year for patients.

4450. In the minute which he made on the occasion of his visit, does he not state the number of patients to be 155, of whom ninety-four were free and sixty-one were paying patients?—Yes; I imagine we admit as fair a proportion of free patients as our means would admit of. We have no superfluity of funds now, beyond a small balance of £200 a-year.

4451. I believe, in consequence of Lord St. Leonards' communication with the Board on the subject, a rule was made, that patients paying above forty guineas a-year should be discontinued?—Yes. I mentioned that we had accumulated some £20,000 by means of paying patients, which was placed in Government stock, and the interest upon that assisted the institution.

4452. I presume that forty guineas was calculated to be about a fair average cost of maintenance?—Yes; it was estimated that it would cover the expense of a patient.

4453. There is little, if any, profit, therefore, at present derived from the boarders?—I should say none.

4454. It appears from a statement laid before the Commissioners, that in '53 the free patients were seventy-one in number, and the paying patients, seventy-three?—Yes.

4455. I believe in that year the resolution was adopted, to which you have referred, that the number of free patients should be seventy-five?—Yes.

4456. The intention, I presume, was, that the number of paying patients should not exceed one-half—seventy-five?—Yes. The principal object was, that we would not be pressed too much by free patients, and that we should have a fixed rule to guide us when we had to consider the admission of patients.

4057. At the period of the Commissioners' visit the number of paying patients was eighty-three, and of free patients, sixty-six?—I was not aware of that. It might arise in this way, that there were no applications from free patients, and then we might have admitted paying patients.

4058. Are you aware, that since the period when the resolution was passed, the number of free patients has never reached seventy-five?—No; on the contrary, I rather thought it had. There were certainly no objections to fill up the vacancies with free patients, if we had applications.

4059. I believe the applications are considered at the monthly meetings?—Yes; at the monthly meetings.

4060. Have the Board always before them at that time a statement of the number of free and paying patients in the institution?—Yes; and the return I speak of is made to enable us in fact to decide whom we can admit.

4061. It appears from the minutes, that on the 7th January, 1856, four female cases were rejected on the ground that there were no vacancies, while one male case was admitted at £30 per annum. Do you suppose the rejection of the female cases arose from there being a want of free places, or a want of accommodation at the female side?—Well, when it is said in the minutes there was no vacancy, of course there was not; I do not remember the particular cases, but I should say there was no room for them. We knew by the Master's report, which is placed before the Governors at every meeting, and which states the number of vacancies in the house. There might be an error.

4062. I presume the intention in limiting the amount to be received from paying patients was, to provide for all classes of persons who would be enabled to pay that sum, but not a larger sum?—I rather think that Sir Edward Sugden, the Lord Chancellor, thought that, as this was a charitable institution, the Governors were wrong in previously making a profit on patients. I have heard so. I was not a Governor at the time.

4063. Practically, do the Governors, in admitting a patient, consider whether that patient, from his position in life, and circumstances generally, would be enabled to pay to the asylum a larger sum than forty guineas?—We certainly always take that into consideration. One of the queries is as to his property, and it must be stated that the party is not able to pay more. The statement of property is certified by witnesses.

4064. It appears, that in May, 1854, a patient was admitted at thirty guineas per annum, who was the son of a nobleman?—That was a most distressing case. The party, though the son of a nobleman, was steeped in poverty.

4065. Have you found that, after patients have been admitted as paying patients, there is a difficulty in recovering the stipend which they conditioned to pay?—Very frequently applications are made for the reduction of the payment, which we resist as much as possible; there may, however, be genuine cases arising, for instance, from the death of a friend by whom the stipend was paid.

4066. In estimating the number of free patients who should be admitted into the institution, was the calculation made with reference to the original bequest of Dean Swift and to the funds accumulated from the payment of boarders?—No; there was no pecuniary calculation made; the object was merely to have a definite rule to guide us. We always found it balanced our accounts at the end of the year.

4067. Is it your opinion that a considerable charity is done by receiving patients even paying small sums?—An amazing amount of charity is done in that way; many distressing cases are admitted at twenty pounds a year.

4068. At the period of the original bequest of Dean Swift, and long after, there was no legal provision at all in Ireland for the lunatic poor?—No.

4069. I believe the hospital has from time to time received aid from Parliamentary grants?—So I have heard.

4070. Not in recent years?—No, it has no grant at present.

4071. I believe there are no regular chaplains appointed to the institution except the Rev. Mr. Dobbin, a clergyman of the Established Church?—He was not appointed chaplain, he was appointed secretary. The history of that arrangement is this: Mr. Crockett, a Governor, received some fees for writing the minutes. When I went there first, I used to assist him in doing so; subsequently I was requested to accept the office, but I stated that I considered it would be awkward for me as a Governor to receive fees. The fees were, I understand, a guinea upon each lease, and I thought it was better that another gentleman should be appointed who would receive those fees, and do the duty. They amount to about twenty pounds a year. The Rev. Mr. Dobbin was chaplain to Stevens' Hospital, which adjoins, and he gave his services as chaplain gratuitously.

4072. What is your opinion as to the advantage of having religious services performed in a lunatic institution?—For very few indeed I think it of use in a lunatic asylum. There are a few always to whom it is a great blessing to have their clergyman to speak to as a friend. The Roman Catholic priest, I am told, is constantly admitted to see Roman Catholic patients.

4073. Apart from the communication that might take place between a clergyman and any particular member of his church in an asylum, do you think it desirable or otherwise, that a patient who may be labouring under insanity should have the opportunity of attending religious worship?—Certainly, and I think the medical adviser would be the person to say who were fit to go; some of the patients, I understand, do go out with keepers to places of worship.

4074. Are you enabled to state what number usually go out?—I believe very few.

Object of limiting the sum to be paid by patients.

Inquiry by Governors as to patients' means.

Object of fixing the number of free and paying patients.

Parliamentary aid.

Chaplain; religious services for the patients.

Opinion as to efficacy of.

4075. Do the Governors frequently make an inspection of the whole asylum?—Not very frequently, every board day they generally do.
4076. Is there a Committee of Governors appointed to act as a visiting Committee?—Not as a visiting Committee, there is a Committee appointed in reference to accounts.
4077. Was there not formerly a house Committee?—Not in my memory.
4078. Is there any padded room in the asylum for the seduction of violent patients?—No. Within the last three years rooms have been partitioned off the corridor for troublesome or violent patients to prevent them disturbing the other patients.
4079. That is not what is meant by a padded room?—It is not. I think I may venture to say the Governors are most anxious to make any improvements that are suggested. We depend greatly upon our medical advisers, and occasionally ask them have they any suggestion to make. We floored a corridor that was flagged, at considerable expense, some time ago, and we made new water-closets.
4080. Has the question of putting up proper baths been under the consideration of the Governors?—No; we have baths at present. I understand it is considered a bad plan to have them on the corridor with the patients; they used to be dabbling in them.
4081. Are you aware there is only one fixed bath for the use of the 150 patients?—Yes.
4082. And that bath is not at present fit for use?—That I am not aware of. I should suppose it is fit for use. I have not seen it for the last year.
4083. Has the master recently brought under the consideration of the Board, the imperfect condition of the bath?—No.
4084. You are not therefore prepared to hear that on the occasion of the Commissioners' visit, the bath was entirely out of order, and that there were only two portable slipper baths available for the use of the patients?—I am surprised to hear it; it is the fault of the master not reporting it; if he did so it would have been immediately attended to.
4085. Would it not be desirable that a visiting or a house committee should be appointed who would be enabled, themselves, to detect these deficiencies?—I think it would, and in fact the Governors themselves, strictly speaking, ought to look to those things. None of the Governors but have been through the wards occasionally.
4086. Are you aware that there are no lavatories for the use of the patients, and that the washing of the patients is conducted in the day-rooms, in tubs?—They wash in a room off each of the corridors, near the day-rooms.
4087. There are no lavatories with cocks and basins, as in the modern asylums?—No.
4088. Are you aware that the only provision for bathing patients with warm water is by carrying it up in tubs from the kitchen?—I am not.
4089. Has the question of lighting the establishment with gas ever occupied the attention of the Governors?—Yes, it has, but not very much; it was thought too dangerous a thing to do.
4090. Have you ever visited the corridors after nightfall?—No; I never was there at night.
4091. You are not perhaps aware that the only provision for lighting galleries 380 feet in length, is three or four tallow candles?—There are lanterns in the corridors in which I presume the candles are placed.
4092. Is there any regular record kept of the cases in which restraint is used, such as the application of the strait waistcoat?—There is not. That is done under the direction of our medical advisers. Restraint is very rarely used; probably not in more than three cases at a time out of 150.
4093. I believe the apothecary does not reside upon the premises?—No.
4094. And the medicines are supplied by him as the compounder?—Yes.
4095. They are not purchased wholesale by the establishment, and compounded upon the spot?—No. Mr. Nicolls, of Dawson-street, is the apothecary, who supplies the medicines.
4096. Do you know what means there are of providing medicines on a sudden emergency in the house, or of administering them?—I do not. I believe there is a supply kept of the common medicines, but a physician visits every morning in the year.
4097. Are you aware those medicines are left in the charge of an ordinary nurse?—She is a superior nurse.
4098. Are you aware that the instruments of restraint, such as the muff, leg-strap, and strait waistcoat, are actually in charge of the ordinary keepers?—They may be, I do not doubt it; but I feel assured they are never used except under the direction of the medical advisers.
4099. That assurance must depend upon the confidence you feel in the keeper in whose charge they are?—It is not a confidence in the subordinate nurse or officer who keeps them, but in the medical adviser, who visits every morning; and I think if any thing of the kind occurred, the patients would complain.
5900. Might it not be the case that a patient might be in such terror of the keeper who was in the habit of so treating him, as to be fearful of complaining?—It might be; the cases of restraint are extremely rare.
5001. Lord St. Leonard's minute of 1843 contained this statement: "There is no Case-Book, and some of the important entries in the Day Statement Book are not filled up regularly, and therefore the number of patients under restraint at all times does not appear. There is, however, but little restraint here. The apothecary lives in Dublin, a long distance from the hospital, and the medicines are compounded generally at his shop, which of course

From the answers you have given it would appear, that as regards the entries of restraint, as regards the objection to the apothecary residing at the distance, and the compounding of medicines, nothing has been done to alter the state of things of which Lord St. Leonards then complained?—No; I am amazed something has not been done. I never heard of this suggestion. Even now, if we were told these alterations were desirable they would be carried out if approved of on consulting our medical adviser. At the same time I must say it is an hospital admirably conducted.
- Three Governors a quorum. 5002. I believe the charter requires that three of the Governors should be present at each meeting, to form a quorum?—Yes.
- Irregular transaction of business. 5003. Have you known instances when the business has been transacted, although three Governors have not attended?—Yes.
5004. That has been considered irregular?—Quite so. It was unavoidable; we could not postpone the paying of the tradesmen's bills, but we never admitted patients on those occasions.
- Admission of patients. 5005. It appears that on the 3rd of July, 1854, one Governor was present, and patients were admitted, and all the ordinary business of the day was done; that would not be consistent with the charter?—It was extremely wrong.
5006. With reference to the admission of free patients and paying patients, and the limitation to seventy-five, to which the former class are restricted, would you not consider it desirable that on each day there should be a return before the board, of the actual number of free and paying patients in the house?—That is done.
5007. How do you account for the entry in the minute of the 7th March, 1853, in Ellis Cromwell's case, that there was no vacancy for a free patient, when there were only seventy-one free patients in the house?—I think that is a mistake. I think you will find in the book that there was no vacancy. The master mentioned that matter at the last meeting of the Governors, after his own examination before the Commissioners.
- Clinical instruction. 5008. Are you aware whether any clinical instruction is given in the hospital?—I am not.
5009. Are you aware that there was an order of the 21st May, 1844, that clinical instruction should be given, and that students, keepers, and matrons of other asylums, might attend?—I am not.
- Granting of leases. 5010. The charter requires that leases should be made only at quarterly meetings, and with the consent of the majority of ex-officio Governors?—Yes.
5011. Has that regulation been strictly adhered to?—Yes; I think so.
5012. And the charter also requires that no lease shall be made to members of the Corporation, or those allied to them?—Yes.
5013. Has that been adhered to?—Yes.
5014. Does Mr. Verschoyle hold land under the Board?—He does, under old leases.
5015. Those were prior to the purchase made by the Board?—Yes; Mr. Verschoyle inherited some ground near Saggart, near our property. His was in detached portions mixed up with ours, and there were some exchanges made between the two, taking both upon Griffith's valuation; otherwise it would have been an awkward thing. That will bear the closest sifting. It was an advantage to the hospital to make the exchange.
- Limitation of salaries by the charter. 5016. The charter seems to provide that the salaries of the officers are not to exceed one-third of a clear year's interest and profits of the Governors' personal estate. Is the attention of the Governors given to that provision?—There has been no alteration in salaries these many years, with the exception of £20 a year to the Rev. Mr. Dobbin.

DETENTION OF LUNATICS IN GAOLS.

James Curry Counselor, Esq., sworn and examined.

DUBLIN.

Detention of Lunatics
in Gaols.

J. C. Connelan Esq.

5017. I believe you are one of the Inspectors-General of Prisons in Ireland?—

I am.

5018. How long have you held that office?—About six years and a-half.

5019. During the period that you have held your present office, the duty of inspecting asylums has formed no portion of your duty as Inspector-General of Prisons?—No; those duties were transferred to the Inspectors-General of Lunatic Asylums, by the 8th and 9th Vic. chap. 107.

5020. How frequently do you visit each of the gaols in Ireland?—At least once a year; but much oftener if it should be necessary.

5021. Is the number of lunatics at present confined in gaols very considerable?—The number on the 1st of January last amounted to 159, of whom 81 were males, and 78 females; that number includes every class, dangerous and idiotic.

Number of lunatics

5022. That number would include, as well as dangerous lunatics, the lunatics who may be criminal lunatics according to the terms of the law, and therefore fit cases for removal to the Central Criminal Asylum, at Dundrum?—Yes.

5023. Is the number which you have mentioned as being confined in gaols on the 1st of January last, in excess of the ordinary numbers during the period you have held your office?—It is considerably lower than the number which prevailed during the first years of my holding my present office, but for the last two years it has been a sort of normal number, an almost regular average. We find that it has fallen in few cases below, or risen above, the present number.

5024. Can you furnish the Commissioners with a statement of the number of lunatics in each gaol?—I can. [Same is delivered in.]

5025. From the return which you have just put in, it would appear that the greater number of lunatics are confined in the gaols of five counties, including the city of Dublin?—Yes.

5026. I observe that 116 of the number are confined in the gaols of the county of Dublin, the city of Dublin, Tipperary, Wexford, and Down?—Yes.

5027. Will you mention the gaols in which there are at present no lunatics?—Those of Antrim (at Belfast), Armagh, Cork city, Galway town, Kerry, Leitrim, Drogheda, Meath (at Trim), Monaghan, Roscommon, Sligo, Tyrone (at Omagh), Waterford county and city, and Westmeath (at Mullingar).

5028. Are the gaols which you have now, from the return, shown to have contained no lunatics on the 1st of January last, generally free from lunatics, or do they usually contain only a small number?—They are generally free from lunatics. There have been congregations of lunatics in four of the district asylums.

5029. What are the particular arrangements for the reception of lunatics in those prisons?—There are none whatever; they are not dealt with at all as a special class. We conceive that they are altogether under the direction of the medical officers.

Arrangements for the reception of lunatics in gaols.

5030. Are they classed with the untried prisoners, or put into separate wards?—They are generally placed in a separate ward, by themselves, but with some prisoners intermixed, in order to watch them.

5031. Is there usually a paid officer in charge of the lunatics throughout the day, or are they left in the charge of the other prisoners?—They are always under the supervision of a turnkey. The turnkey is responsible for the prisoners, including lunatics that may be placed in his charge, but there is no selection of turnkeys for that particular duty.

5032. Is there a turnkey generally present in the ward in which lunatics are confined?—Generally he is present the whole day, but he has other duties to perform.

5033. You are aware that class of persons require very frequently the constant supervision of the attendants?—Yes, and they are invariably attended by some prisoners.

5034. Are the arrangements as regards their sleeping, the same as those of the ordinary prisoners, namely, that they should be confined either one or three in a cell?—They are invariably confined three in a cell. With regard to male prisoners, there is a requirement in the Prisons Act for an obvious reason, that two should not be placed in a cell. With regard to lunatics the almost universal rule is—there may be occasional departures from the regulation—that both in the case of the male and female prisoners, two sane prisoners are placed in the cell with each of them.

5035. I suppose some of the cases are those of very violent lunacy?—Yes.

5036. That would be naturally expected, inasmuch as the law provides that dangerous lunatics should be sent direct to a gaol?—Yes.

5037. Is it your opinion the admission of lunatics into a prison interferes with its discipline?—Materially. I would wish in reply to that question, to put in a very brief extract from my last Report on the County of Wicklow Gaol. It sums up the whole story. When I inspected the gaol of Wicklow, on the 18th September, 1856, I found but seventeen female prisoners of all classes, including lunatics. In my report from which I read, there is this statement—"The females, on the other hand are nominally placed in two classes, according to conduct, but in consequence of the presence of no less than five lunatics, who each require two prisoners to watch them by day, and to sleep in their cells at night, a strict observance of classification, or even of discipline, has become impossible, it being necessary to intermix both classes, and to grant indulgence and allowances to those who undertake duties not compulsory, which are always onerous, generally disgusting, and sometimes dangerous. It is proper, however, to observe in this place, that the utmost care and humanity are exhibited here towards those unhappy beings, for whose withdrawal, if consistent with the means of reception at their disposal, I have made an urgent request to the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums, as all the objects of prison administration, whether educational, industrial, punitive, or reformatory, are frustrated." You have there fifteen out of the seventeen women, who are either lunatics themselves or engaged as attendants upon lunatics, and withdrawn from the whole object of prison discipline. This is a goal not particularly crowded, and it is under a very humane administration. The local inspector happens to be himself a medical man, in addition to the regular medical officer of the goal, and the Governor is one of the most humane and attentive men I know, so that you have in this case a very good instance of the inconvenience of detaining lunatics in goals.

Detention of Lunatics in Gaols.

J. G. Connelley, Esq.

5038. The same inconveniences, though not perhaps to the same extent, are likely to arise in other goals from the confinement of lunatics in them?—Undoubtedly.

5039. Is the period of the detention of dangerous lunatics in goals very considerable?—It depends of course very much upon the state of the asylum of the district to which the goal belongs, and it depends also upon the gravity of the case, for the goal authorities are naturally desirous of having removed to the asylum, the more violent cases, allowing the chronic cases, those who are quiet in their demeanour, to remain.

5040. I believe no communication is made to your office on the reception of a lunatic prisoner?—No.

5041. It is made to the office of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums?—It is made direct to the office of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums. Copies of the committal and medical certificate in each case are at once transmitted to them.

5042. Have you heard any complaints as to the operation of the Dangerous Lunatic Act?—Throughout the country there appears to be a very strong feeling that it has been made the means of fastening upon the asylums a class of persons who may be generally considered as idiotic, but who have shown some symptoms of violence, and are thus brought within the scope of the Act.

5043. Have you ever heard complaints of the Act having been used oppressively by the relatives of a person accused as a dangerous lunatic?—I frequently heard it so stated. No case came before me personally, for the reason I have already mentioned, that the circumstances of each lunatic are not submitted to us.

5044. With regard to the cases of lunatics not committed under the Dangerous Lunatic Act, but who may have become lunatic pending their imprisonment, I believe the law provides for their being removed to the Central Asylum?—Yes.

5045. And in like manner with regard to persons found insane at the time of trial?—Yes.

5046. Is this class of criminal lunatics usually removed, without much delay, to the Central Asylum?—Many of the cases remain a considerable time. I believe the selection for removal is always made with reference to the gravity of the case.

5047. Has it been a matter of complaint, on the part of the Boards of Superintendence, that such prisoners were not speedily removed?—I have never received any complaint with regard to that class of prisoners, but with regard to dangerous lunatics, frequently.

5048. Do you find that the goals which are situated in the same town or county where the asylum is placed, generally have their lunatics more speedily removed than those of the counties not contiguous to the asylum?—Yes; we frequently find complaints in the more outlying counties of the group which form the district attached to each asylum, that a preference is given. They think so at least.

5049. Would that account in some degree for the absence of lunatics, or as you have stated, for the almost general paucity of lunatics in such goals as Antrim, Cork city, Kerry, Tyrone, and Waterford?—It would appear to do so.

5050. I believe the county of Wexford is circumstanced as you have described?—Yes.

5051. Its goals contain, by the return you have exhibited, twenty-four lunatics?—Yes.

5052. Is that above or below the average for that county?—I have generally found above twenty on my inspection there. Many have been, for a very considerable period, chronic cases.

5053. The goals of the county Tipperary appear, however, to have twenty-nine lunatics, although there is an asylum for that county, situate in Clonmel?—Yes; they constantly complain of the inadequacy of the asylum for taking off the lunatics.

5054. In the case of Dublin, there appear to be forty-six lunatics in the goals, although the Richmond Lunatic Asylum is in the city?—Yes.

5055. Has the same complaint been made as to the inadequacy of that institution to provide for the wants of the lunatic poor?—Constantly; the authorities of the county and city of Dublin are for ever complaining of the long detention of lunatics in the goals.

5056. There appear to have been eleven lunatics on the 1st of January last in the goal of the county of Donegal, at Lifford?—Yes.

5057. Does that goal usually contain that number?—I should say so. We have had frequent complaints from the local magistrate of that gaol, or urgent requests that steps might be taken to relieve the gaol from the presence of so many lunatics.

5058. Is the treatment of the lunatics, while in the gaol, of a curative character, with regard to their lunacy?—Certainly not, I should say.

5059. There is no particular medical treatment for them?—There are no means, physical or mental, for dealing with their cases. The medical officer has an unlimited discretion, with regard to their diet; we never interfere as to that.

5060. No employment is provided for them different from that of the other prisoners?—No. There are some of them in a sufficiently sane state to be employed industrially, and some to receive education, but they are dealt with precisely in that respect as are the other prisoners.

5061. I presume the employment usually provided for prisoners is not of a character suited for lunatics?—No; whenever any of them happen to have been handicraftsmen, they are kept employed at the trade in which they have been instructed. Some of them are very industrious.

5062. What is your opinion of the effect upon lunatics of confinement in gaols as regards their curability?—I apprehend it must be productive of very serious injury to a lunatic.

5063. Do you think that is the opinion generally of the medical attendants?—Most undoubtedly.

5065. I believe that, in some cases, the county prisons are situated in places very remote from the extreme points of the counties?—Yes, in very remote places; that of Cork, for instance, is at least 120 statute miles from the western extremity of the county.

5066. Are lunatics ever confined in the bridewells?—They are merely placed there, for detention, as a matter of security, during their transit either to a gaol or to an asylum.

5067. I believe in the case of the county of Cork, the lunatic asylum, being situate in the city of Cork, is also at the same great distance that you have mentioned from the western extremity of the county?—Yes.

5068. What is the longest period you have known a lunatic to be detained in a gaol?—I have been told of cases being detained as long as eight years, and ten years.

5069. In the cases to which you refer, can you account for the continued detention of the lunatics in a prison?—For the reasons I have already stated, that the gaol authorities infinitely preferred retaining persons of quiet habits, and that they impressed upon the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums the necessity for removing the more urgent and violent cases from time to time.

5070. If the persons referred to were criminal lunatics, their removal to the Central Asylum at Dandrum might have been effected?—Yes.

5071. Supposing the law to be altered, by which dangerous lunatics may now be committed by the magistrates direct to gaols, what amendment would you suggest?—I see no reason why they should not be sent direct to asylums. The whole question with regard to the confinement of lunatics in gaols resolves itself into this—first, that the greatest injury is done to the discipline of a prison; and secondly, with regard to the lunatics themselves; they are either curable or incurable; if they are curable, it is surely a gross injustice to them to detain them in a place so deficient in the proper means of treatment for their disease, as our ordinary gaols; if they are incurable, you are perverting the gaol from the object for which it was established.

5072. You consider, therefore, that whatever inconvenience might be occasioned by the pressure of lunatics beyond what the asylum is calculated to accommodate, it is still preferable the asylum should be put to that inconvenience rather than that they should be sent to gaol?—Most undoubtedly. I cannot see why a gaol should be considered as an elastic institution, and an asylum not. I conceive that a crowded lunatic asylum affords infinitely better means for the curative treatment of lunatics than the best gaol.

5073. Then your view is, that although a lunatic asylum should happen to contain the full number allowed to it by law, it should, nevertheless, receive dangerous or criminal lunatics above that number, inasmuch as it would be better for the lunatics and the prison discipline that the asylum should suffer the temporary inconvenience of slight overcrowding rather than that a lunatic should be detained in a gaol for any time?—Yes; such is my opinion.

5074. Are the prison officers provided with any means of mechanical restraint for the lunatics?—There are handcuffs and strait waistcoats.

5075. In whose custody are those instruments?—That of the Governor.

5076. Have you reason to believe he ever intrusts the general charge of them to subordinate servants?—No case of the kind has ever come within my knowledge.

5077. Have you ever heard any complaints, or had reason to believe that harsh treatment is used towards the lunatics in prisons?—No; no such complaint has ever come before me. I should say that, as a general rule, they were treated with great humanity, consistent with the very imperfect means at the disposal of the gaol authorities.

5078. You have stated that, for the most part, they are in charge of sane prisoners?—Yes.

5079. Are these generally a good class of prisoners who are employed for that superintendence?—There being no power on the part of the gaol authorities to enforce such a duty, they are compelled to select such prisoners as volunteer for the office.

5080. Do you generally find they are the worst class of prisoners who are willing to undertake that very disgusting and disagreeable duty?—They are undoubtedly a very low class of prisoners.

5081. Have you observed whether cleanliness is properly attended to in the cases of the lunatic prisoners?—I should say that it generally was, but I have known instances in which a considerable number of lunatics have been confined in gaols where there were defects: there was not a due supply of bedding.

5082. Would you be enabled to direct a sufficient supply of clothing and other articles for the lunatics in the gaols?—We have no special authority for directing such a supply with regard to lunatics; we feel that we are bound to be satisfied if an adequate supply is provided for the aggregate of the prisoners collected there. The gaol authorities are constantly in the habit of complaining that they are put to great extra expense by these lunatics.

5083. Have you met with any cases of suicide on the part of lunatics in gaols?—There was but one case came under my official cognizance; that was in Cork.

DETENTION OF LUNATICS IN RICHMOND BRIDEWELL.

Dominick Marquess, Esq., sworn and examined.

5084. Are you the Governor of the Richmond Bridewell?—Yes.

5085. I believe that is a prison in the city of Dublin for male prisoners?—Yes.

5086. How long have you held that office?—Eight years.

5087. How long previously were you connected with the prison?—I was appointed, in 1839, Governor of the Richmond Female Penitentiary.

5088. During your connexion with the two prisons you have had considerable experience as to the operation of the law under which lunatics are detained in prisons?—Yes.

5089. You have also had criminal lunatics under your charge?—Very few cases.

5090. Are the criminal lunatics, therefore, speedily removed from the prisons?—Those that I have had in my custody have been speedily removed. There have not been more than two in my recollection. They were removed in a very short time after an application was made for their removal.

5091. As regards the dangerous lunatics committed by the magistrates, are they numerous?—Not so numerous now as they were. This last year they have increased a little as compared with the previous year.

5092. Are they speedily removed from your custody?—Not now; till lately they were removed very quickly indeed, but for the last two or three months they remain in my custody for a considerable time.

5093. Do you take any immediate steps to notify to the asylum authorities that you have such prisoners in your custody?—The day after the reception of a lunatic, and his examination by the medical officer, I transmit a notice of the committal of that lunatic to the Lunatic Office.

5094. Do you make any communication to the Governor of the Richmond Asylum, in the district connected with which Dublin is included?—Not till I get a warrant from the Lord Lieutenant for the transmission of the patient; then I communicate to the Manager that I have an order for the removal of the patient to the asylum.

5095. Then no step is taken to make it known to the authorities of the District Asylum that there are lunatic prisoners in your custody, except what may be made by the Inspectors of Lunatics in consequence of your representation?—The only representation I ever made before receiving the warrant was to the Lunatic Office.

5096. Is that mode of proceeding—sending a notification to the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums—of recent origin?—It has existed since I became Governor of the Richmond Bridewell.

5097. What interval generally elapses between the notification to the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums of your having received a dangerous lunatic, and the receipt of the order for his removal to the District Asylum?—Well, I have, in some instances, received orders in a week after; in many cases, not for a month; and in some cases I have had lunatics four months before an order was received for their removal. I cannot exactly say now the greatest length of time I had a lunatic without his being removed. I think I may state I had some for the space of four months without receiving a warrant for their removal. Some cases that are not very urgent we keep back till after others that are of a more urgent character are disposed of.

5098. Do I understand that you prefer sending a case which has recently come into your custody, which is violent or troublesome, to removing one that has been some months in your custody, but is quiet?—Surely. I have a case at present in the prison that I was obliged to bring under the notice of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums—a man who gave some information to the authorities in a case of murder. I communicated to the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums that it was very essential the man should be removed to some place where he could recover as soon as possible. We removed him to a single ward, where he would be away from the other lunatics, and he improved; but he has not been removed yet.

5099. Is he in your custody as a dangerous lunatic?—He is.

5100. For how long?—He is now, I think, over six weeks.

The interval between the reception of the lunatic in the prison and the warrant for his removal to the asylum.

Recent cases sometimes removed in preference to others.

5101. In speaking of the order for the removal of lunatics which you receive from the office of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums, you meant, of course, the warrant of the Lord Lieutenant?—Yes.

5103. Have you any case now waiting for removal, although you have obtained the warrant?—Yes, I have one, since the 27th November; it is that of a man named Francis Mahony. Is another case (that of John Toole), having received the warrant of the Lord Lieutenant, I communicated with the manager of the Richmond Asylum, and he stated that he had no vacancy. Subsequently I sent the patient to the asylum, and he still refused to receive him. He has since been received on the 30th December; the warrant bore date 21st November.

5104. Do you find that, on the occasion when you receive the warrant, a vacancy does exist in the asylum?—I very frequently find that there is not a vacancy.

5105. Then it would appear warrants are issued for the removal of lunatics, although there may not be vacancies in the asylum?—It would appear so.

5106. Do you send the patient to the asylum when you receive the warrant, or do you send notice to the manager to be prepared for him?—I first write to the manager to know whether he is prepared to receive the patient, and he sends me an answer.

5107. Have you made any communication to the Government, or to the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums, with reference to the non-removal of the case to which you have first referred?—I have.

5108. What is the result?—None, as yet.

5109. Is there any distinct portion of the Richmond Prison allocated to the reception of lunatics?—None, except one ward of the hospital. That is the only place, since I became Governor of the Bridewell, allocated to the reception of lunatics.

5110. Are any other patients who may be suffering from disease placed in wards along with them?—No.

5111. The lunatics in your custody are confined there, whether they be suffering from bodily ailments or not?—Yes, some quiet cases we remove to the upper ward, and mix with the patients who are under treatment.

5112. Are they under the charge of paid servants, or in the charge of other prisoners?—They are under the charge of an officer who resides in the hospital. He takes care of the lunatics, as they are prisoners.

5113. I understand the persons who are in constant attendance on the lunatics are prisoners?—Yes.

5114. Do you find any objection on the part of the prisoners to undertake that duty?—None. Some of them selected for that purpose go up to the hospital, for they gain an advantage by being there. They get a little tea, beef, and bread—they get the same diet that the lunatic is allowed.

5115. Do you make it a point to select any particular class of prisoners for that duty?—Certainly; I am obliged to do so, and I am obliged generally to select from the worst. It is not every one upon whom I can rely, or who would be willing to undertake the duty.

5116. Then, in point of fact, the prisoners in charge of the lunatics are far from being a good class of prisoners?—They are generally re-committed cases. Not a very bad class. I would not select very bad men for the purpose.

5117. Do the lunatics confined in prison sleep in separate cells?—No; they all sleep in the same dormitory. Each dormitory contains ten beds.

5118. Do the cases violent as well as quiet sleep in that room?—All together, with very few exceptions, except bad cases, that I have found it necessary to remove to an upper ward—some very violent cases, that would disturb the rest of the patients, and if we find wards up stairs empty, we remove such cases to them.

5119. What number of attendants sleep in that dormitory?—That depends upon the number of cases. I have had as many as six sleeping in the same ward, in order that two could take watch every two hours at night, relieving the others. We are obliged to do so when we have cases under restraint.

5120. What restraint do you refer to?—Strait waistcoats and tying to the beds.

5121. Is that usual in the case of violent patients?—Not very usual.

5122. Have the prisoners who are attending upon the patients charge of those instruments of restraint?—No; it is a guard has charge of them, and generally always the guard pairs them on.

5123. Supposing a lunatic gets violent in the night, and that the persons sitting up in the ward find it necessary to apply restraint, have they means of doing so?—No; they must call the guard. They would not be allowed themselves.

5124. Have they not got possession of the means of doing so?—They have not.

5125. Are leg-straps used?—In some cases they are. A patient named Robinson, to whom I have referred as the man that gave information in a case of murder, has a pair of them on. He has become very violent within those few days.

5126. Do you mean that he has a pair on constantly?—No; he was as quiet as possible the day before yesterday, and he suddenly became very violent.

5127. When you speak of patients being tied to beds, do you mean that the legs are attached by straps to the bed-post, or that the whole body is tied down?—I mean that they are strapped across the waist from side to side, to prevent them from getting up.

- Delusion of Lunatics in Richmond Workhouse. 5129. It appears that you had eight lunatic prisoners in your custody on the 1st January?—Yes.
- R. Macqueen, Esq. 5130. How many of those prisoners are under restraint?—I think only one—the man Mahony.
5131. Was not Roldison also in prison at that time?—He was; but he was quiet.
- Effect of detention in gaol. 5132. Do you find generally that prisoners are rendered more violent by detention in gaol?—I do not know that they are. I think it is a great detriment to many cases that they should remain in gaol, where they are obliged to be all together.
- General arrangements with respect to lunatics. 5133. Does the medical attendant of the gaol visit daily the ward where the lunatics are?—Yes; there is one medical officer visits every day, except Sundays, and sees all the patients.
5134. What airing ground or court for exercise is attached to the ward?—One only, is which all the prisoners in the hospital resort.
5135. Who is in attendance on the prisoners and lunatics in that ward?—I have always two prisoners watching those persons, under the supervision of one of the officers. There are two guards in the hospital—one is up stairs, and the other generally below stairs. His business is to exercise a general supervision over those persons. There are two prisoners in the yard to look after the lunatics, in order that they should not do any violence to any other person.
- Assaults by lunatics. 5136. Have you had any case of violence to other prisoners on the part of lunatics?—Well, I have had some attempted assaults upon prisoners.
5137. Have you had any cases of suicide on the part of lunatics, or attempted suicide?—None that I can recollect.
- No employment. 5138. Is there any employment provided for the lunatics?—None at all. I would be afraid to trust any of them with tools. One of them, a carpenter, wished to get employment at his trade; but I would be afraid to trust him with tools.
5139. How do they occupy themselves during the day?—Walking about in the ward or in the yard.
- Presence of lunatics interfere with the gaol discipline. 5140. Do you find that the presence of lunatics in the gaol interferes with the general discipline?—Certainly, to a very considerable extent, it is was only from our being obliged to select prisoners to place over the lunatics to take care of them, and I have to bring those prisoners from all parts of the prison, where they ought to be detained for punishment. Lunatics are a great detriment to the discipline of a prison, especially from their being obliged to be near the hospital, where patients are often confined from fever, and are liable to be annoyed a great deal by the noise at night.
5141. Have the Board objected to provide paid attendants for the lunatics?—I do not know that any application was ever made to the Board of Superintendence to provide paid servants to attend upon them. I do not think there ever was.
5142. Would the objection you have mentioned to their being in contiguity to the hospital be removed by appropriating another portion of the building for the reception of lunatics?—Yes; but you would have to increase the number of officers.
- Dietary. 5143. Are the lunatics generally on extra diet?—They are; they get more than ordinary prisoners. They get meat five times a week—half a pound of beef, made into soup.
- Persons committed as dangerous lunatics who were not such. 5144. Have you had many cases of persons committed to your custody as dangerous lunatics, who, on admission to the gaol, were considered by the medical officer not to be lunatics?—I have known several cases that turned out to be merely suffering temporarily from delirium tremens.
5145. Have the medical attendants of the prison ever objected to the cases sent to them as not properly lunatic cases?—There are instances in which they refused to sign the certificate for transmission, and the parties turned out in a very few days to be persons who ought not to have been sent in as lunatics to the gaol, and they have been discharged by means of an application to a magistrate.
5146. What is the course of proceeding in the case of an untried prisoner in a gaol becoming insane—to whom is the case submitted?—To the Lord Lieutenant, for the purpose of removal.
5147. Is that a removal to the Dundrum Asylum or to the District Asylum?—To the District Asylum.
- Relapsed cases. 5148. Have you had any cases of dangerous lunatics, who, after being transmitted from your gaol to the asylum, and subsequently discharged, have come again into your custody as dangerous lunatics?—Yes; several.
5149. Do you know whether in those cases a second committal followed very soon upon the discharge from the asylum?—I have never taken any particular notice of that. There was one person who got a relapse immediately after the return from the asylum. He was a man addicted to drink. I have known him to be there on one occasion over twelve months.

DUBLIN, 27TH JANUARY, 1857.

DETENTION OF LUNATICS IN GAOLS.

Detention of Lunatics in Gaols.

Felton Frederick William Hervey, Esq., sworn and examined.

F.F.W. Hervey, Esq.

5150. What appointment do you hold?—Inspector-General of Prisons.

5151. How long have you held that appointment?—Since the 31st of January, 1855.

5152. Have you, in the course of your inspection, found many lunatics confined in gaols?—I found a good many in some gaols—especially in those of Wexford, Donogal (at Lifford), Downpatrick, Kilmainham (for the county of Dublin), and in Grangegorman Prison and Richmond Bridewell (for the city of Dublin).

5153. Are any particular portions of those prisons allotted to the reception of lunatics, or are they associated with other prisoners?—In all those prisons they are put in separate wards, except in Kilmainham, where they are in the hospital.

5154. Those wards are not constructed particularly for the reception of lunatics?—No; they are merely portions of the criminal prison.

5155. In the case of Kilmainham, to which you have referred, are the insane prisoners confined in the hospital, and a portion also in wards?—The lunatics and the sick are in the hospital, both male and female.

5156. Is that the only department of the prison to which, in case of epidemic, the sick would be removed?—It is the only place available for the purpose. I stated, in my Report on Kilmainham Gaol, which I visited on the 28th and 29th November, 1856, that "I found the hospitals occupied by two male and thirteen female lunatics: of the latter, one had not been committed as a dangerous lunatic, but was considered by the surgeon to be insane. Happily there were no sick in the prison, for the female hospital, which consists of only one room, with one cell lately made to open out of it, was already overcrowded with this deplorable number of lunatics; and yet so wretched is the accommodation of the female prison, that there is no other ward to which they could be transferred, so that in the event of the prevalence of an epidemic in the gaol the consequences might be truly frightful. Moreover, the staff of female officers is wholly insufficient for the additional and arduous duty imposed by the presence of so large a number of insane women, for whose custody the gaol authorities were never expected to provide; and it is of the utmost importance that some immediate steps should be taken to remove to an asylum these unfortunate creatures, since any day may produce irretrievable evils. I was informed that the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the lunatic asylums had found two of the beds occupied by lunatics in a wet and dirty condition. On inquiring into this matter, I learnt that several of the beds thus occupied were found every morning in a similar state, and that it had always been the practice to expose them in the yards to dry; but that the morning of the day on which the Commissioners visited the prison had been so rainy that this could not be done. All the beds were, on the days of my inspection, perfectly clean and dry; and it appeared that latterly fresh bedding had been supplied every morning in the cases referred to—another instance of the extraordinary trouble and expense to which gaols are subjected by the presence of a class of occupants for which they were never designed, and for whose care or even safe custody they are wholly unfitted." The only death in Kilmainham during 1856 was a lunatic female; and on the 24th January, 1857, another female lunatic died.

5157. You were not informed by the officer of the prison that on the occasion of the Commissioners' visit it was the straw of the bed that was in the most filthy condition; and that the bed had been actually made up as if intended for use that evening, without any further cleansing?—I was not.

5158. I believe the person in charge of that lunatic department is very aged?—Very old and feeble.

5159. Do you understand, from the explanation you have received, that the beds are never dried upon rainy days?—I should imagine, from what they told me, they could not be dried; and if fresh ones were not supplied they must use the wet beds.

5160. How many beds can the hospital for female prisoners in Kilmainham Gaol contain?—It contains at this moment seven beds, but they are put close together.

5161. When you state that the gaol authorities could not be expected to have provided for these lunatics, do you mean that in the construction of the gaols, as originally planned before the Lunatic Asylums Act came into force, no provision was made of any particular wards for those classes?—I mean that in no plan of any gaol has a lunatic ward ever been set down as part of the establishment.

5162. In the case you have referred to, Kilmainham Gaol, what opportunities have the lunatic inmates of taking exercise?—Very little; there is only a very small confined yard, to which they are said to be occasionally taken down.

5163. What is your opinion as to the probable effect of the detention in a prison on the condition of a lunatic as regards curability?—So far as I have seen of them in Kilmainham Cells allotted to the lunatics in prisons, except in Kilmainham prison; arrangements there for lunatics.

Injurious effect upon lunatics of detention in gaols.

DETAIN.

Detention of lunatics in Gaol.
F.F.W. Harvey, Esq.

Gaol, they appear to me to become exceedingly depressed, I should imagine, from want of ventilation, and air, and exercise, and from their long confinement in this close room. I may state, that on Sunday last, while I was there, I found two ward women employed to look after them. I inquired how long they had been there, and learned that one had been employed five days, and the other seven. I then asked why the former persons were changed, and I was informed that they declined to continue longer. There was no means of compelling them, and they had to be sent back to the other parts of the prison. The new women were not selected because of any particular fitness, but because they were the only two who would accept the office.

5164. Have you any means of knowing how long lunatics may have remained in Kilmainham Gaol without being removed to an asylum?—The lunatic now longest in the gaol is there since the 12th of March, 1855.

5165. Has that prolonged detention of a lunatic in Kilmainham Gaol arisen from want of accommodation in the lunatic asylum?—Certainly, there were numerous applications for all of them, and some have been taken to the asylum on the Lord Lieutenant's warrant, and refused admission on the ground of want of room. One lunatic was sent three times. It appeared, so far as I could ascertain, that the Inspectors were in the habit of sending warrants to two or three places whenever a vacancy occurred, and whoever first brought a lunatic to the asylum got the vacancy.

5166. Is there any technical difficulty in the way of receiving back into a prison a lunatic thus removed by warrant of the Lord Lieutenant, but who is refused admission at the asylum?—No, because the prison officer does not give up the custody till the manager of the lunatic asylum receives the patient.

5167. Have you known any other cases in which lunatics have been detained for a long period in gaols?—I have known several in Wexford, and in Gungahogan Prison, and in Donegal Prison at Lifford. In the latter Samuel Callin was committed as a dangerous lunatic on the 16th May, 1846; and Patrick Conaghan was committed on the 3d November, 1854. These lunatics are still in Lifford Gaol. In Wexford, Martin Walsh was committed on the 18th July, 1845, and died the 13th September, 1856, in the gaol.

5168. Have you been enabled to obtain any explanation of the cause of this long detention?—I mentioned the case of Samuel Callin, in Donegal, to Dr. Nugent, and was informed by him that the papers were all correct, for I was under the impression they were not so. Sometimes there is a mistake in the original committal, and the matter remains so for years. He mentioned that the case was one of chronic lunacy, and incurable; and therefore others had been taken to the asylum who were more likely to be cured, and this man had been left in the gaol.

5169. Have you known any other cases of long detention that you would like to mention?—I do not know of any case of longer detention than I have stated.

5170. You have referred to some mistake in the original committal: does the governor of a prison receive a lunatic into gaol without having the committal in due form?—What I mean by a mistake originally is this, and it is a case that occurs frequently in Dublin: if an offender is brought up charged with being a dangerous lunatic, and that the doctor is not on the spot to give the certificate, the magistrate cannot commit the man as a dangerous lunatic, and he commits him for an ordinary assault, and notifies to the governor of the gaol that he would have committed the party as a lunatic if the doctor was present. Afterwards the medical officer of the prison certifies that he is a lunatic, but the original committal does not bear upon the face of it that it is a case of dangerous lunacy, and the party remains, under those circumstances, in the gaol.

5171. What is the course of proceeding in a case where the doctor, subsequent to the prisoner's committal, certifies that he is a dangerous lunatic; is a fresh committal required under the Dangerous Lunatic Act?—No.

5172. Under what authority would a prisoner be detained in a gaol after the expiration of the term of the imprisonment ordered for the assault?—I apprehend he is committed not to suffer imprisonment for the assault, but to take his trial for it. He could be discharged by a judge or an assistant barrister.

5173. Supposing a prisoner to be committed to take his trial for an assault, as you state, I believe the usual course is to impanel a jury to try his sanity when he is called upon to plead?—Exactly.

5174. If found insane under those circumstances, that prisoner would become a criminal lunatic in the eyes of the law?—If the jury impanelled to try his sanity stated that he was insane, he would become a criminal lunatic.

5175. But, in the case to which you have referred, if the magistrate had the assistance of a medical man to give a certificate of insanity when the case was before him, that prisoner would only have been committed as a dangerous lunatic, and eventually be sent to the district asylum?—Yes.

5176. Are lunatics ever committed to bridewells?—They are never actually committed to bridewells, but they are often detained in them till an opportunity for their removal offers.

5177. Do the arrangements for their accommodation in bridewells at all differ from those in the county prisons?—Except that they are infinitely worse. However, I conceive it would be always necessary to be enabled to send them, in the first instance, to a place of safety, such as a bridewell; and the law, as it at present exists, very often necessitates their detention there—sometimes for days, and sometimes for weeks—until a second magistrate signs the committal.

Prolonged detention of lunatics in some gaols; the causes.

Mistakes in the original committal of lunatics; the effect of such.

Detention of lunatics in bridewells.

5178. Do you know whether, practically, that second magistrate, in signing the committal, re-investigates the case?—I know of many cases where the second magistrate has not even seen the lunatic.

5179. I presume, from what you have stated, that you consider the presence of lunatics in a gaol interferes very much with its discipline?—Very much, indeed.

5180. Have many complaints been made to Boards of Superintendence on that head?—Several, particularly of late. There have been complaints at Lifford.

5181. Do you think the detention of lunatics in gaols arises principally from the asylums being full?—Certainly.

5182. Is there any amendment of the Dangerous Lunatic Act that you would suggest?—I would suggest, in the first place, that the signature of one magistrate to the committal should suffice.

5183. Do you mean one magistrate acting at petty sessions?—I mean that one magistrate's committal should be sufficient to authorise the transmission of a dangerous lunatic to an asylum where some further examination might take place; for, under the law, as it at present exists, an unfortunate lunatic is very often detained in a hoidenell for several days till the second signature can be obtained. Again, I would suggest that it should not be always imagined a gaol is to be elastic to any extent, and that an asylum can contain only a certain number.

5184. Would you give the asylum authorities the option of refusing a case if it was not considered a proper one for admission?—Yes.

5185. Would there not be some difficulty in enlarging that person under those circumstances, he having been sworn to be a dangerous lunatic, and about to commit a crime?—There probably would; but it appears to me there might be what we call a prisoner's reception ward constructed in lunatic asylums, where such cases might be kept for a short period. I conceive it would not be so detrimental to a lunatic to be confined even in the worst lunatic asylum as in the best gaol, not so much from the want of accommodation as from the total absence of any resident officers knowing any thing about such cases.

5186. I presume, in the case to which you have referred, it should still be open to any justice of the peace to require security from such a person for keeping the peace?—Yes. I imagine if the lunatic asylum authorities refused to admit the person in custody as a lunatic, it would be then open to a magistrate to commit him as an ordinary criminal. I mean by a reception ward, any place where such persons could be placed until the arrival of the medical officer. Another reason why I think a gaol a bad place for lunatics is, that they are always brought into gaols in a state of great violence and excitement. They are often brought tied on a cart with ropes, by the police, and at that time they are easily acted upon either for good or for bad; and there is no one at a gaol who knows how to treat them, and they are placed in charge of ward-men and ward-women who have more to do than they can well accomplish; and, under such circumstances, it is considered that the disease is very often made permanent.

5187. When a lunatic prisoner is committed to gaol, are any measures taken with a view to the cure of his lunacy, or is he merely treated for any bodily ailment he may have?—The lunatic is treated rather with regard to his bodily than his mental ailments.

5188. That arises, I suppose, from the case being considered in traverse?—Yes; it is always considered by medical officers and the other officers of the gaol that they are only to keep the party in health and in safe custody till the time for removal comes.

5189. Are mechanical restraints used in gaols?—I generally see in gaols one or two means of restraint, such as strait waistcoats.

5190. In whose custody are those things?—Generally in the custody of the hospital nurse.

5191. Is that nurse enabled to make use of these mechanical restraints at her own discretion?—I know of no control over her with respect to them.

5192. In cases where prisoners, not previously lunatics, become insane, what steps are taken for communicating with the asylum authorities?—I am not aware of any case of the kind.

5193. Is there any distinction in the gaols generally in the dietary of the lunatics and the other prisoners?—None; nor is there any authority in any person to alter it, except the medical officer.

5194. Are the attendants upon the lunatics generally prisoners?—There are always one or two prisoners sent to that duty. There are generally not a sufficient number of officers in a gaol to permit of more than one at most being allowed to that class.

5195. The attendance on lunatics being generally a disgusting duty, particularly if their habits are dirty, do you consider that persons who have been convicted of crime, or may have been charged with crime, are suitable or proper attendants for them?—I believe not at all. There is a general antipathy, I conceive, amongst the lower orders in Ireland to have any thing to do with them, and it is only persons of the worst class in the gaol that will undertake the office. You must look to the physical ability also of the persons you select as attendants. In the case I have referred to at Kilmaleham, the two women now in charge of the lunatics are the worst in the prison; one of them has been committed fifteen times.

5196. Supposing the number of lunatics in a gaol were only two or three, I presume a separate ward could not on all occasions be appropriated to them?—They are very often put with untried prisoners. In my Report as to the gaol of the county of the town of Drogheda, which I visited on the 18th November, 1856, I state: "The accommodation for the sick of both sexes consists of only one room, which was, at the time of my visit, occupied by lunatic females. This hospital room, as are also the female solitaires, is situated within the male prison, and is, therefore, quite unfit for occupation by females."

5197. The certificate of a second medical man is requisite before the lunatic can be removed to an asylum?—It must be procured before the Lunatic Inspectors can be apprised of the fitness of the lunatic to be removed.

5198. Have you known of any delay in the removal of a lunatic in consequence of the signature of the second physician not being obtained?—I could not say that I have known any delay in the removal, but in apprising the Inspectors of the fitness of the person to be removed.

5199. How is the second certificate obtained in cases where there is no second medical officer attached to the prison?—A second medical officer is called in, and paid a fee. There is a second medical officer in all the city of Dublin prisons.

5200. Do you understand that the lower classes get their friends committed as dangerous lunatics to avoid having them admitted in the ordinary way, and so escape the responsibility of removing them?—Undoubtedly. In the first place, they save the doctor's fee, and the police convey the lunatic to the county goal, instead of the relatives or friends having to take him themselves to the asylum. I have endeavoured to convey to you, as clearly as I could, my sense of the detriment it is to lunatics to confine them in goal, as also the injury done to the discipline of those establishments.

5201. Have you known of many cases where persons have been committed more than once as dangerous lunatics?—I have known several cases as stated in the return, which I hand in, from the Graungeogorman Penitentiary. [Same is delivered in.]

5202. This return from the Graungeogorman Prison does not state whether the prisoners were ever transferred to an asylum after their previous commitment?—Some of them were. If the return does not state that, it is incomplete. I know that some of them were pointed out to me as having been at the Richmond Lunatic Asylum.

DETENTION OF LUNATICS IN CONVICT PRISONS.Captain Walker Crofton sworn and examined.*

5203. What official appointment do you hold?—I am Chairman of the Directors of the Convict Prisons.

5204. Have you long held that appointment?—Since the Board was constituted.

5205. How many prisons are under your direction?—The whole of the Convict prisons.

5206. Does it frequently happen that lunatics are inmates of these prisons?—It does happen frequently.

5208. Have you known much delay to occur in the removal of convict lunatics?—Yes; considerable delay. We have now five confirmed lunatics at the Philistown Prison, who cannot be removed to Dandrum, from want of room; and in addition to that, I wish to call the attention of the Commissioners to the fact that there is a class of prisoners confined in the convict establishments who, though they do not come under the designation of confirmed lunatics, yet are certified by the medical officers to be irresponsible for their actions, and they are day by day qualifying themselves for a more stringent certificate. If they had medical treatment in the early stages of the disease its progress might be arrested; but those that are reported irresponsible, generally end in getting a more stringent certificate, stating that they are confirmed lunatics. We have ten men and six women so circumstanced at the present moment.

5209. Persons actually of unsound mind?—Yes; they are irresponsible, so that we cannot punish them for any act deserving punishment they may commit.

5210. Are they persons more or less of a refractory character?—Yes; we have only two that are so.

5211. I believe the prisoners to whom you have just referred would not be admissible by law to the District Lunatic Asylum?—No, in consequence of the absence of the required certificate.

5212. Is there any provision for the proper treatment of those cases in the prisons to which you have referred?—There is no proper provision for them. As far as possible a proper watch is kept over them, so that no abuse can happen; at the same time there is no means of arresting the progress of the disease, in any way, with which they are afflicted.

5213. Is there no opportunity of carrying out any curative treatment?—There is not.

5214. I believe the Mountjoy Prison is on the separate system?—Yes.

5215. In returns furnished from your department, in November last, it appeared two idiots were in that prison; can you afford the Commissioners any explanation as to that?—Two idiots might have come from the county prisons to Mountjoy Prison, and of course were removed directly, upon their being certified as idiots. There are now two idiots at the invalid depot; they would not be retained in the Mountjoy Prison as idiots.

5216. Are any returns furnished to your office of the convicts eligible for removal to the Mountjoy Prison?—There is no return as to eligibility; we send the numbers, and nearly every case is removed, as a matter of course, from the county prisons. They are taken as a matter of course, and not because of any peculiar eligibility.

5217. With respect to the idiots who were in the Mountjoy Prison, and who, I presume, were removed there from county gaols, is there any means of ascertaining whether any officers in those county gaols were responsible for sending them up without notice?—I may not be quite accurate in saying they were sent; but if they were, it is quite certain a report would accompany them from the medical officer of the county gaol, informing us of the fact. It is possible those cases may have come from one of our own depots; if so, it was merely for examination by the medical officer, and to be returned again.

5218. In the cases to which you have referred of convicts who are irresponsible, and to whom the stringent certificate you have spoken of would be ultimately given, and which is required by law to be given, to warrant their removal, have you any reason to suppose mental deficiency is caused at all by the system to which they have been subjected in the prisons?—Not at all.

5219. I gather from a former answer you have given that you consider the Central Criminal Asylum is not adequate for the wants of such a class of cases as would be received there?—It is not adequate.

5220. With respect to the cases to which you have referred of irresponsible prisoners who cannot be removed to an asylum for the reasons stated, are any steps taken to remove them from a prison where the separate system is carried out?—Isolated steps.

5221. Do you find much inconvenience to arise to the discipline of the prisons from the presence of lunatics?—Very great.

5222. I believe in the Government prisons the prisoners are always in the care of paid officers?—Always.

5223. Are any mechanical restraints used with regard to lunatics in Government prisons?—Scarcely waistcoats.

5224. In whose custody are they kept?—The medical officer's.

5225. Can they be used at the discretion of the attendants?—They can never be placed upon the prisoners without a certificate from the medical officer that it is necessary.

5226. Is there any thing you would wish to suggest with reference to the subject of our inquiry?—I have no further suggestion to make than with regard to the removal of irresponsible persons, to call the urgent attention of the Commissioners to the necessity which exists for their removal to some place where they would be properly treated for their disease.

PROPOSED INSTITUTION FOR POOR LUNATICS OF THE MIDDLE CLASS.

Thomas Fitzpatrick, Esq., M.D., sworn and examined.

*Proposed Institution for Poor Lunatics of

5227. Have you given much of your attention to the condition of the lunatic poor of Ireland?—Yes, for the last two years.

5228. You have addressed a letter to the Commissioners with reference to a proposed institution for the reception of the lunatic poor?—Yes.

5229. Can you state what progress that scheme has made?—We have only taken the house and ground; we have not got possession at present.

5230. Detail the nature of the proposed institution?—The object of the institution is to provide for lunatics belonging to the middle class of society—the professional and mercantile educated class, having only small means, or, to use the words of Dr. Connolly, "Who, belonging to the educated portion of the middle classes, and depending on the continued exercise of their talent and industry, fall at once, when affected with even temporary mental disorder, from comfort to ruin, and whose families are hopelessly dragged down with them to poverty and want. The rich, if insanity falls upon them, are surrounded with all the care that wealth can command or sympathy suggest; the poor can apply to the parish and be received into a county asylum, but the class between the rich and the poor suffer without resources, and often long unknown, till the prolonged pains and griefs of concealed poverty beset and torture them; and no relief presents itself until they have wholly fallen into the ranks of paupers."

Object and place of the proposed institution.

5231. Is the institution to be at all of a charitable character?—The payment of each patient will be merely sufficient for his support.

5232. It will not, therefore, be at all an institution maintained for profit?—No.

5233. Is it your opinion that there is any considerable portion of the lunatic population of the country who would be very deserving objects of such a charity?—I think a very great number, more than is generally known, probably between 500 and 600.

5234. Is the institution to be founded upon the plan of any other asylum?—We take in some respect the model of Charenton, the great institution near Paris. The patients there, with very few exceptions, pay. There are three classes; the first pay about £51 a-year (about 1,425 francs); the second pay £45 a-year (about 1,125 francs); and the third class pay £33 a-year (about 825 francs). Then there are some more beds in the institution—about fourteen—that are for the poor of the district; and there are a few beds also at the disposal of the Minister of the Interior, for small payments. It is, in some respects, upon the model of that we intend to form our institution, with the exception that it is not proposed to have either a first or second class; we shall confine ourselves to the third. I beg to say, that at Charenton the first class patients, when they are clean or con-

- valuable, all dine with some of the principal functionaries of the establishment; but I observed that, with regard to the refractory patients of the three classes, they dined in the same refectory. The patients dine according to the nature of their malady, and not according to their payments. I am of opinion that such a plan in Ireland would be productive of a great deal of irritation on the part of patients. A difference of diet observable in the one room would be objectionable here; but in France they find no difficulty to arise from it.
- No free patients. 5235. Is it intended to have any free patients?—No.
- Provision of funds. 5236. From what source are the funds for the establishment of the institution to be derived?—A lady left a sum of money to two relatives of mine and myself, to be disposed of as we think proper in support of any public institution; and we intend to establish this.
5237. What is proposed as to the governing body of the institution?—We propose to associate with ourselves seven or nine gentlemen of position as the governing body of the institution.
- Government of the institution; admission, &c. 5238. I presume the right of admission will rest with these Governors?—Yes.
5239. Are the funds available sufficient for the erection of a very extensive hospital?—We shall commence with about twenty patients.
5240. Do you intend to invite charitable contributions towards the promotion of so good an object?—Yes; we calculate on that, and we shall be able to work it at a much cheaper rate than other asylums in this country, for we intend to employ Sisters of Charity in the institution. The expense of each of these will be little more than £20 a-year.
- Not sectarian. 5241. Is it intended the institution shall be confined to any one religious persuasion?—No.
5242. Is it intended to be an institution for both sexes?—In the first instance only for females, but we calculate on having a male branch in operation at a future day.
- Its present working staff and arrangements. 5243. What working staff will you have?—We shall commence with six Sisters for about twenty patients.
5244. What number of medical attendants?—That is not decided upon yet.
5245. Do you contemplate having the responsibility of treatment to rest entirely with one medical man, or do you propose to associate with him a consulting physician?—I should think there will be a consulting physician and an attending physician.
5246. Is it contemplated there will be a resident manager on the spot, who will be a medical man?—In the first institution, which will be for females, we could not well have a resident medical man; but after the male department is added, and the building erected, we contemplate having a resident medical officer.
- Locality of asylum. 5247. Is the locality at all chosen in the vicinity of medical advice?—Yes; it is quite close to the city—at Richmond, Fairview.
- Rate of charge. 5248. The class of patients to be admitted, I gather from your previous answer, will be a class paying about £30 per annum?—About £25: we have not yet determined on the amount. I calculate the average expense of each patient of the first fifty patients will be about £40 per year. The average expenditure at Charenton is over that; if you allow each of the three classes to be equal in number, the average will be about £45 a-year.
5249. Has it been contemplated to allow the right of recommendation for admission to persons subscribing a considerable sum, as is done in some hospitals under the Sisters of Mercy?—No.
- Inquiries to prevent improper admissions. 5250. What arrangement do you contemplate with a view of securing that persons whose means would enable them to pay a considerable sum beyond what you propose to charge shall not avail themselves of this cheap or charitable institution?—The proposed plan is—first, to ascertain the number and ages and occupation of the members of the family; secondly, to have authentic information as to the total income of the family. We then propose that the Governors will come to an accurate conclusion as to whom they suppose to be a fit object for admission to the institution.
5251. Is it your opinion you will be enabled, with the sum which you have named, to provide accommodation and care for lunatics superior to what is given in any asylum in this country now for the same rate?—I should say, with the exception of Swift's, certainly better than in any public asylum. We contemplate having patients treated in the same way they lived when at home.
- Security for payment. 5252. Have you considered what security should be required to enable you to recover annually the sum which the friends of the patients may condition to pay?—We will adopt the same plan they do at Charenton—the person who brings the patient gives an undertaking, in writing, to pay.
- Want of such an establishment. 5253. Has the idea of establishing this institution arisen from the conviction in your mind that a very great want existed for such an establishment?—Yes. It originated, I may say, from the Rev. Dr. Taylor, who is my co-trustee, and who having been a Governor of the Carlow Lunatic Asylum, and now a Governor of the Maryborough Asylum, was well acquainted with the subject, and knew the want of such an institution.
5254. I believe there is no institution of a charitable nature in Ireland for the treatment of the insane, except Swift's and that at Bloomfield, for the Society of Friends?—No, those are the only ones I know of.
- State of the law with respect to licensing; inspection. 5255. Is there any thing further you would wish to communicate to us?—On inquiring at the office of the Inspectors-General of Asylums, and stating the scheme of the proposed institution, I was informed it was a matter of doubt whether it could be considered of a public or private nature, and that the question would be submitted to the law officers of the Crown. The letter I sent to this Commission was written in the hope that, in their report, the Commissioners would suggest some simpler mode of proceeding for establishments of this kind, so that we would be enabled to get a licence that would be permanent, and not be liable to be revoked, unless for a violation of the law, or on some good cause being shown by the inspectors for so doing.

5256. Are you aware the remarks of the inspectors probably had reference to the state of the law, which it has hitherto been thought would not require such institutions to be licensed?—It was a matter of doubt; and on looking at the Report of the inspectors, I find they classed Swift's and the Retreat at Bloomfield as private institutions. They are not obliged to take out licences annually.

5257. Then, in fact, as the law is practically administered at present, your institution would not be required to take out a licence?—I should suppose not.

5258. You are of course aware, that as the institution would contain more than two patients, it would be subject to the other provisions of the law?—Certainly.

5259. With regard to the custody of the lunatics?—Yes.

5260. On what ground do you think such an institution should be exempt from the regulation of the law with reference to licensing?—Because it takes away from the accumulation of funds intended for benevolent purposes. The object of such an institution is to increase or extend its benefits, in case there is any surplus arising from its receipts.

5261. Supposing the difficulty removed, to which you have referred, of a considerable pecuniary payment for the licence, do you see any reason why such an institution should be exempted from inspection?—Certainly not; I should say it ought to be inspected.

5262. Your objection, then, to the licence refers rather to the tax which that licence imposes than to any thing else?—And to the great inconvenience of attending the sessions annually, and being often subjected to great delay, which I learn from proprietors of private asylums is the case, that they have to wait at Kilmainham amongst publicans and other classes of people, and, besides, the tax is serious in its amount.

DUBLIN.

DUBLIN, 29th JANUARY, 1857.

*Present:—*Sir T. N. REMINGTON, Chairman; Dr. ANDREWS, Dr. CORRIGAN, and Mr. BARRY, Secretary.

*Richmond District
Asylum.*

RICHMOND DISTRICT ASYLUM.—in continuation.

M. Stanton, Esq.

Michael Stanton, Esq., Collector-General of Rates for the City of Dublin, sworn and examined.

5263. I believe you have been for some time a Governor of the Richmond District Lunatic Asylum?—I have.

5264. Have you been in the habit of attending constantly at the meetings of the Board?—I give a great deal of attendance, but I cannot say I have attended regularly; I believe I have attended as regularly as any other Governor.

5165. I believe the Richmond Lunatic Asylum is an asylum for the district comprising the county of Dublin, the city of Dublin, the county of Wicklow, the county of Louth, and the county of the town of Drogheda?—Yes.

5266. Do you find that the attendance of Governors at the Board generally affords a fair representation of those respective counties?—I cannot say it does. There are altogether twenty-one Governors, and the attending Governors, I believe, do not exceed four or five in number.

5267. Are the attending Governors usually from the city of Dublin or the immediate vicinity?—They are usually from Dublin.

5268. I believe the appointment of Governors rests entirely with the executive government?—It does.

5269. Is the attendance of Governors at each meeting tolerably large?—There are usually, I think, five; I have often seen seven, but not usually more than five.

5270. Do the Board of Governors meet more frequently than is required by the regulations, namely, once a month?—They meet once a fortnight, and I have known them to meet oftener when occasion required; if any emergency arose, they would appoint a day to meet out of the ordinary routine of attendance.

5271. Is there any committee appointed for the purpose of visiting the establishment?—No; there are two Inspectors who are members of the Board, and the general body of the Governors feel that the Inspectors have a peculiar responsibility attached to their position; they are at once Inspectors of Asylums, and members—recently constituted—of the Board of Governors; besides those gentlemen, there are medical officers, who are constant and, I think, very efficient attendants, and who, I must say, show a great deal of zeal for the well-being of the institution.

5272. The Inspectors to whom you refer are the executive officers under the Act of Parliament, for inspecting the lunatic asylums of Ireland?—Yes.

5273. They are not, therefore, charged with any particular duties, as regards the Richmond Asylum, more than any other?—No; but the Board would not hesitate to employ their good offices on any occasion that they require a special inquiry.

5274. Are you aware that the Privy Council regulations of 1843 contemplated a local board of three to be appointed, who were to hold their meetings once in every month, and who were to see that the orders of the General Board were duly executed, to inspect the asylum and its inmates, and to keep a watchful eye over it?—I have not heard any thing concerning it mentioned at the Board.

5275. Do you consider it possible for the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums, whose duty extends all over Ireland, to discharge such duties as are contemplated for the local board?—I do not, and I must say, I think the appointment of a local board would be a very useful arrangement.

5276. What is your opinion as to the propriety, or otherwise, of the official Inspectors being members of the governing body of an asylum?—I think from the experience, which is not very great, we have had at the Richmond Asylum, as to the working of that arrangement, that it was useful; and I believe it was originally suggested by the inefficient attendance. I think we have often found that the presence of those two gentlemen was useful in giving us a good Board; and I must say that they have discharged their duties as members of the Board, with great efficiency and zeal.

5277. What is your opinion as to the effect which the existence of those official persons upon a Board, has in encouraging the Board to discharge their duties?—Well, I dare say members would be less ready to attend if they were sure the Inspectors were present to go through the ordinary business.

5278. Has it not, therefore, a tendency to encourage the Governors to abandon the affairs of the institution?—I do not think the attendance of the attending Governors is smaller since the appointment of the Inspectors as members of the Board. Three or four gentlemen are usually present at the meetings.

5279. In cases that may require minute inspection, such as cases of embezzlement, if such occurred, would the inquiry be conducted by the Board, or a Committee of the Board, or be left to the Inspectors?—Every important inquiry, I must say, is always conducted by the full Board; and they certainly do not manifest any disposition to save themselves trouble or time; very few of the meetings occupy a shorter period of time than about two hours, from one to three or half-past three o'clock; that is the usual time for the attendance of the Board; they attend as long as the business may require, and matters for investigation have been frequently gone into in great detail, I think with as much efficiency as possible.

tors being Governors.

5280. It appears from a minute of the Board that came under the notice of the Commissioners, that there has been a practice of referring matters that required investigation to the Inspectors to report upon?—There have been, occasionally, instances of the kind, but it was from a notion that the Inspectors would have a better opportunity of inquiring than the general Board; the feeling is that the Inspectors are constantly there, and that the fact of their being Inspectors gives them a peculiar interest in the well-being of the institution; and from the duties of members of the Board being superadded to their other duties, it is, I believe, the general opinion that they are the more fitted to inquire into matters such as you refer to; it is this consideration that influences the members of the Board generally in wishing matters that they would be themselves competent to investigate to fall under the cognizance of the Inspectors, for they, in addition, have the power of administering an oath, so that the investigation would be more solemn on that account; but the occasions on which matters were referred to the Inspectors are not very numerous, and they have been certainly not of a very important character; the Board itself, in any thing really of importance, or that was felt to be such, would give it their exclusive attention.

5281. I believe the position of Inspectors at the Boards of asylums differs from that of Poor Law Inspectors at Boards of Guardians, inasmuch as the latter have no votes?—Yes; I should observe that I have noticed a reluctance on the part of the Inspectors to take the chair. The usage at the Board, as at several other Boards with which I am acquainted, is, that the third person in attendance shall be the chairman; and if one of the Inspectors happened to come in the third, I see a tendency or disposition on their part to decline taking the chair, and a desire that some other member should occupy that position. I should say, while I have that matter before my mind, that it would be a good arrangement to have a fixed chairman for the Board of Governors. They could imitate the practice of the Poor Law Boards in that respect; I believe permanent chairmen are almost always in attendance, and not only the chairman, but the deputy and deputy vice-chairman.

5282. Do you consider that there is anything anomalous in the persons who are charged by law with the inspection of an institution being themselves members of the governing body of that institution?—I must say, that when I first heard of their being appointed Governors, I was surprised at it, but in watching the working of the arrangement I had no reason to regret that the appointment had occurred; and I must say that I have not seen more efficient members of the Board, as far as their conduct fell under my observation, than the Inspectors; and that the accident of their being Inspectors has never, so far as I have observed, impaired their efficiency as members of the Board, or suggested ideas of duty other than those entertained by the members generally.

5283. Is it the practice of the Board of Governors to visit the whole building, and to inspect the inmates on the occasions of their meetings?—No; not upon the occasions of their meetings, but several members have repeatedly inspected the whole asylum. The concern is large now, and there is a great deal of detail to go through; the accounts are numerous, and the financial business is very elaborately attended to, and certainly not shorter than two hours or two hours and a-half will discharge the business any day. Under these circumstances the Governors would feel that they would hardly have leisure to go every day through the building; and indeed, for my part, I feel that it would not be necessary to do so. I happened to be in the institution this very day, and I was not expected there, and I heard an observation from the matron, that the institution was prepared every day for inspection. I never saw it, either upon the occasions of incidental visits or going through at the time of the appointed meeting, that every thing did not appear to be in a fit state, and quite prepared for inspection.

5284. It has been stated by the Manager, that the Board of Governors do not go through the asylum and inspect it; and he also stated, on being asked when the Board of Governors last went round the various wards and inspected the house, that he could not tell; he further stated, in reply to a question, whether it had been done within the last twelve months, that it may have been done by some, but that it was not inspected generally—do you consider that in so extensive an establishment as the Richmond Asylum, a proper supervision of the institution in detail can take place, if the governing authorities do not visit it more frequently?—I think the Governors would be chargeable with a dereliction of duty if they omitted to do any thing in the way of necessary inspection. The Manager's recollection does not agree with mine as to the visits of the Governors, or their going round the asylum; I remember more inspections than he appears to have in his recollection. There are also several medical gentlemen who are in daily attendance; there is a resident apothecary; there is a very active matron; there is a manager. The medical gentlemen are Dr. Mollay, Dr. Tuohill, Dr. Banks, and Dr. Hughes.

5285. Are those persons you have named officers of the institution?—Yes; the Medical Officers.

5286. Would not the object of inspection by the Governors be to see that the officers perform their duty?—Certainly. If there was any feeling that they required supervision, the Governors would be very ready to render any service in their power. I should have added the names of Dr. Nugent and Dr. White, the Inspectors. I consider there is a sort of safeguard for the institution in the connexion of these gentlemen with it, and it would appear to me to be a matter of surprise if perpetual and special investigation were necessary, under all these circumstances. I have repeatedly gone round the houses. I have been seven or eight years a Governor, if not more; and I must say, that I never in any one instance, found any thing out of the way, different from what visitors would expect to see, upon either appointed or incidental inspection.

5287. Would you be surprised to hear, that in the greater portion of the divisions the water-closets were kept regularly locked, and that in many cases they were not fit to be used?—I know there is a great deal of imperfection in matters of that description, which the Governors have made repeated attempts to get rectified. The whole of the buildings have been carried on and the works terminated under certain circumstances that were always dissatisfactory to the Board.

5288. The matter to which I refer had reference to the old asylum?—I never heard that any such thing had occurred as the locking of the water-closets; but that the institution has a great many imperfections is perfectly certain, and quite within the cognizance of the Governors; and they have had I do not know how many weeks' or months' correspondence with the Board of Works on the subject.

5289. Have you heard that on the occasion of the Commissioners' visit, the privies in the yard were in a state dangerous to the health of the inmates?—I never heard that; I only heard of the imperfection of those offices.

5290. Are you aware that in one ward it was the practice to employ the lunatic patients in removing the filth of those dirty privies?—I am not. The patients are employed as far as they are capable of rendering any service; and I believe the feeling is, that it is better to have them employed than otherwise.

5291. I presume you are of opinion that the nature of the employment is important as regards the curative treatment of the patients?—Yes; the institution is a curative one, and I should think employment would be appropriate for that purpose.

5292. Are you aware there is an almost total absence of night-chairs in the institution?—I heard recently of an order for some of these things.

5293. Are you aware that in a great many of the lavatories most of the cocks are useless, being out of order?—No; I am surprised there are so many instances of imperfections in the matters referred to; I am surprised they never fall under the observation of the medical gentlemen who attend the Board regularly. I have never known, perhaps more than once, a failure to constitute a Board from insufficient attendance, and the Board is always prepared to hear any recommendation for useful alteration or for improvement.

5294. I presume these deficiencies are matters that would be detected by an active Visiting Committee?—They would certainly fall more under the observation of a Sub or Visiting Committee; and I should think that for that purpose such a Committee would be a very useful body.

5295. With reference to the employment and amusement of the patients, I believe there was a ball-alley in the grounds of the new asylum?—Yes.

5296. Are you aware, portion of that ball-alley has been for some time, and is now fitted up as a pig-sty for the pigs of the apothecary?—I was not aware what particular part of the premises was used for the pig-sty; I was aware he kept pigs; the number of them was a matter brought under the consideration of the Board, and I must say I was one of those of opinion, that the animals should not be allowed to remain at all. The Manager and the apothecary had some pigs, and the Manager stated that he had been twenty-four or twenty-five years connected with the institution—that the original Governors gave him permission to have pigs, and that he never exceeded the power he had received from them; but I believe the Board on this occasion came to the resolution that not more than one or two pigs should be permitted to be in the possession of any officer; and some of the members of the Board, myself amongst the number, thought it would be much better not to have a pig at all in the institution—in short, that the stall should be used to feed pigs for the benefit of the patients.

5297. At present it is used in feeding pigs for the benefit of the apothecary?—I thought the resolution of the Board was carried out. As soon as ever the matter came under my consideration, I certainly had no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the practice should be given up; and if it goes on now, it is certainly in defiance of the order or resolution of the Board.

5298. Do the Board of Governors, at their fortnightly meetings, usually inspect the books which the Manager is obliged to keep—the morning statement book and others?—Yes; all those books are inspected, and there is a report always expected from the Manager and matron, and from any officer of the institution who has any thing that could be brought under the consideration of the Board.

5299. I believe the morning statement book requires the number of people employed in the institution to be specified?—I do not know to what extent its requirements go, but my impression was that it contained any information that was considered to be of importance to the Governors. There are very regular books kept, including a very elaborate minute book. That minute book is now kept upon a principle recently introduced. Formerly there was a very short and insufficient statement made in it; now, I think, every possible subject is introduced into it that ought to be introduced.

5300. Are you aware that the daily statement book is not regularly kept with reference to the new asylum?—No; I am not.

5301. I believe Mr. Beatty, the apothecary, is the person in immediate charge of the new asylum?—He is.

3392. He stated in his evidence, that the books connected with the new asylum were kept at the old house; that he made no communication to Mr. Wrigley, with reference to the daily condition of the new asylum; and that he made no return of the number of patients employed. Under those circumstances it would be impossible, I believe, to make up a morning statement book for the new asylum, as required by the regulation?—Under those circumstances it would; but I never heard it suggested at the Board that any thing was wanted with reference to the employment of the patients.

3393. You are aware the morning statement book is required by the Privy Council regulation to be kept, and to state the numbers who are employed, the number of persons under restraint, and several other matters?—I was not aware of that.

3394. As the morning statement book in the new asylum did not contain any statement of the number under restraint, that provision of the Privy Council regulation is inoperative therefore, as regards the new asylum?—I have never known the subject to be brought before the Board, and I should say that I think all those matters should be attended to by the officers in such a way as to leave nothing essential undone that should be done.

3395. I believe the duties of clerk and storekeeper are discharged by two different officers in the Richmond Asylum?—They are.

3396. Are the Board of Governors satisfied with the way in which the accounts of stores and so on are kept?—They are. The storekeeper is a very methodical officer, and he is, I must say, quite in the confidence of the Governors. The clerk has had his duties greatly augmented by being made secretary to the Board, and by having the minutes put under his charge. He has a good deal of correspondence, and he receives and pays money, and is a person having at the same time a very moderate salary. I am of opinion that the clerk has quite enough to do for the salary, without having the duties of storekeeper superadded. The office of storekeeper is, I believe, supposed by the Board to be very efficiently discharged by a punctual, and conscientious, and methodical officer.

The Storekeeper;
of stores.

3397. Are you aware that many of the articles which are used in the house are never brought into the hands of the storekeeper?—I should not be prepared to hear it; I should rather expect to hear the contrary, and that there was no want in that department. The storekeeper is an officer not a long time in possession of his office, but the impression upon my mind, I must say, was, that he discharged his duty very efficiently and very honestly.

3398. I believe the supplies are furnished upon the order of the manager?—There is a want book, which is brought before the Board, and which is rendered operative by the order of the Board. Every article is set forth in the book that is required. It is read out, and many articles are subjected to observation, and the quantity of some articles has been learned; but as to how far the proposed order is necessary for the use of the establishment, is a question that is always deliberately considered. Now, with reference to snuff, and tobacco, &c., it has been a matter of question whether articles set down in the book, for the consideration of the Governors, are wanted for the use of the institution, and whether retrenchment might not be made. I think there is a great deal of investigation of that kind which forms the business of every meeting of the Governors.

3399. Are you aware of the Privy Council regulation requiring that the storekeeper shall have charge of the stores of the institution, and receive the same, and be accountable for the quantity and quality, so as to show the issues of every sort, ordinary as well as extra, and to check the issues and consumption with each other?—I was not aware of it.

3400. It has been stated to us that the shoes for the use of the inmates, which I believe are supplied by contract, are left in charge of the porter?—I am not aware, but if I were told so I should be surprised at it. My impression was, that there was nothing defective in this department. The stores are very much under the care of the matron, and the matron is considered a person highly efficient for her office, and very scrupulous and correct in the discharge of her duty.

3401. The matron, Mrs. Wrigley, having been asked who had charge of the shoes purchased for the use of the inmates, replied, the hall porter; were the Governors aware of that?—If I were asked the question I would not give that answer; it surprises me.

3402. Do you know whether the storekeeper takes charge of the female clothing or the material for making up the female clothing?—I do not, but my impression was, that the clothing was altogether under the management and in the charge of the matron.

3403. Do you not think it would be advisable—there being a separate officer for the charge of stores—that all the stores received in such a large establishment should be received by him, and that a proper check should be kept upon the issue of them?—Undoubtedly. I believe it is much against the wish of the matron that she has had the care of the stores, and that it happened through the accident of the former storekeeper being obliged to retire; he got a little insane. There was some little embarrassment connected with the office, from his state of health. A new storekeeper was appointed, and it was the opinion of the Board that he was a very efficient officer, and that nothing was neglected by him that he ought to attend to.

3404. If all the stores which are required for the use of the house are not brought into the storekeeper's department, I presume it would be impossible to keep a correct check upon the consumption?—I should think so likewise.

3405. There is a considerable quantity of ground attached, I believe, to the institution?—There is.

The pleasure of the garden.

3406. The Commissioners have been given to understand that there is no regular account kept of the expenditure upon that ground, or of the profits or produce of that ground?—I think that is a mistake. There is a regular account given of the sale of com-medicines. The money yielded by the sale of vegetables is always reported to the Board, and regularly lodged to the credit of the Board.

5317. The master of the clerk to the question, whether there was any debtor and creditor account kept of the garden was, "There was an account of that kind kept, but it has not been latterly kept?"—It is now to me to be told that there is any imperfection as to the money arising from the sale of the vegetables. I must say that the Governors repeatedly invite the officers to make representations upon subjects to be brought under their consideration. There has been, I think, a growing efficiency in the whole institution in that way, and reports are now made, and things done, which originally were not attended to. I must say, when I first became a member of the Board of Governors. There is the master's report, the manager's report, the reports of the medical officers—in short, every one knows that the Governors are anxious to have reports, and that it is considered objectionable if any circumstance of the least importance is not reported to them. The Governors deal with those matters till they come to a deliberate conclusion upon them, whether the hour be late or early. We do not retire upon any one day from the board-room without completing all the business brought under our notice, which, I suppose, as we desire it, embraces every thing connected with the institution.

5318. I believe the asylum is one of the largest in Ireland, comprising as it does the two buildings?—Yes, one of the largest.

The government of
its condition.

5319. What arrangements have been made for the government of the new building; is it under the control of the manager of the old asylum?—The manager is less connected with the new building than with the old part of the asylum, and the new building is very much in the care of the apothecary, and Dr. Banks has special duties to perform with regard to it. The existing arrangements are not those that were originally contemplated. The Governors were desirous that there should be a resident medical person, with a suitable salary, who should give the concern the entire of his attention, who should be resident within the walls of the institution; and my own opinion is, that that is quite an indispensable arrangement for the well-being of the institution. I think the local government of it is very inefficient at present, but the Governors were deterred from pressing for the completion of the arrangement that was intended, by reason of the non-existence of any mode of making compensation to the individuals who would be affected by it. There is a recent Act which enables them to entertain the question of compensation or retiring allowances, and one of the most recent subjects of conversation at the Board was, when the initiative should be taken to carry the original intention out; but matters are in an incomplete state, as we feel, with reference to the general management of the concern. There ought to be some resident manager, whether a physician or not a physician, to give it his entire attention, and to be more a governor than any person connected with it now is.

Superannuation Act.

5320. It would appear from the evidence the Commissioners have received, that Mr. Wrigley, the manager, does not make a daily inspection of the whole of the new asylum?—I am not able to say whether he does or not.

5321. What security have the Board for the new asylum being properly conducted, the manager not making daily reports from it, and there being no visiting committee?—There is no part of the institution that does not fall under the daily cognizance or observation of some officer connected with it. All the medical men attend every day, and are ready to give every information and to make every suggestion necessary for the good management of the institution. The imperfections in the building itself, the imperfections in the water-closets and sewers, and those matters have all been frequently the subject of consideration at the Board, and most lengthened correspondence with the Board of Works has been carried out, in order to have them put in a better condition.

Dissatisfaction of
house.

5322. Are we to understand that the Governors do not consider themselves responsible for the condition in which the new building was given up?—Certainly not. They have repeatedly expressed their dissatisfaction at it, and to remedy the imperfections has been a subject of constant anxiety with them. They have endeavoured to move the Board of Works to rectify those imperfections, in order to save the public the expense which would be caused if it were done through the Governors themselves. The Governors have been very much dissatisfied indeed as to the condition in which the building was given up by the Board of Works, and many things now imperfect would be quite otherwise if the wishes of the Governors had been carried out. There was no way in which they could move the Board of Works to do what was necessary. Repeated remonstrances, and the use of strong terms of remonstrance, formed constant business at the Board.

5323. I believe one of the new buildings erected was an infirmary?—Yes.

The infirmary.

5324. It has been stated to the Commissioners that the building has been in some degree perverted from its original purposes, that cases are sent there which are not cases of bodily ailments, and that patients are treated in their own cells who might properly be removed to the infirmary?—The accommodation for patients is very imperfect in the institution in its present state. The number of inmates altogether is now about 612, and there certainly is not room enough for carrying out the purposes of the institution, and a great deal of its space is applied to the use of epileptics and idiots. There are forty-one epileptic cases and sixty-one idiots, which is a large number in an institution over-crowded by 612 inmates; and no doubt the efficiency of the institution, for its curative purposes, is impaired in that way. There is a pinching for room, and I daresay irregularities will occur through that means, and that things were done that would not be done if the institution were in a more perfect condition.

5325. Have the Board of Governors ever visited the infirmary?—They have.

5326. Do they visit it periodically?—Not periodically.

5327. Do you know whether the manager visits the infirmary daily?—I am not able to say.

Dennis.

*Richard District Asylum,
M. Stanton, Esq.
No reports to Board about infirmary.*

5328. Is any report of the state of the infirmary made to the Board at their usual meetings?—Not specially; the Governors expect that every thing of importance or of interest will be reported to them. If there be any deficiency in the information conveyed to the Governors, it is certainly contrary to their wish and their direct orders.

5329. It would, I presume, be difficult to detect those deficiencies, if some other parties did not go round to inspect the institution?—It certainly would, no doubt. I entirely approve of the arrangement of having a sub-committee of visitors, and I certainly do think that the arrangements are deficient in that respect.

5330. I believe amongst the other buildings recently erected at the Richmond Asylum, The chapel, there was a chapel for the use of the inmates?—Yes.

5331. It has been stated to the Commissioners that the arrangement by which the chapel is divided into two parts is not satisfactory, and that it would be desirable to have a separate building for the members of each religious persuasion—what is your opinion upon that point?—I think that if there could be a separation it would be desirable. The subject has been frequently under the consideration of the Governors. The Governors were anxious—and, let me say, the Governors of both persuasions. There are gentlemen of the Established Church, and gentlemen who are of the Catholic Church on the Board, and I believe there was no difference of opinion amongst them as to the desirability of having separate places of worship, if the thing could be accomplished, and it was felt to be merely a question of expense; and the suggestion that separation would be desirable, even proceeded from some of the patients themselves; for it was reported to the Governors that there were cases in which Protestant patients were disturbed by the action that they were in a Catholic place of worship, and vice versa; so that if there was money to accomplish the change, it was held to be desirable by both parties that it should be done.

Opinion as to separate places of worship.

5332. Is it your opinion that a lunatic asylum, for the reception of the lunatic poor, should be really a curative establishment?—I should think that it ought to be so, and the more so the better for its object. I consider it a perfection of the Richmond Institution that it is a curative establishment; and I believe the success of it, as such, has been very remarkable.

The Asylum as a curative institution.

5333. Do I understand your opinion to be, then, that the State should support hospitals for the cure of lunatics, apart from the question that provision ought to be made for the incurable elsewhere?—Yes, that is my opinion.

5334. Do you consider that the Richmond Asylum, either the new or the old building, at present has adequate means for conducting curative treatment?—I think it has not.

5335. Has the question of providing more effectually for that object been much under the consideration of the Board of Governors?—It has.

Sir George F. J. Hudson, Bart., M.D., J.P., sworn and examined.

Sir G. F. J. Hudson, Bart., M.D., J.P.

5336. I believe you are a governor, and a frequent attendant at the Board of the Richmond District Asylum?—I am.

5337. The Commissioners have recently received a statement from the Board of Governors containing their views with reference to the subject of our inquiry; you have, I believe, perused that document?—I have.

5338. It would appear, from the statement, that the Board have fully considered the wants of the districts as regards accommodation for the lunatic poor; do you consider, generally, that there is sufficient accommodation?—I think the number that ought to be received into an institution belonging to the district is much greater than the asylum can afford accommodation for.

5339. I believe a very large proportion of the present inmates of the Richmond Lunatic District Asylum are incurable?—Incurable, and epileptic, who may be all classed under the denomination of incurable.

5340. There is still a considerable demand, the Commissioners have been given to understand, for accommodation for lunatics on the part of the workhouse and prison authorities?—Yes; in the vision of the Board of Guardians at which I attend, in my own neighbourhood, I may say that I know, at least, of eighteen or twenty cases the present time, who ought to be received into the lunatic asylum, and for whom there is not, at present, accommodation.

5341. From the statement furnished by the Board of Governors it would appear that they consider the most advisable mode of providing additional accommodation would be to place the incurable cases, generally, in a separate and distinct building?—That is their opinion.

Opinion as to an asylum for incurables.

5342. It also appears that they came to the conclusion that there are no proper means of providing additional accommodation in the Dublin district, except by the erection of new buildings?—There are no means of providing additional accommodation otherwise. I believe the subject was carefully looked into by the Inspectors, and there was no building at all adapted for the purpose that could be procured; and the Governors conceived, that by the erection of a new building on the asylum grounds, the necessity for a new staff would be avoided, and considerable expense saved—such as the cost of additional medical officers.

5343. The addition of any considerable staff of superior officers, I presume, could be dispensed with in that case?—Yes, there would be no necessity for additional chief and medical officers.

5344. I observe in the statement that the possibility of applying a portion of the workhouse accommodation for the reception of those cases was also considered?—It was.

5345. It had reference, I believe, to the allocation of a portion of a workhouse in the district for the reception of incurable lunatics?—Yes; the Rathdrum Union Workhouse was at first thought desirable for the purpose. It was thought that such an arrangement would be practicable; but on further consideration the Board abandoned the idea, because of the construction of the workhouse rendering it totally unfitted for the reception of lunatic patients of any kind.

5346. Did the Board feel that the objection would equally apply to the whole of the workhouses?—I think they did. Considerable outlay would be required in any workhouse, though the entire were given up to make it suitable for the reception of lunatic patients.

5347. I believe no additional workhouse has been erected of late years within the Richmond district?—No.

Number of inmates in workhouses in the district; necessitity of workhouse accommodation for lunatics.

5348. It is not likely, therefore, that any workhouse could be dispensed with?—The only workhouse where the inmates, at present, are not sufficiently numerous to occupy it is, I believe, the Rathdrum Union Workhouse, about seven miles from Dublin. There are about 500 inmates there at present, and it is calculated to hold 1,200.

5349. From the estimate of the state of lunacy in the district, furnished in the statement from the Governors, it would appear that 223 inmates are supposed to be now in the workhouses?—Yes.

5350. Do you consider that those 223 include any cases who might, without injury or disadvantage, be left in a workhouse?—I myself think that a workhouse provides no sufficient accommodation for any description of lunacy. I think the arrangements originally made in the construction are by no means suitable for the purpose, and I do not think the staff of officers at all such as are calculated to take care of lunatics. From my observation I would say that persons in their unfortunate condition cannot be sufficiently attended to in workhouses.

5351. It has been stated in evidence before the Commissioners, that there is a class of imbeciles classed as lunatics who might, without disadvantage, be left in a workhouse. Do you agree in that opinion to any extent?—No.

5352. I believe that, generally, the attendants in charge of lunatics in a workhouse are paupers themselves?—They are pauper inmates, selected by the officers as most suitable for that duty.

Consent of inmates to goals;
 of the law.

5353. It is estimated that the number of lunatics in goal at the present moment, in the district, is fifty-one. What is your opinion as to the provision of the law by which lunatics may be sent direct to goals?—I think it is a safe provision in the case of patients who become dangerous to themselves or others, as affording a means of putting them under immediate restraint. So far I think the present law is very desirable; but I should say, the sooner they could be transmitted to the district asylum the better, as there is no provision whatever for curative treatment in goals beyond the ordinary infirmary arrangements.

5354. What is your opinion as to the alteration of the law which has been suggested, that those lunatics instead of being sent to the goal should be removed direct in the first instance to the asylum?—I think such would be very desirable.

5355. Would you, in that case, give the medical authorities of the asylum the power of rejecting a case if they did not consider it a proper one for reception?—Yes, I should think I would leave that discretion with the medical officers.

Estimate of inmates at large.

5356. There is also an estimate in this report furnished to us, that there are at large in the district upwards of 500 lunatics at present unprovided for. Are you aware whether the returns from which this statement is taken include lunatics of all classes, whether paupers or otherwise?—I believe lunatics of all classes are included; I cannot speak positively.

5357. Do you consider that of those who it is estimated in the statement are likely to require relief at the county charge, about half are, probably, curable?—I think so.

5358. It is stated in the document which has been forwarded by the Governors of the Richmond Asylum, that their attention has been "directed to the existing practice of charging the maintenance of dangerous lunatics confined in goals, and thence transferred to the district asylums, without regard to the localities to which they properly belong, thus causing an unjust and oppressive increase in the taxation of property in Dublin and other large towns; and they therefore recommend an alteration in the 8th and 9th Vic., cap. 107, and the 9th and 10th Vic., cap. 115, giving authority for the allocation of dangerous lunatics confined in goals to the several district asylums to which, by previous residence, they properly belong." Would not the alteration of the law thus suggested involve a definition of what would be considered a settlement?—Yes.

5359. Have you considered what particular definition you would give "settlement" in this case?—I have, as regards the admission into workhouses generally, but not with particular reference to lunatic patients.

5360. I believe that, at present, in the case of workhouses, if a pauper is admitted, he becomes chargeable either upon the union or an electoral division, but there is no power of transferring the charge against any other union?—There is not, nor any power of transmission. A pauper who has become destitute in a union is charged to the union at large, provided he has not acquired a residence in any particular electoral division.

A law of settlement
 as regards lunatics.

5361. There is no power on the part of the board of guardians to transmit the pauper to another union?—No power whatever.

5362. There is a suggestion made in this paper from the Governors, that authority should be given for the allocation of dangerous lunatics confined in goals to the several district asylums to which, by previous residence, they properly belong. Is it meant that the Board of Governors should have the power of transmitting lunatics to another district?—Yes; such power does not exist at present as regards the management of unions, but we think it might be applied in the case of lunatic patients.

5363. In the case, for instance, of a lunatic from the Mullingar district in the Richmond asylum, might there not be a danger of conflict between the two Boards of Governors, such as frequently takes place with reference to the settlement of a pauper?—I should think not. I think the board at Mullingar would consent to the transmission to their asylum of a patient properly chargeable upon their district who was found in the streets of Dublin in such a state as to require transmission.

5364. You contemplate, of course, the law declaring what should constitute a settlement?—It would be necessary to define it.

5365. Still the fact of whether the party came within the definition of the law would have to be ascertained by evidence?—Just so. Let the period of residence be fixed, whatever it might be. That, I think, would be desirable.

5366. Would it not be likely that in the case I put, the Governors at Mullingar might naturally oppose the evidence given in Dublin was ex parte, and taken without any means been afforded them of testing the facts?—That is a point that has not occurred to me.

5367. Generally, do you consider that the vexed question of settlement might arise in such cases?—It might.

5368. As a Governor you are satisfied that a very large proportion of persons not natives of Dublin, or of the district, do receive relief in the Richmond District Asylum?—Certainly.

5369. Is the number more than is to be expected in a large metropolis?—I think it is natural to expect a greater proportion in a city; but the injustice appears, in the opinion of the Governors, to be great from the taxation being acted upon unduly by the presence of those persons.

5370. You are, of course, aware of the provisions of the existing law under which new asylums are erected?—Yes, I am.

5371. I believe those provisions leave the local authorities no direct power of interference with reference to the erection of the buildings?—They do not.

5372. Do you consider that such a state of the law is satisfactory?—No. I consider that grand juries, when called upon to make imperative presentments, feel it a grievance that they have no voice in the disposal of this money. That opinion is very strongly expressed upon the subject at grand juries when the question of presentments for lunatic asylums is before them.

5373. Referring, in the first instance, to the local authorities having no voice with regard to the proceedings which take place in connexion with the erection of asylums, do you see any reason why the law should be different in that respect from the law as to the erection of goals?—No, I conceive not. The Governors have considered it an injudicious arrangement. For instance, in the erection of the new asylum, at Richmond, they considered that matters might have been so arranged there as to render the building more perfect and more suitable for the purpose to which it is applied.

5374. In the event of the erection of asylums being left to the local parties, would you consider it advisable that any approval on the part of the executive government, or some central authority, of the plans and so forth should be required?—I think so; so far as the plans and arrangements contemplated, it would be considered desirable to have them laid before the parties who present the money.

5375. As regards the government of the asylum, I believe the local ratepayers are not now represented on the Board?—No, they are not.

5376. Would you suggest any alteration of the law in that respect?—I do not see, immediately, how they could be possibly represented. I think the Board of Governors should be very carefully selected, so that all parts of the district contributing to the support of that particular asylum should be fairly represented. I do not, at present, see any other means of representing local interests.

5377. What is your opinion as to the existing state of the law under which the superior officers of an institution are named by the executive government?—I think it is highly desirable that it should remain as it is.

5378. May I ask you upon what grounds you consider that desirable?—I think that there should be a controlling power, and that the Lord Lieutenant is the person who should nominate. I believe removing such a power, and placing it at the disposal of the local authorities would not be so advantageous to the working of the asylum as leaving the selection with the Lord Lieutenant.

5379. Do you think there is a greater risk of unqualified persons being appointed if the appointment was left to the local authorities rather than with the executive government?—I think so.

5380. Is it not probable, that though one party may be influenced by private friendships and feelings, others may be further influenced by political friendships and feelings?—Well, such is possible. I have seen private feelings manifested on such occasions to what I call an injudicious degree.

5381. Are you satisfied with the existing state of the law which regulates the manner in which the maintenance is charged on the several counties by the grand juries?—Yes, I think that is a fair arrangement.

5382. You are aware it differs from the provision of the law with reference to the maintenance of the paupers who are not insane?—Yes.

5383. Can you inform the Commissioners whether any paying patients are received into the Richmond Asylum?—There are a few; I cannot immediately say how many, but there are some patients received for payment.

5384. Are you in favour of that arrangement?—I think the Governors should be very cautious in extending the practice. In some cases there is a very obvious relief to the party, but I should not like to see it largely adopted.

5385. I presume there is a considerable class of people who would be unable, out of their small means, to provide fully for the maintenance of their lunatic relatives, although they might be able to pay a part of the cost?—Yes; I have had frequent applications of that nature to procure admission for the relatives of small tradesmen, and persons of that class, who would be most anxious to contribute a small sum, though they were not able to maintain their relatives in a private lunatic asylum.

5386. I believe there are but few charitable lunatic hospitals in Ireland where patients can be received for less than the cost of maintenance?—I believe very few.

5387. How far do you consider the State is called on to assist in the maintenance of lunatics who are not paupers?—I think it would be very desirable there were asylums where poor patients could be supported at a lower charge than they might be maintained for in private asylums. I think it would not be wise to enlarge the privilege for parties to have their friends maintained for part payment in a general lunatic asylum for destitute poor.

CHARGEABILITY UPON DUBLIN OF PROVINCIAL LUNATICS.

John Reynolds, Esq., J.P., sworn and examined.

5388. I believe you are a member of the Corporation of the city of Dublin?—Yes; I am an alderman of that body.

5389. Have you given your attention very much to the taxation of the city?—I have.

5390. Is there any thing connected with that subject, and within the scope of our inquiry, that you would wish to communicate to the Commissioners?—Yes. It has been felt by myself, and by the entire Corporation, that we are not fairly dealt with in reference to the large charge made against the ratepayers for the support of lunatics in the Richmond District Asylum. We believe that we are charged more than we ought to be charged, and we believe that we are not properly represented on the Board of Governors. The attention of the Town Council has been drawn particularly to the increase in the annual charge from the year 1846 to the year 1856 inclusive. We find that the ratepayers have been charged the following sums, namely—in 1846, £2,074 16s. 6d.; in 1847, £3,209 6s. 4d.; in 1848, £3,398 17s. 2d.; in 1849, £3,267 19s. 8d.; in 1850, £3,278 14s. 6d.; in 1851, £3,456 5s. 1d.; in 1852, £4,436 12s. 10d.; in 1853, £5,309 6s.; in 1854, £5,461 9s. 6d.; in 1855, £6,984 3s. 3d.; in 1856, £8,127 12s. 5d.;—making a total in the ten years of £51,120 3s. And we complain that a body of Governors, not representing the ratepayers, have imposed that sum upon them; and we are also at a loss to account for the increase in the ten years, the amount being nearly quadrupled, from £2,074 in 1846 to £8,127 in 1856.

5391. Can you tell the Commissioners the number of lunatics in charge in each of those years respectively?—I can from 1852 only, being the period that the fiscal duties of the Grand Jury of the city of Dublin were transferred to the Town Council. Under the provisions of the Dublin Improvement Act, the fiscal duties and powers of the Grand Jury were transferred to the Corporation; and on taking up the returns from 1852 to 1856 inclusive, I find that in the half year ending 24th May, 1853, the number of lunatics charged against the city was 247; and in the half year, or rather the year ending 24th May, 1854, the number charged against the city is 256; in the year ending 24th May, 1855, the number charged is 305; and in the year ending 24th May, 1856, the number charged against the city of Dublin is 372. I find that the four other counties—namely, the county of Dublin, the county of Meath, county of Wicklow, the county of Louth, and also the town of Drogheda, were associated with the city of Dublin, as a district for lunatic purposes; and I find that the number of pauper lunatics charged against the county of Dublin in the year ending December, 1852, is 66; against the county of Meath, 35; county of Wicklow, 36; Louth, 29; and town of Drogheda, 3. In the year ending December, 1853, the number charged against the county of Dublin was 69; Meath, 34; Wicklow, 42; Louth, 32; Drogheda, 3. In the year ending December, 1854, the number charged against the county of Dublin was 76; Meath, 34; Wicklow, 33; Louth, 27; Drogheda, 4. In the year ending December, 1855, the number charged against the county of Dublin was 93; Meath, 39; Wicklow, 46; Louth, 27; Drogheda, 5. And in the year ending December, 1856, the numbers charged were, against the county of Dublin, 124; against Meath only 2, which is accounted for in this way, that Meath was detached from the other counties in that year for lunacy purposes; the number charged against Wicklow county is 63; against the county Louth, 39; and against Drogheda, 5. I have made a comparative calculation, based upon the population of those respective districts, and I find that, taking the population of the county of Dublin at 146,760, the number of 124 pauper lunatics, with which it is charged for the year ending 1856, gives a proportion of one lunatic in 1,200 of the population. The city of Dublin contributes 372 lunatics, which, taking the population of the city at 258,300, gives a proportion of 1 in 675; so that, therefore, while the county of Dublin contributes 1 in every 1,200 of its population, the city of Dublin contributes 1 in every 675. I find, taking the aggregate population of the county of Dublin, county of Meath, county of Wicklow, county of Louth, and the town of Drogheda at 408,900, the aggregate of lunatics which they contribute to the asylum is 261; and I find that the city of Dublin, with a population of about 258,300, ought to contribute, at the same rate per cent., only 136½ lunatics, instead of 372, for whom she is charged. I find that the total number of lunatics reported, according to the last returns, in the Richmond Lunatic Asylum is 633, and that the total annual expense for maintaining that number is £12,401 4s. 4d., which is as near as may be to £50 per head per annum; and Dublin being huddled, as I believe, by the maintenance of lunatics from the provinces or districts outside of the borough boundary to the extent of more than 120 in number, it appears, if I am correct in that calculation, that she is forced to contribute more than £9,500 a-year to support lunatics who do not belong to her.

5392. Do you find that the city of Dublin is charged a higher rate per head for lunatics in the Richmond Asylum than any other county associated in the district?—I am not sufficiently informed to answer that question; I take for granted that the charge is probably about the average.

5393. In that case, the calculation you have made would show that, according to the proportion of lunatics, there was no injustice done to the city of Dublin in the accounts?—If the lunatics belonged to the city of Dublin, then there would be no injustice; but, as I have stated, a large number of them do not, from the fact that the system of admission makes an open highway for charging upon the city as pauper lunatic persons that do not belong to it. I may mention one circumstance that I heard from one of the divisional magistrates, that will illustrate the proposition I bring forward—that not long ago a very insane person, from some of the Munster counties, was brought by a relative of his to Dublin, and set at large in the streets; that he was then taken up as a dangerous lunatic, and brought before the magistrates, and committed by them in the usual manner, and that he was ultimately sent to the Richmond Lunatic Asylum, where he is at present located. I believe, from the general belief in the provinces, that the lunatics are not only better treated here than they are in the provincial asylums, but that they get better medical attendance also, there is a feeling abroad of anxiety on the part of relatives to have them sent here.

5394. I understand your view to be, that it is by the admission of lunatics into the Richmond Asylum who do not strictly and honestly belong to the city of Dublin, that injustice is done to the city?—I believe the greater part of the injustice occurs in that way.

5395. Admission to the asylum may be effected, first through the Board, and next by commitment by a magistrate as a dangerous lunatic to a goal, and transmission from thence by warrant of the Lord Lieutenant to the asylum?—I take for granted that is so.

5396. In the case of lunatics admitted by the Board, is it not competent for the Board to reject any applicant that they consider is not eligible for admission, from the fact of his not being fairly chargeable upon the district?—I am not aware of the state of the law.

5397. In the case of lunatics transferred from the goals, the magistrate, committing a dangerous lunatic, if he sees the case is a proper one, cannot, I believe, refuse to commit him on the ground that he has not been long resident in the city of Dublin?—I believe he has no power to refuse, and that it is imperative on a magistrate to commit the party to a goal, and the ultimate transmission to a lunatic asylum is by the authority of the Lord Lieutenant.

5398. What suggestion would you make with the view of remedying the evil of which you complain?—My own belief is, that all dangerous or confirmed lunatics, no matter to what county or town they belong, ought to be supported by the State. I believe their support ought to be a charge on the Consolidated Fund, in the same manner as convicted felons are maintained from it. I am also of opinion that the law ought to be amended to this extent—that it would confer on some tribunal the power of inquiring, with the view of ascertaining, where the lunatic came from; so that if a lunatic was about to be admitted to the Richmond Bridewell, and that it was found he was a native of Cork or Tipperary, whilst he was taken care of, there ought to be some power either of transferring him to the lunatic asylum of the district to which he belonged, or of charging the cost of his support against that district.

5399. What body would you propose to intrust with the power of deciding as to the district upon which the lunatic would be chargeable?—It occurs to me that the best body to arm with that power would be the Board of Governors of the asylum into which he sought admission.

5400. Do you think their decision would be considered satisfactory by the Board of Governors to whom the charge was transferred?—It ought to be a power conferred on them, to be controlled by some independent officer to be appointed, or a mixed board; at all events, it should be so constituted as to elucidate the truth in reference to the place the pauper came from.

5401. The proposition you have made involves the question of the law of settlement, and the right of recovery by one district against another?—Yes.

5402. Is it not incidental to great capitals that there should be a large concourse of persons in them from adjoining districts?—I believe it is; but it is singular that, although there is no remedy in Ireland or provision against the influx of paupers not belonging to the district, there appears to be some protection in England to that effect, as is evidenced by the transmission from various parts of England to Ireland of natives of this country, though they have spent from one to twenty years in that country, but have become paupers there. We have no power here of that sort.

5403. I believe the Richmond district originally comprised several other counties?—I believe it did.

5404. The Richmond Asylum building was, I believe, originally used merely for the city of Dublin?—I believe so; it was local.

5405. Was that building erected at the cost of the ratepayers?—I am not competent to speak positively upon that. My impression is, that it was erected jointly by the ratepayers and by the Government, but I am not quite certain about that. Upon the question of charge against the ratepayers of Dublin, I may state that I find the erection of the present lunatic asylum cost something over £40,000—I mean by the present, the new Richmond Lunatic Asylum—and that the proportion charged against the ratepayers of Dublin for that building is about £18,000. And again, referring to the proceedings of the Town Council on the subject, we do complain that that sum of £18,000 was first of all expended without consulting the Municipal body, and that it was arbitrarily assessed; and that a body, not representing the ratepayers, charged them with that £18,000, which they are now paying, under the fiat of a judge, from year to year, at the rate of about £600 per annum.

5406. I understand you to object generally to that provision of the law which allows the ratepayers no voice in the distribution of the money?—Yes; I object to it on this ground, that I believe the power of taxation ought to be based upon representation, and that it is an anomaly to leave the ratepayers of the city of Dublin in this unprotected state; and that the Board of Works are put in motion by the Government, and decide not only upon the plans, but the extent of the building, the amount that it is to cost; and as soon as that act is passed by His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant and Council, then it is mandatory on the Corporation to assess upon the ratepayers whatever amount may be thought proper.

5407. That is equally the law with regard to all parts of Ireland?—Yes. I may refer to the answer given by the honourable member who preceded me, with regard to the Grand Jury assessments in reference to the erection of gaols. It is the duty of the Grand Jury, I believe, to receive estimates, plans, and specifications. As soon as they pass the Grand Jury, then the consent of the Lord Lieutenant is necessary; but in the case of the erection of a lunatic asylum, there is no such power vested in the Grand Jury, or in the Corporation of Dublin representing the Grand Jury here.

5408. What improvement would you suggest in the constitution of the Board of Governors?—I am now speaking with regard to the city of Dublin. Bearing in mind that the Lord Mayor and Corporation—sixty in number—are elected by the ratepayers, and that the law has given them considerable taxing powers, it does occur to me that if the law is not altered to this extent—that the Corporation shall originate prosecutions—it ought to be, at all events, altered so far that the Lord Mayor and Town Council should be authorized to elect a certain number from their own body annually, to be Governors of the lunatic asylum for a year only, and not for life; that they should be permitted to elect then in the same manner that they are now by law authorized to elect the Board of Superintendence who govern the city prisons. I found upon the list of Governors of the Richmond Lunatic Asylum some names that, in my opinion, ought not to be on it at all. I found upon it the names of two highly respectable gentlemen, the Inspectors-General of Lunatic Asylums, Messrs White and Nugent. I think it is a very anomalous position to place officers in, whose own acts might be the subject of censure or of approval by the Board, and more particularly as the Board have taxing powers. I found on the list the name of another paid officer, who, I think, ought not to be a Governor; I mean the Collector-General of Taxes. He is an officer appointed by and subject to removal by the Government. He has an enormous amount of official duties to perform; and although he is extremely intelligent, and most respectable and trustworthy, I think he ought not to be a member of the Board of Governors. I wish to add, with regard to him, that if he was not in the position of a mere Government officer, and that I had the power of selecting the Governors of the Richmond District Lunatic Asylum, I do not know any man I would select before him; but I do believe that his present office of Collector-General and the position of Governor of the asylum are inconsistent. I found another gentleman, equally respectable in every possible sense, who is a Government officer also—Mr. Lonsdale; and I think he ought not to be a Governor of the asylum. I beg to be understood as not speaking personally—I am speaking on principle; and I think it is a vicious principle to allow men who are mere Government officers, subject to removal or censure, to be Governors of an asylum imposing a considerable amount of taxation upon the ratepayers.

5409. Is the Collector-General of Taxes paid a salary by the Government?—He is paid a salary of £800 per annum by the Government out of the city taxes.

5410. Would you object to the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums attending the meetings of the Board of Governors in the same manner as the Poor Law Inspectors attend at the Board of Guardians?—No; on the contrary, I highly approve of that plan, because I think it would be most essential. I think the majority of the governing body should have the assistance of the Medical Inspectors.

5411. What is your opinion as to the adequacy of the existing district asylum for the wants of the lunatic poor?—I am not competent to give an answer to that question; but, bearing in mind that it is at present full, and that both the poor law establishments of the city have also a considerable number of lunatics in them, and that, as I understand, there

Inadequacy of the existing asylum for the wants of the

are applications for admission which cannot be granted, it would appear to me there was not sufficient accommodation. I may observe, as a member of the Board of Guardians of the South Dublin Union, and other unions, that I believe it to be a vicious system to support lunatics at all within the wards of the workhouses. I may be permitted to say that, if I am correct in my calculation of the influx of provincial lunatics, that if we were relieved from them, and that all the cases not curable were removed to some Government asylum, that then the vacancy created by their removal would probably render the present establishment large enough.

5412. The same principle upon which you have advocated this power of removing, from the Richmond Asylum, the lunatic paupers not chargeable upon the district, to the system of their own districts might be applied to the removal of the ordinary paupers to their own localities from the poorhouses?—That is a much broader question. The number of lunatics being so much smaller than the paupers, the removal would be attended with much less difficulty. The principle I contend for is not the law of settlement; that would be attended by the cruel operation of removing paupers to their proper localities; but rather a system of first ascertaining to what district a pauper properly belongs, and then having the power of charging his support against the district to which it was so ascertained he legally belonged, leaving to the parishes in his district the option of either removing him at their own expense to their own asylum, or paying the cost of his maintenance where he was. By such a system as that they would protect the pauper from the cruelty of removal, and carry out the principle of charging him against the district to which he properly belonged; it would be a mere debtor and creditor account.

5413. The system you have sketched of debtor and creditor appears to involve a reference to an account between a bank and its branches?—It involves a pecuniary outlay, on an account as between A B and C D.

5414. In those banking accounts there is no third party?—There is the public, on the one hand, holding the notes, and there is the governing body and the shareholders.

5415. In any debtor and creditor account kept by the bank the holder of a note does not appear?—The holder of a note only appears when he presents it for payment. I may, perhaps, illustrate it thus: There is a joint stock bank existing in Dublin, and having branches in the provincial towns, as many have; if a cheque is drawn by a branch at Cork upon the head office in Dublin, it is charged by the head office as against the drawer. And carrying the system further, if another joint stock bank, not having branches in the same towns, has credit at the head office, and it also draws and lodges, what it draws is debited against it, and what it lodges is brought to its credit. I would carry the same operation out with regard to the debtor and creditor account for paupers. If Cork sent a pauper to the South Dublin Union Workhouse, and that his support cost £5 per annum, I would mould the law so that, after ascertaining the place against which the pauper was chargeable, it would give the power of debiting the Cork Union with the amount of his support for the time he remained in the workhouse in Dublin.

5416. The system you have recommended, so far as keeping the accounts, appears simple enough; but am I to understand that you consider the position of a district asylum in Ireland connected with the Richmond Asylum in Dublin similar to the connexion between a branch of a joint stock bank in the country and the head establishment?—The law appears to assume that to be the correct course, because I find that the city of Dublin, and the four districts associated with it, are charged in proportion to the number of lunatics from them in the asylum.

5417. You are talking of a district: I want you to draw a distinction between the country generally and a district?—I speak now of the district, including Dublin city, the counties of Dublin, Meath, Wicklow, Louth, and the town of Drogheda. Meath was included until 1855. What I wish to convey is this, that the law has authorised the forming of those counties and counties of cities into a district for lunacy purposes, and that I find the law sanctions the charging against each county a fair proportion for the lunatics which are legally chargeable against it; and I do not see any difficulty in extending that principle.

5418. Are the Commissioners to understand that you consider the principle of the law of settlement and of removal, and of the right of recovery by one district against another, similar to the existing state of things?—The Commissioners are to understand from me that my proposition is to carry out the principle of debtor and creditor to the whole extent of the island—that is, that I wish to make the present district system universal as regards the whole country; or, which, in my opinion, would be a much more simple and satisfactory course, to charge against the Consolidated Fund the maintenance of paupers beyond the hope of recovery, believing that it ought to be incumbent upon the State to support such lunatics in the same manner as they are at present compelled to support felons.

5419. Is there any other suggestion that you would wish to make to the Commissioners?—No.

5421. Do you act in one of the committees of that body?—I do.

I attend here as a member of the Corporation at large to testify with regard to the constitution of the authority controlling the expenditure of the Richmond Lunatic Asylum in Dublin. We consider that the tax-paying community are not sufficiently represented on the Board of Governors, and that, consequently, there cannot exist a sound supervision of the charge imposed upon the citizens for the support of lunatics.

5423 You have heard the suggestion made by Alderman Reynolds, that the Corporation should name a certain number of the members of the Board: do you concur in that?—I do.

5424 I believe the Corporation is also represented on the Ballast Board?—They are. I have heard the evidence of Sir George Hodson, that the appointment of Governors might, with more safety, be left with the Executive. I understood him to say he did not see how the several tax-paying districts contributing to the maintenance of the asylum could elect representatives on the Board. However that reasoning may apply to counties, it certainly is inapplicable when considered with reference to the city of Dublin, as arrangements already exist in the Corporation of Dublin for electing persons to represent the citizens on the Board.

on Dublin city.*

5425 Are the opinions expressed by Alderman Reynolds, as to the undue chargeability of lunatics on the city of Dublin generally shared in by the members of the Corporation?—I think I may say universally.

*Proposition to charge all criminal and incurable lunatics
upon the State.*

5426 You have heard the suggestion he made as to the giving a power of transferring the charge of a lunatic to his proper district: do you concur in his view upon that point?—I have heard that suggestion, and I am not prepared to give an opinion in favour of a principle which would involve the law of settlement, concerning it has been productive of mischief in the sister country, and could only with great difficulty be applied here; but I entertain very strongly the opinion that every criminal lunatic and every pauper lunatic, whose case is considered incurable, should cease to be a charge upon the rateable property of the district, and should become a charge upon the State generally.

5427 Upon what principle do you consider the cost of maintaining an incurable lunatic should be a charge upon the general funds of the State?—I look upon it that the principle of taxation for contributing to the support of local institutions comes to be applicable as soon as the individual becomes incapable, as a lunatic, of taking part in the business of the community in which he resides. I would consider the same principle should apply to pauper lunatics declared to be incurable and to criminal lunatics, as appears to be the case with respect to parties convicted of felony or other crimes in England. I may call your attention to a fact which Alderman Reynolds overlooked, that convicted felons in England—in fact, all parties who have been tried by a jury in England—are supported by the State; while in Ireland those only are supported by the State whose sentence is equivalent to the old sentence of transportation. The attention of a Committee of the House of Commons was called to that by the Inspector of Prisons for Ireland, as illustrating an oversight, perhaps, which operated harshly upon the tax-paying community in this country. I made a calculation from a return of the charge thereby imposed upon Dublin, and I found that it is above £2,000 a-year. It occurs to me, and I believe the opinion is shared in generally by the Corporation, that that matter will be corrected as soon as any prison legislation takes place. I think the same principle should apply with regard to criminal and incurable pauper lunatics—that they should be supported by the State generally, they having ceased to be members of the community for any practical purpose.

5428 Would not the principle which you have laid down involve all helpless paupers in the workhouses, although not lunatics, being supported by the State?—I think not.

5429 Are they not also disqualified from taking part actively in the business of the community or from earning their own livelihood?—I think if they had given their services to the State and the community so long as they were capable of doing so, that when they become afflicted with the infirmities of old age, or infirmities arising from disease, they may be fairly charged upon the community; but it is not so with those who have become practically blotted out, as it were, from an existence amongst the community.

5430 Do you consider that the paupers who have been always helpless, and pauper lunatics who have been always lunatics, should be charged upon the State?—May I ask what is a helpless pauper?

5431 A cripple?—That opens a new question. How far they may be chargeable upon the community I do not think is a question for the present inquiry. Perhaps, if I were asked I should say that they, too, are not fairly chargeable upon the rateable property of any district.

The controlling power in the erection of asylums, formation of districts, &c.

5432 Would you suggest any alteration of the law giving local bodies extended powers with reference to the erection of asylums, and the formation of districts?—I apprehend that must, to a great extent, be left to the Central Government. I believe the approval of plans involves more scientific requirements than, probably, local tax-paying bodies could be got to devote to them. They are, generally, uninformed on what may be recent improvements that would be required in the erection of buildings; therefore, I think that duty should rest with the Central authority.

5433 Do you propose the same functions should rest in the Central Government also, where there was a necessity for additional accommodation?—It would make no difference, according to my view; because I think they should support a great proportion of these lunatics.

*Suggestion as to

5434 Is there any other suggestion you would make?—It would occur to me that if the present system of charge is to continue, that instead of locating paupers in the Richmond Lunatic Asylum, and charging them upon the city of Dublin, as we conceive, in many cases, on insufficient evidence, thus doing what might be said to be an unintentional injustice as regards the ratepayers, that the charge should be according to the population of the district at large, which was the rule laid down by the Government in charging for the cost of the asylum. The cost of the new asylum was something like £44,000; and in distributing that charge over the different parts of the district, the amount of the population was the test or rule according to which it was spread. Under that distribution the city of Dublin became charged with £16,000 out of the £44,000; and notwithstanding that, when they came to distribute the annual expense of the maintenance of the asylum and its inmates, the city of Dublin was charged with 370 inmates as against 260, 5435. What you suggest, in fact, would be a district rate for the maintenance of the pauper lunatics?—Just so; if the present system is to continue. I would only add with respect to the tax for the maintenance of the lunatics, that what was known as the Grand Jury rate, and is still known by the same name, though levied by the Corporation, has increased within the last seven years upon the city of Dublin, from an average of 1s. to 1s. 6d. in the pound at present. Alderman Reynolds has given you, in detail, the increase in the charge for lunatics, with which the increase in the general taxation does not keep pace. The increase in the other departments of taxation is about fifty per cent., while that for the maintenance of lunatics has increased 300 per cent. in the same period. I ought to mention that the charge appearing in the accounts of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums does not represent the full charge upon the city of Dublin for the maintenance of lunatics; because there is a number of pauper lunatics constantly in the workhouses waiting transmission to the District Asylum as soon as vacancies occur. I have been told, since I came into the room, that the number might, on an average, amount to from 200 to 250.

Bart., M.P.

LONDONDERRY DISTRICT ASYLUM.—GENERAL STATE OF LUNACY.

Sir Robert Alexander Ferguson, Bart., M.P., sworn and examined.

5436. I believe you are a Governor of the Londonderry District Lunatic Asylum?—I am a Governor of the Londonderry District Lunatic Asylum, and reside very near it; and I am also a Governor of the Omagh District Asylum, but I reside so far from it that I seldom attend. 5437. Have you been for many years a Governor of the Londonderry Asylum?—I have been many years a Governor of it, nearly from the time of its opening in 1829.

5438. I believe you have also given your attention generally to the condition of the lunatic poor of Ireland?—I have given general attention to the subject, as a Governor of asylums, and a person taking a deep interest in the prosperity of Ireland. I was examined before the Lords' Committee in 1843.

The state of the law.

5439. I believe the law provided asylums for the reception of the lunatic poor, without reference to their being destitute paupers?—So we have always understood it. There is a short summary of the Acts relating to district lunatic asylums in the Seventh Report of the Inspectors of Asylums—that for 1855; but even on that statement of them, which is little more than the marginal notes of the clauses, it will be seen the Acts of Parliament are very complicated and very confused; and that has been made much more manifest by the judgment of the Queen's Bench as to the payment of the chaplains to the Belfast Asylum. That judgment seems to me almost to have opened the whole question of the appointment of almost all the officers of asylums. It is very desirable that these Acts should be consolidated into one, and the powers respectively of the Irish Government, the Lord Lieutenant and Council, and of the Governors defined. A Committee of the House of Commons reported, nearly forty years ago, 25th of June, 1817, on this subject; and the first Act, the 57th Geo. III., received the Royal assent on the 11th of July; and the only thing you can infer from these was a determination on the part of both the House of Commons' Committee and of the Parliament that something should be done. And we find the provisions of the 57th Geo. III., chap. 106, which was re-enacted in almost as many words by the 1st and 2nd Geo. IV., chap. 38, to be simply that the Lord Lieutenant might order Ireland to be divided into districts, and that a lunatic asylum should be built in each of those districts; that he might appoint governors; appoint and fix the payment of every officer from the highest to the lowest, and prescribe their duties by rules and regulations, without consulting Governors or any one else in the district. Most absolute power seems to have been given to him. The Government seems to me not to have paid sufficient attention to the fact that a large proportion of those admitted as curable or dangerous, sink down into chronic, incurable, or harmless patients; and no houses or wards have ever been built to relieve the district asylums of these cases, so that they might be open for the reception of curable and dangerous patients, and recent cases. From the want of attention to these such system as that, all the incurable patients in lunatic asylums have been and are supported at large expense—say from £14 to £22 per annum a head; while in the workhouses and in former establishments for lunatics, such as Lahad Bridge, chronic incurable cases were supported at a cost of from £7 to £8 per head yearly. That is stated in the Report of the Lords' Committee of 1843. In our workhouse they are supported at less.

5440. Do you consider that the legislature contemplated those establishments being extensive institutions, or that they should be places of detention for the lunatic poor?—I think, from the wording of the Act and the rise of the lunatic asylums, they contemplated them for the reception of all such cases. I think there was not sufficient knowledge of the subject to lead to the making of a distinction between curable and incurable cases, and the cost of supporting each class. This is the more apparent from the English Act, the 8th and 9th Vic., c. 120, the 27th section of which enacts, "That in the erecting and providing of every asylum hereafter to be erected or provided for the reception of pauper lunatics, and also in enlarging the same, or any asylum already erected, regard shall be had to the number of lunatics to be provided for therein, who shall be or be deemed curable or dangerous. And in order to prevent such lunatics being excluded from admission into such asylum by reason of the admission or accumulation therein of chronic or incurable lunatics, some separate or additional building shall be provided for chronic or incurable lunatics, whenever, by reason of the increase in numbers of lunatics, the asylum shall be insufficient for the accommodation of all lunatics entitled to be received therein. And in order to secure the immediate admission into every such asylum of all lunatics deemed curable or dangerous, a sufficient number of such chronic or incurable lunatics shall from time to time be transferred from such asylum to such separate or additional building." I think those were the provisions introduced into the English Act of 1845.

5441. Are we to understand that you consider the Irish law should be rendered more in accordance with what the present English law is on the subject?—I think the Irish law should be rendered, on all the main points, more in accordance with the English law; but, at the same time, there are very great differences between the two countries, which must be attended to, or the whole question may be thrown into confusion, and the working of the Irish Lunatic Asylums Act, which under all its disadvantages, I consider to have been excellent, might be impeded.

5442. Up to the period when the Irish Lunatic Asylums Act, to which you have referred, and under which the first asylums were built, was enacted, the Legislature made no provision for the existence of any lunatic as such, or for his removal to any place of detention?—At that period the law made no provision of the kind; they were generally supposed to be sent to gaols.

5444. At that period the law did not make any provision for lunatics being received into those asylums, except as the Governors might think fit?—Except as the Governors might think fit, and except by order of the Lord Lieutenant. The Lord Lieutenant gave an order for the admission of certain persons to the asylum who were detained in gaols. I am not aware of his ever having exercised the power, except in the cases in which the parties were first committed to gaol.

5445. I believe the power of the Lord Lieutenant merely extended to those classes of lunatics now called criminal lunatics, and to persons who become lunatic in gaol?—Yes.

5446. Are you aware of the provisions of the existing law in England with reference to lunatics who are at large?—I have not looked into the more recent Acts; but I find the English Act of 1845 gives a power to the medical officer or overseers of a parish to bring a lunatic in that state before a magistrate, and have him committed to an asylum.

5447. That provision of the law in England, which differs materially, I believe, from the provisions of the Irish law, would authorize a justice to commit a lunatic to an asylum in the first instance?—That is a very material difference, and I should hope that in a short time that difference might be removed. If the course which I will take the liberty of suggesting by-and-by, of obtaining buildings for the chronic and incurable cases, were carried out, I should hope that, with some such restrictions as the English Act imposes, that power might be given to magistrates to commit at once to the asylum, and the gaols might be relieved from a class of inmates they, in fact, ought never to have received.

5448. I believe the English law also differs from the provisions of the Irish law, as it extends to a class of persons who are not under proper care and control, or may be cruelly treated or neglected by any person having the care or charge of them?—I see that the 49th section of the Act of 1845 gives that power, as to a person who is deemed to be a lunatic, and is under the care of a relative or other person who neglects or cruelly treats him, so that he is not properly taken care of.

5449. Will you refer to the 16th and 17th Vict., cap. 97, as to the exact terms of the clause with reference to lunatics wandering at large?—The clause seems nearly the same as in the former Act, except that it extends to all lunatics, whether or not such person be a pauper; and it authorizes the justice, if satisfied that such person so brought before him is a lunatic, and was wandering at large, and is a proper person to be taken charge of and detained under care and treatment; or if two justices be satisfied that such person so brought before them is a lunatic, and is not under proper care and control, or is cruelly treated or neglected by any person having the care or charge of him, and that he is a proper person, to be taken charge of and detained under proper care and treatment; and if the physician or surgeon gives the necessary certificate, then one or two justices are empowered to direct such person to be received into such asylums. I should consider any such provision as a great improvement upon the law; and I should hope, if accommodation were obtained for the incurable cases, by which the present asylums would be relieved from some of their number, that a provision to that effect might be at once introduced.

5450. Practically speaking, have the Governors regulated the admissions to the asylum so as to make it, as far as possible, a place for the reception of curative cases?—We have done so as much as we possibly could. The Londonderry Asylum was, to a certain extent, a peculiar one. It was built at first for only 104 patients. At that time three counties sent patients to it. We very soon discovered that the accommodation was quite insufficient—there was always a constant pressure for admission, so that we were obliged to get rid, in some way or other, by sending to their friends, or to the workhouse, as soon as the workhouse was opened, of those who were harmless or incurable; and even since the county Tyrone was taken off from us, and was attached to another district, we found still the same pressure continuing; and we are still obliged almost every day of our meeting to ask is there any room, or what cases are fit to be removed. That is generally our first question to the medical man.

5451. Does the admission paper which is required to be filled up by the relatives of those applying for admission, in the case of the Londonderry Asylum, require a declaration that the patients are not epileptic or idiotic?—My impression is that it does not contain the word idiotic. It requires a declaration that they have not friends who can support them in the asylum, and that they are not epileptic. I forget whether or not the word "idiot" is in it.

5452. Are you enabled to state whether the admission papers of the Londonderry Asylum require it to be stated whether the case, in the opinion of the medical man signing the certificate, is curable or incurable?—We require very full details of the case, but I do not think we require a statement from him to that effect. I do not think it goes further than that the case is likely to be benefited by admission to the asylum.

DEBATE.

*Londonderry District
Asylum—
General State of Lunacy.*

*Sir R. A. Ferguson,
Bart., M.P.*

5453. Do the Governors practically, when applications are made for admission, give preference to the cases which they consider to be curable?—Always; we are always for their immediate admission. For instance, suppose there are five vacancies, and eight cases we think fit for admission, we select those apparently curable for immediate admission, and they are to be taken in according as there is room.

5454. I presume the insertion of the words I have referred to in the admission paper of an asylum, namely, that the applicants are not epileptic or idiotic, would indicate that it was to guard against incurable cases, or such as were presumed to be incurable, being admitted?—I presume it is for that purpose; though the Act of Parliament at first seems to provide for the admission of the cases, yet even our first form sent down to us required us to take an acknowledgment from the friends of the patient, that, if deemed harmless or incurable, he would be removed.

5455. At what period were those forms sent down?—They were sent down at the opening of the asylum.

5456. I believe there is no uniform form of admission for the asylums of Ireland approved by any authority?—I should think not. I know we have varied ours in order to meet the case of parties who were not absolutely paupers, and yet whose friends could not support them in a private asylum.

5457. Are you aware that the Privy Council regulations of 1843 declare that idiots, as well as epileptics, are admissible into an asylum?—My attention has been drawn to the point in question. We do admit them, for those epileptic and idiotic patients are sometimes extremely dangerous.

5458. Have you found any difficulty in securing the removal of patients under an undertaking or bond from their friends?—I cannot say we have found any difficulty in securing the removal. It excites us a great deal of correspondence, of course, and there is a great unwillingness to take out a patient; once he is in the asylum, they consider he ought to be there for ever, and the friends are very unwilling he should go to the poorhouse; for the maintenance comes more immediately upon their own district than when it is levied off the entire county. I am not aware that we have not succeeded in any case in getting a person removed after some time.

5459. I think you have stated that, after the introduction of the poor law, you deemed it advisable to transfer certain harmless and incurable cases to workhouses?—Since the erection of the workhouses we have from time to time called upon parties to remove patients, though we knew that in very many cases they would be taken into a workhouse. We knew that they had been sent to us from the workhouse on account of their having become violent there, and the engagement to take them out was probably signed by the presiding chairman of the day. We were aware, therefore, such cases would be received back to the workhouse. At the same time, I do not know that we ever sent cases ourselves direct to a workhouse, except, perhaps, in the case of the Londonderry workhouse, which is within a mile of the asylum.

5460. Did that arrangement operate satisfactorily with regard to the patients who were thus sent to the workhouse?—On the whole, I should say it worked tolerably satisfactorily. It was necessary that we should get them out, and some of them might have been with us from four to five years before the workhouse opened. They had no friends to whom they could go, and they had sunk into that harmless state that we thought, with care and attention, they might be received into the workhouse without prejudice.

5461. Have you had any reason to believe that these patients suffered in any degree from their detention in the workhouse?—I do not think they suffered in any material degree. There was not the same power of employing officers to attend them. At the end of this year there were in the Londonderry workhouse nineteen male and seventeen female lunatics; and instead of having keepers or parties to attend them, we had of course none but paupers selected for the purpose. Therefore there could not have been the same care and attention given them as in an asylum; and there is a certain degree of disadvantage arising from having so many in a single ward. In a small workhouse they get mixed up amongst the paupers, and it is very difficult sometimes to protect them from bad treatment.

5462. What is your opinion as to the propriety, or otherwise, of harmless and incurable lunatics being detained in a workhouse?—On the whole I think it is very desirable they should not be kept in workhouses. I would much sooner see them in separate establishments for incurable cases. I see no reason why they should not be supported at the same cost there as in a workhouse, with the exception merely of having persons to watch over them; which I think would be a very great improvement. You cannot enforce from a pauper the same attention you could from a paid servant, and this arrangement would be better also for the unfortunate creatures themselves.

5463. It has been stated that several of the workhouses in Ireland are at the present moment more than half empty; do you consider that any arrangement could be beneficially made for the reception of lunatics into those buildings, large portions of which might be entirely appropriated to their use?—I certainly would prefer a building exclusively appropriated to their use; at the same time a workhouse might be arranged so as to have a certain number of wards occupied by them alone; but I do not think the accommodation in a workhouse is fitted for lunatics, and I should doubt the advisability of uniting the keeping of paupers and lunatics in the same establishment.

5464. If a workhouse, as at present arranged, were used for them, the patients would have to sleep in dormitories?—Yes, almost all sleep in dormitories, and there is no room whatever for separating them in case of occasional violence.

5465. Would you advise that a power should be given to any central authority to remove lunatics direct from the workhouse to the asylum?—I should rather leave it with the directors of the asylum; they know better what accommodation they have. I should think it would be sufficient to lay down a system for the purpose. So far as I have ever seen, the workhouses are always very anxious to get rid of them.

5466. Has any difficulty arisen in getting lunatics from a workhouse, into the asylum, in consequence of the difficulty of filling up the application paper?—Of course there are difficulties in the way. Great complaints are made of the want of information with respect to such people. It is generally a very violent case that is sent from a workhouse to the asylum, and it is almost always admitted by the medical superintendent between one meeting and another of the Governors upon communication with the medical superintendent of the workhouse, who certifies to him that the case is one of violence requiring immediate admission.

5467. I presume that, in the case of such admission, the formal admission of the patient is afterwards decided by the Board?—I should say not. I should say we accept that as an admission. It is reported to us as done by the medical officer on his authority, while the Board was not sitting; but I do not think we go through the form of confirming the admission.

5468. Are the admissions usually made by the Board or the medical officer?—They are usually made by the Board. The medical officer is called in, and he brings with him the admission form, containing all the information that can be got about the patient, together with any private letters he may have received from the different medical officers as to the state of the patient. The Board consider those, and give their order accordingly. If there is any thing deficient in the form, they may give an order for admission provisionally upon the form being properly completed.

5469. With regard to the discharge of patients from the asylum, are the patients discharged by order of the Board, or does any discretion rest with the medical officer for the purpose?—The discretion entirely rests with the medical officer. The Board sometimes say to him, "We are getting very crowded; are there any cases that could be discharged? if so, discharge them."

5470. If the friends of a patient who is not cured desire to take him out of an asylum, is there any power of detaining him?—I should think there is not.

5471. From what you have already stated, I gather you do not consider workhouses to be proper places for the detention of lunatics?—I do not; neither do I consider them fitting places for epileptic patients. Of course there might be a few idiots placed in them, who are not likely to suffer from bad treatment.

5472. I believe the provision usually made in the construction of the several workhouses for the lunatic poor was of a very limited character, and merely with a view to meet the cases that might arise in a workhouse?—So it has always appeared to me. In the Derry workhouse there are two wards which are appropriated for them. The dietary is fixed at what is considered very sufficient for them; and, including an allowance of 6s. 10d. per head for extra cost of sick diet and medicines, the support of the males amounts to £6 17s. 8d. per head per annum, and that of the females to £5 18s. 7d. per head per annum, giving an average of £6 7s. 11d.; but in that there is included only a proportion of the extra allowance for the pauper in charge of each ward, and nothing for any officer attending them; nor is there any charge whatever for medical superintendence or any proportion of the cost of the workhouse in that way.

5473. Are you aware that one of the wards for lunatics in the Londonderry Workhouse is not solely appropriated to lunatics; that patients suffering from venereal disease are also confined in that ward?—I was not aware of that. I understood females suffering from venereal disease and prostitutes were in a separate ward. I was not aware that any person so affected on the male side was in the ward with the lunatics.

5474. Have you a similar objection to the detention of lunatics in goals?—Their detention in goals is even more inadvisable than in a workhouse. There is a chance of some intelligent person being got in a workhouse to attend them, but not so in a goal, where there is no person who ought to be in attendance upon them.

5475. Are any paying patients received into the asylum at Londonderry?—There are no paying patients received into the asylum at Derry. When I say there are no paying patients, I should state that on the last quarter's account there were two pensioners; there was an allowance made for the pension. In the asylum at Omagh there are some parties who contribute a small sum; but our idea in Derry has been that we had not a right to admit paying patients unless there was a superabundance of room; if there was room for more than the pauper patients, that then we might admit the paying patients. That has been our understanding of the law both in Derry and in Omagh. At Omagh, having the room for them, we admitted them.

5476. How far do you think the State is called upon or the ratepayers should be required to provide an establishment for persons who are not paupers?—I do not think the State should be called on to provide for those who are not paupers; but there is a great difficulty in seeing how we should deal with those who are not absolute paupers, and yet whose friends are not able to support them in a private asylum. I was always struck by that; and it would be well if we could bring about the establishment of a system such as was proposed, I think in Staffordshire, and is described in the Reports of the Commission which issued before the Poor Law Commission of Inquiry—namely, that there should be a higher class of patients living in a better class of buildings, which buildings should be erected by private subscriptions; that the sum gained by the keeping of these patients—many of whom in England pay some hundreds a-year for their maintenance—should be appropriated for the support of a class of patients, such as the children of clergymen or parties who have been reduced in life. The gain from the higher class of patients should be applied to their support, and the county should build only for the paupers and support them.

5477. Such an institution would, however, in no degree, be dependent upon the public rates?—Such an institution ought not, in my opinion, to be in any degree dependent upon the public rates. It might assist in supporting patients who would otherwise become a charge upon the public rates.

5478. Is there a great deficiency of any such institutions in Ireland?—A very great deficiency. I should say I have known, in a district with which I am acquainted, a particular class of farmers obliged to send their relatives, in that melancholy position, over to the neighbourhood of Glasgow; and, of course, they would much rather have them in an establishment at home, if they were received upon the same terms.

5479. Is there, in your opinion, a large class of persons in Ireland in the position to which you have referred?—I should say there is.

5480. Do you consider that, beyond what private benevolence may do, the State cannot be required to make any provision for those cases?—I do not think the State should be required to make any provision for those cases. I think it ought to aid private benevolence as far as it could, without injury to the ratepayers, as by giving the ground, or affording assistance in any other way that could be done without absolute loss to the ratepayers.

5481. Are you aware that, with the exception of a small licensed house near Armagh, there is no asylum whatever throughout the whole North of Ireland for the reception of lunatics, except the district asylums maintained by the public rates?—I have no doubt of the fact; but it is explained, to a certain degree, by the facilities for transferring to Glasgow such a class of persons.

5482. Supposing the accommodation of an asylum to be beyond the wants of the poor of the district, would you then see any objection to the reception of paying patients, although the amount paid might not be equal to the actual cost of their maintenance?—I do not see any objection to their admission then, provided they are kept together and treated in the same manner, so that there would be no danger of the servants being induced to attend more to them, and to neglect the other patients.

5483. Was the erection of the Criminal Asylum, in your opinion, a proper arrangement?—I believe the erection of the Criminal Asylum was very much called for.

5484. Do you consider that all classes of criminal lunatics should be removed to that asylum?—I think that all classes of really criminal lunatics ought to be removed to that asylum. Parties are sometimes acquitted on the ground of insanity, who might be considered fit subjects for a district asylum.

5485. Do you consider that the asylums being, in those cases, appropriated to more than one county, is at all an impediment to their proper government or proper management?—No; I do not see that there is any objection to their being for more than one county on that ground.

5486. Have you found that the county in which an asylum was situated has received any undue favour in the reception of its lunatics in comparison with the distant counties of the district?—No, I do not think that has been the case. In Londonberry the district lunatic asylum is so placed that Donegal comes within a couple of miles of it.

5487. Has there been any question raised before the Board of Governors of the Derry District Asylum as to the separation of Donegal County from the Derry District?—There has been a question brought before us on the Report of the Commissioners of 1855, and previously, as to getting additional accommodation for lunatics in the asylum. The question was referred to a committee to consider in what manner the accommodation could be best procured. A number of suggestions were made as to the admission to the present asylum, and while engaged on the consideration of the subject, a good number of members, particularly those connected with the county Donegal, recommended the building of a separate asylum for that county. The question is suspended between us until the decision of this Commission.

5488. Were the members of the Board who represented the county of Donegal unanimous themselves as to the course to be pursued?—There was a difficulty occurred about it which prevented us from being certain as to the opinions of all the Governors on the subject. A special meeting of the Governors having been fixed to be held during the Derry Assizes, a great many of the Derry Governors who were members of the Grand Jury were not able to attend; but I believe if we came to discuss it, possibly those from the county Donegal would not be unanimous amongst themselves as to the plan which Mr. Stewart proposed, of building an additional asylum in Donegal. What they seem to wish for now is to have one of the workhouses handed over to them.

5489. Is that with the view of having the workhouse declared an asylum for the new district of Donegal, or providing for a certain class of the Derry lunatics in that workhouse, but to be still under the management of the Governors of the Derry District Asylum?—When it was proposed first it was with the idea of making it an asylum for the new district. They seem now, in conversation, to wish to have it a house for incurables.

5490. Has the question of the appropriation of one of the workhouses for such a purpose been under the consideration of the Poor Law Commissioners?—I am not aware that in our case it was brought under the consideration of the Poor Law Commissioners.

5491. Is it your own opinion that additional accommodation for the lunatic poor in the present Derry district is required?—I have no hesitation in saying, I think it is required on account of the number of incurables in the asylum. We have neither baths nor sufficient washing accommodation of the kind in the different wards, and we are so pressed with numbers of incurables that we find great difficulty in having the lunatics properly attended to.

5492. I believe the Board of Governors had very full statistical information as to the extent of lunacy in the two counties when considering this question?—They had the numbers as returned by the constabulary before them; since that we have got the names, but I am not aware we have had sufficient time to look into the returns to see whether a correct estimate was taken.

5493. If such an arrangement were adopted would you consider it advisable that the buildings to be erected for the chronic and incurable cases should be in immediate contiguity to the asylum?—It would be better they were near to the asylum, but not in immediate contiguity to it. For instance, take the case of the Derry Asylum, it has a public road running behind it, and I think the building for incurable cases ought to be placed above that road on a large space of ground we have lately acquired.

5494. Even with that arrangement would it not be possible to use some of the staff of the existing asylum for the management of the new asylum?—I contemplate they could use some of the staff, for instance, for inspecting we have now got the Medical Resident Superintendent, and he could have the inspection and responsibility of constantly visiting the new asylum; but I should expect that there would be a separate staff of keepers, and probably also of servants for cooking.

5495. The superior officers, so far as regards the inspection and the keeping of stores, accounts, &c., you consider might be available for the new establishment?—Yes, with great advantage and very little additional expense.

5496. Supposing that arrangement not adopted, and the asylum for those chronic and incurable cases to be established in a distant part of the country, do you think it would be likely to receive that attention from the Governors which a convulsive hospital would?—Certainly not. That is one of the things that always made me doubtful about the asylum for chronic cases. Paid superintendents should be appointed for such establishments. It is so very seldom persons are found with the talent or with the will to visit an establishment of the kind, that I do not think it would be safe to leave much depending upon inspection by the Governors.

5497. What is your opinion as to the existing state of the law relative to the erection of new asylums?—I think there ought to be more communication with and power in the hands of those who have to pay for them. If that was the case, we would not be now £5,000 or £6,000 in debt, and we would have an establishment for the chronic cases.

5498. I believe, under the existing law, the local authorities have no voice whatever with respect to the plans or in the making of contracts for the erection of the asylums?—Of late they have not; but as far as my memory serves me, going back to the time the Derry Asylum was built, more than thirty years ago, the plans were sent down to the Grand Jury and discussed by them; and though the Grand Jury had no power to do any thing, yet they had full information about the subject.

5499. The Board who approve of the plans and direct the execution of the works, is, I believe, a Board on which there is no medical man?—Yes, the Board of Public Works.

5500. Do you consider it advisable that if such a Board were entrusted with the power, there should be a medical person to consult?—There certainly should be a medical person to consult.

5501. Are you aware that a considerable proportion of the members of the Central Board of Control and Correspondence who directed the building of the first asylums were medical men?—As far as I remember they were, and our first asylums were built on a better plan.

5502. Do you consider that the present state of the law with regard to the appointment of Governors is satisfactory?—The appointment of Governors is a matter of very great difficulty. I do not think the circumstances of Ireland are such that the government of the asylums could be intrusted to committees of magistrates, as is the case with the lunatic asylums in England. If the appointments were managed in that way, I do not know how we could provide for the admission of a certain number of the clergy of all denominations, who, I think, ought to continue to be on the boards in Ireland. I think, therefore, probably, that the best mode might be the continuation of the present system, on the understanding that if Governors did not, within a certain limited period, give a certain number of attendances, they should cease to be Governors; that in fact it should be understood parties were not appointed for their lives, and merely as a kind of formal compliment, but that if they were to remain on the Board they should be really acting, working men.

5503. What is your opinion as to an alteration of the constitution of the Board by which representation might to a certain extent be introduced, namely, allowing a proportion of the members to be named triennially by the Grand Juries of the counties?—That might do very well if the members were strictly stated, and that the Grand Juries understood they were to put on acting persons. To give you an instance: the Grand Jury of the county Donegal considered that the more distant proprietors of that county were not sufficiently represented, and they recommended six names to the Lord Lieutenant, who were added to the Board of Governors of the asylum, and of those six gentlemen, five have never attended, and they could not be expected to do so, their residences are so distant from the asylum.

5504. What is your opinion as to the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums being ex-officio members of the Boards?—I think the Inspectors ought, to a certain extent, have a certain weight and controlling power which they have not at present; and whether that is to be given them by calling them ex-officio members of the Board or by their attendance in any other capacity, I cannot now say; I have not made up my mind as to which would be the best way of accomplishing the object. I think it would be better if their connexion with the Board were more in writing and more authoritative; that it was part of their duty to call our attention to what they considered to be deficient. I think their personal attendance at the Boards does not add to the weight of their recommendations.

5505. Do you consider there should be any central body for the direction of lunatic affairs similar to the Commission of Lunacy in England?—I think it would be very desirable that there were some central authority like the Commission of Lunacy in England; but it appears to me that the Commission of Lunacy in England, while they may get information, have no control, or, in fact, any power even of procuring information; and my reason for mentioning that is, that on looking to the accounts submitted by them to Parliament for the year 1852, they state, that the returns does not show from what source the large expenditure of £98,300, in the Derby County Lunatic Asylum, was raised, nor whether any and what balance was due or in hand at the end of the year; and though they make that statement, their next year's abstract shows that the Treasurer of the Derby Lunatic Asylum had £9,812 in his hands at the end of the year 1852; but they give neither explanation nor comment of any kind in the accounts of 1853. Therefore I should think the Commission of Lunacy had very little real power in England.

5506. I presume your observation applies more particularly to their powers as regards the public county asylums?—Yes; what I have stated was with regard to the public asylums. I am not aware of their powers as to private asylums.

5507. Do you consider the system by which Inspectors would be required to make reports to a central body preferable to the present course of proceeding?—I think, on the whole, it would be preferable to their present mode of proceeding, as giving greater weight to their representations than when delivered in conversation as members of the Board.

5508. I believe that of late years the Inspectors have not been in the habit of making any report whatever on particular asylums, except so far as the observations that may be contained in their General Report?—I am not aware of any.

5509. Do you find that the proceedings of the Board of Governors of the asylum are usually conducted with regularity?—Yes, with very great regularity.

5510. I presume efficient minutes of the proceedings are recorded?—They are certainly very short; but, I think, sufficient.

5511. Is the attendance of Governors generally very good?—The attendance of Governors is good. We have a great number residing not very far from the city of Derry, within a radius of five miles round it, and we are seldom without the number to constitute a Board.

5512. Do you find that the Inspectors are in the habit of visiting the asylum at unexpired periods?—I rather think not. As I said, we have no report or return from them of their observations, when they come to us. I suppose their visits to us are not so frequent as to other places.

5513. Are there any special local regulations in the asylum beyond the rules of the Privy Council?—I am not aware of any.

5514. I believe the funds for the maintenance of the asylum are at present advanced out of the Consolidated Fund?—The funds for the maintenance of the lunatic asylum are at present advanced out of the Consolidated Fund; half yearly the statement of the accounts, the mode of disposing of the money, and the allocation amongst the counties is sent up to the Privy Council of Ireland and the Lord Lieutenant, to be levied off the counties. It is a return made quite independent of any audit of the accounts, or any thing of that kind.

5515. Is it your opinion that the requisite funds for the maintenance of the asylum should be provided by direct payment from the treasurers of the several counties, as in the case of the gaols?—There is no doubt it could be done after a short time. The change would cause a large local levy in the first instance.

5516. Considering that the districts usually consist of more than one county, are you of opinion that difficulty might be experienced in providing sufficient funds, if the Board of Governors were dependent upon the presentment of more than one body?—There is no doubt but there might be great difficulty in the way of providing the funds. I was looking, for instance, within these few days, at a statement of the funds in the hands of the treasurers of the counties of Derry and Donegal; and I perceive that neither one nor the other has any money invested in Exchequer bills—that, in fact, they had nothing more in their hands than is necessary to meet the current expenses; and I should be very sorry to see the asylum left to the chance of an unfavourable levy or any casual payment under such circumstances.

5517. I believe the accounts of the several asylums are audited by the Commissioners of Public Audit?—The accounts of the several asylums are audited by a public Commission in London. They require from us a monthly statement of the accounts to be sent over; and they require, further, the year's accounts to be sent over at a particular period for audit. The audit can only be the addition of the different accounts; and it is, therefore, for almost any purpose, as an audit, quite useless; at the same time, it must cause a good deal of expense to the country, and there is a good deal of difficulty in explaining an expenditure two or three years after it has taken place—in finding the order sent from Government for confirming an expenditure which has been nearly forgotten. For instance, within those few months we have been called on to justify an increase of salary which we had given to one of our officers above three years ago. The audit, therefore, seems to me to be of very little use; and it would be much better to give us a local audit, like that given by the auditors of the Poor Law Commission of the Poor Law accounts, with an appeal to some authority in Dublin in case of any difficulty.

Asylum Board of 5518. Are you satisfied with the existing state of the law as regards the chargeability of the inmates of asylums?—I think, upon the whole, it is the best state of the law that can be devised. When the chargeability of lunatics in Ireland is placed upon small districts, the parties very often, to save their own district the expense, are unwilling to bring a lunatic in, and their neighbours are also unwilling that the friends or relatives of the person should be allowed to do so. The great advantage of the district asylums is the immediate admission of lunatics into them; and I fear that placing the chargeability of inmates upon small districts would have the effect of restraining or interfering with the desire of the friends of the lunatics to have them admitted.

5519. Do you consider that any alteration of the law is desirable as regards the chargeability of dangerous lunatics who are transmitted from a gaol to an asylum, and charged upon the county to which the gaol belongs?—I would keep them all, as at present, chargeable to the county. I see great difficulty in the way of ascertaining to what other county the party would belong, for the purpose of transferring the responsibility to that county.

5520. With whom do you consider the appointment of the superior officers of the asylum should rest?—I think the appointment of the superior officers of the asylum had better rest with the Governors generally as a body, unless the Government would undertake the payment, in which case they might have the appointments; or unless there could be established some school for the scientific training of persons to fill such situations, in which case, of course, the appointment should be given to the persons having the superintendence of the school, whether the Government or any other body of Governors.

5521. That training, however, might be made a condition preceding the appointment, although the appointments might remain with the local Governors?—It might be made a condition with applicants for such situations, that they should qualify themselves at this establishment. If a system of training could be brought about and established, it would be better, I think, to give the local Governors the power of recommending persons for admission to such an establishment.

5522. With regard to the appointment of inferior officers, as attendants, &c., with whom do you consider that should rest?—I think it makes very little difference with whom it should rest, whether with the Governors or the Superintendent of an asylum. It certainly should be with either one or the other. If the Governors had confidence in the Superintendent, I would leave it in his hands, if it were nominally with themselves.

5523. Is it your opinion the manager of an asylum should be always a member of the medical profession?—I have very great difficulty about that; the Londonderry Asylum has been in operation since 1829, under a non-medical superintendent. I see the system instituted by the English Act of 1845 is, that there should be either a resident medical superintendent, or a visiting physician, who should visit at least three times a week, and a non-medical superintendent—one of the officers under him to be named a superintendent. As far as I can judge, I believe the Londonderry Asylum, under the superintendence of a non-medical attendant, has turned out as many cured patients as any other institution of the kind; I would, therefore, doubt whether it should be made absolutely necessary that the superintendent should be a medical man; at the same time, there are of course great advantages in having such a person.

5524. Has any inconvenience arisen from the absence of a medical person in the asylum on any occasion?—I am not aware of any.

5525. In case of attempted suicide, or sudden illness, would not the absence of a medical attendant lead to serious consequences?—It might lead to serious consequences in such an event, but I am not aware of any case of the kind having occurred.

5526. Supposing the law to require that the manager of an asylum should be a medical man, would you consider it necessary that there should be a visiting or consulting physician?—That does not seem to be necessary by law in England, and I confess I do not see the necessity for it. I think the medical superintendent ought to be a person who would have the power, if he thought fit, of calling in others to assist him with their advice from time to time; but it seems to me that if you have a medical superintendent, there is not the same necessity for a visiting physician.

5527. Do you consider that the services of a medical man of sufficient professional standing and ability could be procured for the salary now given?—I should doubt that they could be secured in all cases.

5528. Are there chaplains appointed to the Derry Asylum?—There have been three Chaplains appointed at the Londonderry Asylum. They have been appointed for a considerable number of years. When they were first appointed, our visiting physician, Dr. Francis Rogan, who is I believe one of the most eminent provincial physicians in Ireland, was opposed to their appointment. The Board of Governors were rather doubtful about the matter, but as it was pressed upon us, we agreed to give it a trial for a time. We have been very fortunate in the parties who have been our chaplains, and we found the greatest advantage to result from the celebration of divine service, so much so, that I might mention, Dr. Rogan gave a very strong testimonial in favour of the appointment of chaplains.

5529. I believe by a recent Act of Parliament, the Board of Governors have the power of superannuating the officers of the institution?—By an act passed in the last session, the Governors have had the power of superannuating given to them. Having introduced the Act, I may say that I think it quite right the Governors should have a certain power of superannuation. How far it should go, I do not say. I am doubtful whether it should be to the same extent as the English Act, which enables them to superannuate parties incapable from confirmed sickness, age, or infirmity, of executing their office in person, in which cases the justices at Quarter Sessions may grant such amnesty as they, in their discretion, shall think proportionate to the merits and time of service of such officer, provided that the actual amount shall not exceed two-thirds of the salary payable at the time of the retirement. I think these terms are too vague; I think there ought to be a limit according to age, and I think it ought to be strictly limited, as in the English Act, to the officers who are resident in the establishment.

5530. Do you find that the wages given to the inferior attendants of the establishment are sufficient to secure persons fit to be entrusted with the care of the insane?—We have found them sufficient: the wages are good, their dietary is better than elsewhere, and they have premiums given them at Christmas, if they have been more than a year in the establishment without complaint. I have reason to believe they have money saved, and they seem most anxious to retain their situations.

5531. Does any examination take place into their qualifications—as regards their proficiency in reading?—No.

The Manager's books.

5532. Do the Board of Governors usually have before them the several books which the manager is required to keep?—The Board of Governors usually have the books before them, but there is not the power in them of making that examination which they ought to have. Two years ago we found that the clerk had omitted filling up a great number of the books. That is one of the reasons which makes me think an audit on the spot, like that of the Poor Law accounts, where the auditor would see the books had been kept regularly, would be desirable. The examination of the books is extremely slight.

Visiting Committee.

5533. Is there any visiting committee or subordinate board?—No; we always think it better to do without a visiting committee or subordinate board.

5534. Do not the Privy Council regulations require the appointment of a visiting committee?—They may require it, but I do not think we have ever acted upon it.

Internal arrangements of the Asylum: baths, heating,
ventilation.

5535. What provision is made in the internal arrangements of the establishment for the supply of hot and cold water to baths?—The internal arrangements of the asylum I have stated are very much interfered with by the overcrowding. There is not, I may say, any supply of water regularly laid on; they are obliged to carry the water to a bath-house.

5536. Is it the case that the lavatories in the wards were done away with to make room for an additional number of patients?—Yes.

5537. Where, then, are the patients washed?—In the yard.

5538. Is there any system in operation for warming the asylum?—There has been an apparatus put up for warming it with hot water through pipes, but the pipes are too small, and they depend more upon a large supply of blankets and covering for the patients.

5539. Is the ventilation at all deficient?—We tried to improve the ventilation in the cells from the corridors. I should say there is scarcely sufficient ventilation. There is no means of drawing off the impure air.

Employment of patients.

5540. Is a system of employment carried out extensively in the establishment?—We give as much employment as we possibly can, principally out-door labour, and some are weaving.

5541. Do you find that the matron has the female patients under control, and properly employed?—Yes; the matron is an exceedingly active woman; she is the wife of the superintendent, who has been lately superannuated.

5542. Are there water-closets in the establishment?—I believe not.

5543. Does any inconvenience arise from the clearing of the privies?—I think that is one of the points in which our establishment has suffered very much from the want of room.

5544. I believe there is a considerable quantity of ground which is available for the employment of the male patients?—We have got a considerable quantity of ground, and we lately purchased a larger proportion, and we shall get as much as we can for spade labour.

Place of worship in the Asylum.

5545. Having stated that there are chaplains appointed for the institution, is there any place devoted to religious worship?—There is not any place specially devoted for religious worship; we use one of the largest rooms for the purpose.

5546. Has any representation been made to the Board of Governors with the view to the erection of a place of worship?—I do not remember any application being made; the chaplains were aware we were willing to do our best for them, but that there would be great difficulty in the way of doing so.

Restraint.

5547. Is the use of mechanical restraint general in the asylum?—I believe very little restraint has been found necessary in the asylum; on the contrary, those parties who at different times have been brought from the gaols absolutely in irons, the irons have been at once struck off them, and the moral restraint of the institution found sufficient.

Medical Inspectors.

5548. What is your opinion as to the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums being medical men; would you consider that an essential requisite?—I should consider that an essential requisite.

5549. Are you aware that in England half of the paid Commissioners of Lunacy are members of the legal profession, and the other half members of the medical profession?—I was not aware of that distinction; the lunatics in England are so much of a higher class, that legal men are more required on that account.

5550. Are you aware the presence of one medical commissioner is usual on all occasions of inspection by the Commissioners of Lunacy in England?—I should think one medical commissioner would be necessary at an inspection.

Clothing and dietary.

5551. Are you satisfied with the clothing and dietary provided for the inmates?—The clothing for the inmates is very good, much superior to that of the same class when in the union workhouse. The same remark refers also to the bedding; and though the bed is chiefly of straw, it must be remembered that would be the bedding to which a return patient would most probably resort on being discharged as cured. With regard to the dietary, it is certainly superior, both in variety and in amount of nutriment, to the dietaries of the workhouses; and on reference to the evidence of Mr. Senior, the Poor Law Commissioner, given before the Committee on Poor Removal in 1855, it appears that the dietaries in the Irish workhouses contain, of dry nutriment, 15-65 ounces, and of azotised nutriment, 4-4; whereas in the English workhouses, the dietaries contain, of dry nutriment, only 15-50, and of azotised nutriment, 3-40 ounces daily, although the dietaries both in the workhouses and asylums in Ireland are of a more farinaceous or vegetable character than in England. There is less meat. It has been our object to make the dietary better, so as to raise the health of the inmates; and it is better than the parties would receive outside, when discharged as cured.

5552. The character of the dietary is similar to that which they are accustomed to in ordinary life, but the quantity is such as patients in that condition would require?—Yes.

5553. Is there any library of books kept, or means of amusement or entertainments provided for the patients?—There may be a library of books, but it must be very limited if there be any. There is no attempt at instruction or amusement.

WATERFORD.

WATERFORD, 5th FEBRUARY, 1857.

Present:—Sir T. N. REMINGTON, Chairman; Dr. ANDREWS, and Mr. BARRY, Secretary.

Waterford District
Asylum.

WATERFORD DISTRICT ASYLUM.

Captain John Dobbs.

Captain John Dobbs, sworn and examined.

5554. How long have you held the office of manager of the Waterford District Asylum?—Since 1841.

5555. Is the asylum merely one for the county and county of the city of Waterford?—Yes, the county and the county of the city of Waterford.

Number of inmates.

5556. What is the present number of inmates of the asylum?—One hundred and nineteen—sixty-five females and fifty-four males.

Number of vacancies.

5557. Is the asylum at present full?—There are eleven vacancies; the full number is 130.

5558. Are you aware whether there are any lunatics in the workhouses of the county or not?—I am sure there are idiots and incurables. I am not aware that there are any who require to be sent here. I sent some blank forms to the workhouse here and at Dungarvan, but they have not filled them up or sent in any one upon them.

5559. As far as you can form an opinion, is the asylum adequate for the wants of the county and county of the city of Waterford?—At present it is fully adequate. We have been full, particularly on the female side; we are occasionally very full.

Admission of
patients.

5560. Were there any applications before the Board, at their last meeting, for admission, which were rejected?—None.

5561. In what way are patients admitted into this asylum?—A person must be sworn to be a pauper—a person unable to maintain himself or herself; and there must be a medical certificate signed by a medical officer, and a certificate signed by a clergyman and a magistrate of the county.

5562. Is there any restriction in the form of application in reference to persons who are idiots and epileptics?—There was when I first came here; latterly they were directed to be received, and we have received both idiots and epileptics when they were dangerous; but it is not considered that an idiot, for instance, who is perfectly harmless, should be admitted.

5563. I find that your form is not such as excludes idiots and epileptics?—No, it is not.

5564. When the application is perfected, is it brought before the Board for their consideration, previous to the admission of the patient?—The Board allow the physician and manager to receive the patient.

5565. What power, therefore, do the Board exercise, as regards the admission and rejection of patients?—If there is any difficulty about a case it is brought before the Board, and the cases are entered every Board day in the proceedings.

5566. It appears, from what you have stated, that the admission of the patients is merely recorded on the minutes of the Board?—Yes, on the minutes of the Board.

Urgent cases; delegation of power to the Visiting Physician by the Board.

5567. Are you aware that the Privy Council regulations state that every patient must be admitted upon a special direction by the Board, unless in cases of urgency, when the physician may admit on his own authority, stating upon the face of his order the grounds upon which he acts?—The late physician, the late Dr. Cumming—his idea was, that every individual out of his mind, and requiring to be taken into an asylum, is an urgent case, entitled to admission if there is a vacancy for him, because the sooner a case of the kind is treated the more likely the person is to recover; while if the person is kept out of the asylum, and debarr'd from treatment, it operates very injuriously upon him.

5568. But practically the regulation of the Privy Council requires the discretion should rest with the Board and not with the doctor?—So it appears, except that in a case of urgency the doctor is allowed to admit, if he considers the case to be such. It was considered it would be a very great hardship upon patients coming from a distance to require them to be here exactly upon the Board day in order to be received. In cases of individuals coming in here, perhaps a week passes before we can perceive or come to a conclusion that they are really insane.

5569. As the doctor of the institution is allowed to admit all the applicants he thinks proper, does he comply with the injunction of the Privy Council rules, by stating upon the face of his order the ground upon which he admits?—He does not.

5570. As the Board delegate this power of admission to the doctor, does it leave him to decide upon the propriety of the patient's admission with reference merely to his particular state of mind?—Certainly.

5571. Are there any other considerations which should be taken into account in the admission of lunatics to the asylum, namely, whether the person belongs to the county or city of Waterford, and was in point of fact unable to maintain himself?—We cannot say that the person is not a pauper when there is an affidavit stating he is.

5572. Are you aware that in other asylums the Board consider they are not to be bound merely by an affidavit as regards a case?—If there was any evidence to counteract or contradict the statement, it would be necessary to make an inquiry into the case.

5573. Do the Board ever investigate a case with reference to the qualifications of a lunatic for admission, after the doctor has ordered him to be admitted?—The doctor frequently brings them before the Board where there is any difficulty in the cases.

5574. Are the Board of Governors at present satisfied that the patients in the institution are patients who should be received without payment?—Some have an idea that there are patients who might try something. They directed me to select against the next Board day such cases as there appears to be any suspicion about.

5575. Is the attendance of Governors pretty regular?—It is regular latterly.

5576. Have there been occasions on which a quorum of the Board have not assembled upon the appointed day?—There have been occasions.

5577. Do the Board of Governors appoint a visiting committee, or any portion of their body, to inspect the house and see their orders carried out?—They did appoint a committee at one time, but they ceased to act.

5578. Do the Governors themselves visit the institution?—Yes, on the Board days, and occasionally individuals come.

5579. Do they go through the asylum on those occasions?—They do. They do not all go; they deputise perhaps one or two.

5580. Are there any special local regulations for the government of this asylum besides the Privy Council rules?—I sent up a copy of them to the Commission.

5581. Are you empowered by the Governors to appoint the several officers of the institution?—That was the regulation at the opening of the asylum, and it has never been reversed. The Lord Lieutenant appoints the chaplains and such officers.

5582. The Privy Council regulation appears to give you the power of appointing the servants only, subject to the approval of the Board?—Yes.

5583. Is that the manner in which they are now appointed?—Yes.

5584. Does the clerk and storekeeper of the establishment reside upon the premises?—No.

5585. Is it by permission of the Board that he does not reside?—Yes.

5586. Was it by minute of the Board that the storekeeper was permitted to reside off the premises?—Yes.

5587. What quantity of land is attached to the institution?—There are fourteen English acres altogether. The exact quantity is stated in one of the returns I sent up.

5588. Is it of sufficient extent to enable you to employ on the grounds the male patients who are capable of working?—Quite sufficient. There is a great deal of spade culture.

5589. Is there any infirmary attached to the establishment?—There is not.

5590. Has the question of erecting an infirmary ever been under the consideration of the Board?—It has.

5591. What determination was arrived at?—I was directed to write to the Inspectors on the subject; they never gave a decided answer.

5592. Was that a letter soliciting the opinion of the Inspectors themselves?—Yes.

5593. Is there a chapel attached to the institution?—There is a room used as such.

5594. It would appear from the return you have furnished that as many as sixty-four members of the Roman Catholic Church have at times attended divine worship there?—Yes.

5595. I presume that the persons who may attend Roman Catholic worship would amount to a larger number, including the servants of the establishment?—Yes. As to the servants, there is only one from each division attends to take charge of the patients going. The other servants who cannot attend go to divine worship outside the asylum.

5596. Can you state the dimensions of the room where the service is performed?—Eighteen feet by twenty-four.

5597. Has the question of the erection of a chapel ever been under the consideration of the Board of Governors?—No.

5598. Has it ever been represented by the Inspectors that such a building was necessary?—I do not particularly remember that it has been.

5599. Is there a sufficient supply of baths in the establishment?—Quite sufficient. We use the lower ones, which we can supply both with hot and cold water; we do not use the upper ones; we have a public bath in the yard.

5600. Is the asylum lighted with gas?—No.

5601. Are the arrangements for the ventilation of the different cells adequate?—I think they are.

5602. How are the corridors heated?—By stoves.

5603. Are there any water-closets in the establishment?—There is only one in the upper female ward; there are privies in all the other parts.

5604. Are they in the yards?—Yes, in the yards.

5605. Is the sewerage satisfactory?—I think so.

5606. Are the female patients extensively employed in working for the institution?—As much as possible; the greater portion of them.

5607. State more fully how the females are employed?—At spinning, knitting, making shirts, clothing, and bedding.

5608. Are they able to make up all the clothing required for the establishment?—Yes.

5609. Are the shoes for the establishment made by male patients?—All.

5610. I believe you supply the patients with slippers for use in the house?—Yes, they have both slippers and shoes.

5611. Do the patients employed out of doors put off their shoes and put on slippers when coming in from work?—Yes.

5612. Do you find that tends to keep the day rooms and passages cleaner than they would otherwise be?—We do.

5613. Have you found any difficulty in getting the patients regularly to change their shoes when coming from work; has it caused any irritation amongst them?—No.
5614. Are there any books kept for the use of the inmates?—We have a library.
5615. Do you find that it is much used?—There are a few who like reading; many cannot read.
5616. Is there any school instruction for those who cannot read?—We had schools here. I had one in each division, and I had got National school books. There seemed to be an objection to my interfering at all about them, and there is no school now.
5617. Do you refer to the rule made by the Board that you are prohibited from all interference with school instruction?—Yes.
5618. Are we to understand that no attempt has been made to instruct any of the patients since that period?—There has been no attempt of the kind made.
5619. Are the Board aware that there is no school?—I presume so.
5620. Is restraint much used in the asylum?—Very little.
5621. What restraint is usually practised?—Straps for the arms.
5622. Who keeps the instruments of restraint?—I do.
5623. Have there been any complaints of ill-treatment of patients by the attendants?—Not that I am aware of.
5624. It appears from the minutes of the Board that such cases have been brought before them?—Yes.
5625. Are the attendants who were guilty of that ill-treatment still in the establishment?—They were recommended.
5626. Have any further complaints been made against the same individuals since?—No.
5627. How many chaplains are attached to the institution?—Two.
5628. Has any difficulty arisen with reference to the payment of chaplains?—Yes; in consequence of the decision in the Belfast case, the Audit Office considered the appointment of chaplains illegal, and they disallowed, from the year 1854, the payment for chaplains. They were paid by us up to the time of that disallowance. They have not been paid for the last two months.
5629. Did it appear from the correspondence that the Audit Office considered the decision in the Belfast case affected the legality of the appointment of chaplains generally?—Yes.
5630. Have representations been made to the Board of Audit to explain that that was not the case?—Yes.
5631. Has any reply been received to those representations?—No.
5632. How long is it since these representations have been made?—On the 29th December.
5633. Is seclusion much practised in the establishment?—No.
5634. Is there any padded room?—We had padded rooms, but they are now cells.
5635. They are not at present in the condition of padded rooms?—No; we found it better to keep such patients under the charge of an attendant.
5636. Do you keep the several books required by the regulations: the General Register, Provision Book, Delivery and Clothing Book, Morning Statement Book, &c.?—The clerk keeps them, under my direction.
5637. Are the cases of restraint daily entered in the Morning Statement Book?—Yes.
5638. Is the Minute Book kept by you?—Yes.
5639. Do you regularly inspect the provisions that are received in the establishment?—Yes.
5640. Is the supply of provisions satisfactory as regards quality?—Yes.
5641. Do you daily inspect the whole of the establishment?—I do.
5642. Do you inspect the wards at night?—Yes.
5643. Is there any night watch in the establishment?—No.
5644. You have stated that the power of appointing servants was left to you—with whom does the dismissal rest?—I can put a recommendation on the books for their dismissal, subject to the opinion of the Board.
5645. How frequently do the Inspectors visit the asylum?—Sometimes twice a month, sometimes perhaps once in two months, or a little longer.
5646. Do they usually make an entry of their opinion as to the state of the asylum on the occasion of their visits?—Yes.
5647. Is that brought before the Board at the next meeting?—Yes.
5648. Do the Inspectors usually attend as members of the Board?—Whenever they are here they do.
5649. Do they vote and take part in the proceedings like the other members?—Yes.
5650. I believe the accounts of the asylum are audited by the Commissioners of Public Audit, as you have stated?—Yes.
5651. Up to what period are they audited?—Up to the year ending the 31st March, 1855.
5652. It would appear from your statement that a considerable time elapses between the sending in of accounts of expenditure and their final audit by the Commissioners?—The time is shorter now than it was heretofore.
5653. Is any difficulty experienced in affording satisfactory information in reply to the queries of the Commission, owing to the length of time that may have elapsed?—Yes, particularly where there is a disallowance. It creates great confusion, as in a case where the delay has been perhaps two or three years, and the payment disallowed has been continued during that time. I take, for instance, the case of the chaplains, whose payments were going on for years.

5654. I understand that in the case you put there would be three years' expenditure or payment of chaplains' salaries, which may yet be disallowed by the Board of Audit if they persevere in the opinion they have expressed?—Yes.

5655. Up to what period have the accounts been forwarded to the Board of Audit?—Up to the 31st January.

5656. Are any female attendants employed on the male side of the asylum?—Yes, there is a nurse and three assistants.

5657. What particular duties do they discharge on the male side?—They clean the house, mend the clothes of the men, and look after the bedding.

5658. They sleep on the female side, I presume?—They do.

5659. Have you found any inconvenience arise from the employment of females on the male side?—I have not found any.

5660. Has it been always the practice?—We got men to do the business, and the arrangement was very bad; we never could get men to do the duties properly.

5661. Formerly the practice was as it is at present?—Yes, from the commencement, and we tried the other mode, as I have stated, for a short time.

5662. I believe you are chaplain to this institution?—Yes.

5663. Have you held that office for any length of time?—I think, since 1848.

5664. Is divine service performed regularly on Sundays in the institution?—Yes.

Religious ministrations.

5665. Are you satisfied with the arrangements that are made for the celebration of divine worship?—They are sufficient for my purpose.

5666. I presume you are in the habit of visiting the patients of your persuasion at occasional periods?—Yes, they are visited generally every week.

5667. What is your opinion as to the advantage or otherwise of religious ministrations for persons whose mental faculties are impaired?—My own opinion is decidedly favourable to it, and I think I have had sufficient experience of the institution to justify the opinion.

Opinion as to.

5668. Have you occasionally found cases where you considered it would be imprudent to communicate with the patient on religious matters?—Yes.

5669. I presume you would be governed in a great degree by the opinion of the medical attendant in such a case?—If he thought it inadvisable to speak to a patient, of course I would.

5670. After the answers you have made I need scarcely ask you whether you think a patient, being deprived of the opportunity of religious worship, would feel the deprivation considerably?—I think some of them would feel it very much indeed. There are at present, in my mind, instances of persons who went out cured, and who, when sane, expressed to me their sense of the value of such ministrations.

5671. Are such books as you might require for the inmates of your persuasion furnished by the Board?—I have not asked the Board myself for any, but I am sure they would give me whatever I asked for.

5672. Are they provided with proper books?—Most of them are.

5673. Having had frequent opportunities of visiting the establishment have you found it conducted in a satisfactory manner?—I think it a remarkably well-conducted institution.

Management of the asylum; the dietary.

5674. Are you in the habit of inspecting the food which is furnished to the patients?—I am not in the habit of inspecting it; I see it occasionally.

5675. Do you consider that the dietary supplied to the patients is adequate?—I should think so; I have never heard any complaints from them about it. I have not attended specially to that.

5676. Do you consider the establishment of a school in the institution would be an advantage?—I think it might. There have not been many of my own religious persuasion, since I have been chaplain, who stood very much in need of a school.

Education.

5677. Are you in attendance on the days the Board meet?—No, they do not ask for my attendance.

The Very Rev. Edward Newman Hoare, Dean of Waterford, sworn and examined.

Very Rev. Edward Newman Hoare.

5678. I believe you are one of the Governors of the Waterford Lunatic Asylum?—I am.

5679. Have you acted as Governor for many years?—Since the year 1851. I was appointed by Lord Clarendon.

5680. Is the attendance of Governors usually large?—No, it is not large; three or four is the usual number.

5681. Do you find that the attendance is more on the part of the Governors who belong to the city of Waterford than of those who belong to the county?—Entirely on the part of those belonging to the city. I never saw one of the county attending.

Attendance of Governors; Visiting Committee.

5682. It has been stated that the Board of Governors have not appointed any visiting committee or any portion of their body to see that their directions are carried out in the asylum?—No, I have not heard of any such appointment.

5683. Are you aware the Privy Council regulations of 1845 contemplated the appointment of such a local board?—I was not aware of it. It is usual when the Board meet, for one of the Governors, or two, perhaps, to go through the asylum. I have done so myself.

5684. Are you satisfied that a sufficient inspection of the establishment is made on those occasions to enable the Governors to judge whether or not it is properly conducted?—I think such a committee as you refer to would be a great improvement on that. The

- WATERFORD.
 Very Rev. Edward Nesbitt, Minister.
- inspection I speak of is done only on the days the Board meet, and, of course, we are then expected.
5685. What is your opinion as to the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums being members of the Board of Governors?—I think it is desirable that they should, in order that we may have the advantage of their advice when they are on the spot. We seldom have them in attendance; we had Dr. White present on the last Board day, and he gave us some useful information, and made some good suggestions. I think it is important that they should attend.
5686. Is it your opinion that the asylum is sufficiently extensive for the wants of the county and city of Waterford?—Yes, I think it is.
- No paying patients.
 5687. I believe there are paying patients in this establishment?—None.
5688. What is your opinion as to the propriety of admitting paying patients into an asylum erected for lunatic poor?—I was always of opinion it was not possible to do it under the existing law till Dr. White explained on the last Board day that it may be done. I think it is a difficult question, and there might be serious objections against admitting such patients. The difficulties that I see arise are, first, it is a question whether the State provision should be made available for persons who can contribute something towards their own support; secondly the danger of interference with private asylums for the reception of such persons; and again, the probability that the friends of such persons would expect a mode of treatment as to dietary and other comforts better than what was ordinarily given to the pauper inmates, and such a division of those classes, I think, would be highly objectionable. There would be also a danger of their being first admitted for payment, and after having them admitted the parties declining to continue the payments or reducing them in amount, and eventually leaving the lunatics to be supported altogether out of the rates. These are the difficulties that I see in the way; but, at the same time, on the other hand, it would appear to be desirable that there should be some plan of relief for persons who are not able to pay for their maintenance in a private asylum. We are obliged to take these cases in as paupers, and we certainly have known cases in which parties were admitted as paupers who could have paid.
- Appointment of the superior officers.
 5689. What is your opinion as to the propriety of the superior officers of the institution being appointed by the Executive Government?—As compared, I suppose, with appointments by local boards. I think the Executive Government is the suitable power to appoint. I should suppose they would act on the advice and opinion of local persons.
- Admission of patients.
 5690. Have you had occasion to carry into effect the provisions of the recent Suppression Act with respect to the officers and servants of the asylum?—No, we have not.
5691. It appears from the evidence the Commissioners have received, that heretofore it has been the practice for the doctor to admit the applicants without reference to the Board?—Yes.
5692. A minute of the Board at the last meeting would seem to prescribe a more strict adherence to the rules of the Privy Council?—Yes, I think it very advisable that they should be admitted without waiting for Board day. Necessity might require it, but I think such cases should be specially reported to the Board.
- Commital of dangerous lunatics.
 5693. Are you aware the Privy Council regulations make provision for such a class of cases?—Yes.
5694. What is your opinion as to the propriety of dangerous lunatics being committed in the first instance to goal?—I think that in the first instance it may be desirable, but they should not be left there longer than is necessary.
5695. Have the Board of Governors any reason to complain of defective information from the goal with respect to lunatics who may be transferred from thence to the asylum?—I do not recollect any complaint.
- Communication between Board and Inspectors.
 5696. Are the communications of the Inspectors to the Board of Governors usually made verbally on the occasions of their attendance at the Board, or are they made in writing?—In writing. I have seldom seen the Inspectors at the Board. When there has been one of them present he has made communications verbally likewise; but usually we have them in writing.
- Want of infirmary accommodation.
 5697. I believe the Inspectors represented to the Board of Governors the want of an infirmary in the institution?—Yes, they have done so.
5698. Have the Board of Governors taken any steps with a view to carry out their suggestion?—It was recently such a suggestion was made, and there appeared an unwillingness to embark in the expense of it. It was determined to wait at least till after the visit of this Commission to Waterford.
5699. At present I believe the patients who may be unwell are obliged to be treated in their own separate cells?—Yes, in their own rooms or cells.
- Chapel accommodation.
 5700. Has the question of providing better accommodation for the celebration of divine worship been under the consideration of the Governors?—It has been suggested that there should be other provision, but we have never had any complaint or representation from the chaplains on the subject.
- Gen. Newport, Esq., J.P.
George Newport, Esq., J.P., sworn and examined.
5701. I believe you are a Governor of the Waterford Asylum?—Yes.
5702. Have you been long a Governor?—About two years and a-half. I was High Sheriff of the city at the time I was appointed.
5703. Do you consider that the present asylum is adequate for the wants of the county and city of Waterford?—No, I do not.

5704. Have you seen the returns which have been published in the Seventh Report of the Inspectors relative to the lunatic poor who are at large in the several counties of Ireland?—No.

5705. Those returns state that, in the county of Waterford there were at large, in the year ending 31st March, 1855, sixty-three idiots, sixty-four imbeciles, and sixteen lunatics; from your knowledge of the county of Waterford would you be disposed to consider that total of 145 persons of unsound mind was in excess of the numbers that should really be accommodated in the asylum?—Yes.

5706. I presume that many of those cases would be such as might with safety be kept in their own homes?—I should think so.

5707. What is your opinion as to paying patients being received into the asylum?—I think it would be an excellent plan, because there are many who would be disposed to pay a part of the cost of their maintenance, or the entire, but could not afford to go to a private asylum.

5708. What is your opinion as to the Inspectors being members of the Board of Governors?—I should like to see the arrangement continued, for we often derive advantage from their visits.

5709. What is your opinion as to the power of appointing the superior officers remaining as it is at present in the hands of the Executive Government?—I should prefer seeing it remain as it is at present.

5710. I believe the chief officers of other institutions are appointed by the local boards, such as the officers of workhouses and gaols?—Yes.

5711. What is your opinion as to the operation of the law by which dangerous lunatics are committed to gaol?—I cannot see any benefit derived from it.

5712. Do you consider that gaols afford opportunities for lunatic patients being properly treated?—I cannot say they do.

5713. There appears to be a large number of lunatics in the workhouse of Waterford?—About thirty, I believe.

5714. Has their detention there arisen from their not being considered proper subjects for admission to the lunatic asylum?—Yes, any that were violent were removed.

5715. Do you consider that the workhouse is a proper place for the detention of incurable cases?—I would rather see any acute cases removed to the asylum.

5716. What is your opinion as to the propriety of the local authorities having a representation on the Board of Governors, by the appointment of members of their body to act thereon?—I do not approve of it; I prefer seeing the Governors appointed, as they are at present, by the Government.

5717. Have you heard any complaints of lunatics having become a charge upon the county and city of Waterford in this asylum, who did not belong to either the county or the city?—Yes.

5718. I believe the law affords no opportunity of charging the maintenance of those lunatics upon any other districts but the county and city of Waterford?—No, it does not.

5719. Do you consider that the number of strangers who may become chargeable upon the city and county of Waterford arises from Waterford being a seaport town, and likely, therefore, to be resorted by strangers?—I do.

5720. Is there any suggestion you would make with the view of obviating that injustice, as it is considered to be?—No.

5721. It appears from the evidence we have received, that the practice in this asylum has been for the medical officer to decide upon the applications, and to admit or refuse patients?—Yes.

5722. Are you aware that the Privy Council regulations contemplated that duty being discharged by the Board of Governors?—No. They were usually admitted by the medical man.

5723. Does not the practice which has hitherto prevailed leave the medical man, who might have been competent to decide upon the condition of a lunatic medically, also to decide whether that lunatic was a person properly entitled, in all other respects, to be admitted into this particular asylum?—Yes.

5724. Are there not other considerations, besides the mere state of mind of an applicant, which should govern the question of his admission or rejection—such, for instance, as his not belonging to the district, or not being a poor person?—Certainly; and it ought to be so; but we were under the impression we could not take into consideration these circumstances in cases where an affidavit was made. I have seen persons in this institution who I thought ought to have been paid for.

5725. Is there any suggestion you would wish to make to the Commissioners with reference to the object of their inquiry?—None, except on the subject of an infirmary. It is a great inconvenience that there is not an infirmary here, leading as that want does to the treatment of the patients in their cells. The question of chaplains is an important one. I think there ought to be paid chaplains, for lunatics have their lucid intervals, and they should not be deprived of any consolation they might derive from the attendance of chaplains.

WATERFORD.

Waterford District
Asylum.John A. Blake, Esq.
Appointment of Governors; principle of representation.

5728. Are you satisfied with the present mode of proceeding as regards the appointment of Governors by the Lord Lieutenant?—No.

5729. What mode of appointment would you suggest as a substitute?—I think if a portion were appointed by the Lord Lieutenant, as at present, and if the public bodies, the Grand Jurors and the Town Council, sent representatives in addition, it would be a better arrangement. Although, I believe, this Board consists of forty Governors, it very frequently occurs that the whole business is left to two or three. I attended some meetings here, and found only one of the Governors present besides myself. I am of opinion, that on the Board of Governors the city of Waterford is not at all represented as it should be; I mean the classes who pay for the support of the institution.

5730. Do you consider that a committee of the Town Council, or a number of Governors appointed by the Grand Jury, and bound to report to that body at the Assizes, annually, would be more likely to attend to the business of the asylum than the Governors as at present constituted?—I do, because the present Governors are appointed for life by the Lord Lieutenant, and they are irresponsible, and may attend or not as they please. If they were elected Governors, sent by the Grand Jury or the Town Council, say every three years, they would not be re-elected at the expiration of the time, if it was found that they were ineffectual. If it appeared from the public papers that those gentlemen had not attended to their duties regularly, they would be removed when the term of their appointment expired, or for which they were elected. Under the present system, Governors may be good or bad attendants, and it is all the same, as there is no one to call them to account. A vast number have never attended at all.

5731. What is your opinion as to the mode in which the charge for the maintenance of the inmates is now made—through the Grand Jury, by presentment?—I think it is unobjectionable.

5732. What is your opinion as to the mode in which the superior officers of the asylum are now appointed?—I think it is a very objectionable mode.

5733. What alteration would you suggest?—I think if you had a properly constituted Board of Governors—a certain portion appointed by the Government, with representatives from the local bodies; it would be far better for the interests of the institution that the appointment of the superior officers should then rest with the Board. In the case of this asylum, I believe that the officers are very good; but it might arise, and it has occurred before now, that officers who were incompetent were appointed through parliamentary and other influences being brought to bear upon the Government; and it has been the case, that officers were appointed by the Government of the day at the instance of two or three individuals.

5734. Would you leave any power in the Government or any central authority to dismiss an officer for incompetency or misconduct?—I would leave with the Government the same power of dismissing they have as regards prison officers, if the Governor of the gaol or the Inspector does not discharge his duty properly, and if the local Board do not perform their duty.

5735. You refer to the provisions of the Prisons Act of last session?—Yes. It would afford a very wholesome check to give the power to the Government of dismissing—just the same power as the Poor Law Commissioners have at present in dismissing officers of workhouses.

5736. Do you consider the amount of salaries and the payment of superior officers should be fixed by Act of Parliament, or any central authority, or by the Board of Governors?—By Act of Parliament.

5738. Is not the Inspector also supposed to inspect the management of the institution of which he becomes, as a Governor, himself a manager?—He is; but I think that could be much better provided for. I think it exceedingly desirable that there should be, in addition to the Inspectors-General of Asylums, a local inspector for each asylum. The Inspectors-General have all the asylums over the whole country to inspect, and cannot possibly become acquainted with such local circumstances, respecting particular asylums, as may be requisite; for instance—a large number of cases are admitted into this asylum when I consider ought not to be received; I mean persons whose relatives or families would be able to contribute something towards their support; and there is a very great reluctance on the part of the local Governors of the asylum to take notice of cases of the kind. It has occurred within my own knowledge, two or three times, that persons were admitted eventually whose relatives were at first unwilling to fill up the form of application, declaring the persons to be paupers. They had conscientious objections to making this declaration, and parties have come to me to ask how they could evade paying. Persons resorted to subterfuges in order to satisfy their consciences with regard to the declaration, and they have spoken to Governors; and when these cases came before the Board, I found, from time to time, a reluctance to interfere, and a feeling that it would be injurious to object. All this would be prevented if there was a local inspector, whose particular duty it would be to investigate those cases and all their circumstances, and report to the Board the facts concerning them. By such means the admission of those cases would be guarded against. An Inspector-General cannot do these things. I made inquiries the other day on the subject, and I find that it does not appear to be the duty of any one officer to do what I have pointed out, neither is it the duty of the Governors, or of the physician, or of any of the servants of the asylum; and under those circumstances, persons come to be supported out of the rates who are not entitled to such maintenance.

5739. Do you think the local inspector appointed by the Board of Governors would be likely to call attention to the impropriety of their own acts?—I think when a person sought admission into an asylum, it would be the duty of the local inspector to bring all the circumstances connected with the case under the notice of the Board; and when this information was brought regularly under the notice of a properly-constituted Board, I think the system would work well; and if a person was improperly introduced into the asylum, it would be his duty to report the matter to the government officer, one of the Inspectors-General of Asylums, and there would be a much better chance of remedy under those circumstances than there is at present. The great object of having a local inspector would be this: the Inspector-General's visit is necessarily a hurried and a short one, and he cannot possibly investigate all the circumstances. I do not wish you to understand for a moment that the present officers do not perform their duties exceedingly well; they discharge them most creditably, I believe, but it might occur that such would not be the case, and we would know nothing about it. We assemble here once a month, and very few Governors go through the house; therefore, for the sake of the patients as well, it would be very desirable to have some responsible officer, seeing that all the officials of the establishment perform their duty properly.

5740. Do you not consider that the local inspector, being an officer in a dependent position upon the Board, would be open to the same influence which you now say prevents Governors from discharging their duty by rejecting improper applicants?—I do not think he would be more dependent than the local inspector of prisons, and if there is any thing wrong it is his duty to bring it under the notice of the Board of Superintendence.

5741. My question has reference to a particular duty which you wish to place on the new officer, the local inspector of the asylum, and which the local inspectors of the prisons have not to discharge, namely, pointing out the persons who should not be relieved out of the public rates by admission into the asylum?—I think if there is a proper inspector appointed, he would do his duty in that respect faithfully.

5742. Do you think he would act in a manner more independent than the Board of Governors are likely to do?—I think persons are likely to be found for the office who would act so. There is at present positively no one to see that the officials of the asylum perform their duties. The Governors may pay a visit of inspection, but I believe it is very seldom done, and I believe there is no inspection book.

5743. It has been stated that at times persons are admitted into this asylum who are not natives of the county or city of Waterford, and not properly chargeable upon the district?—Yes.

5744. Does any thing strike you which might be suggested with a view of obviating that?—I think the maintenance ought to be chargeable upon the county to which the person belongs, or that there should be a power of transmitting them.

5745. Does not that require that the law of settlement should be introduced?—Yes; we had certain cases of patients here, respecting whom we reported to the Inspectors-General.

5746. Would not the law of settlement be advocated on the same principle with reference to the chargeability of paupers in workhouses?—Undoubtedly.

5747. Have you considered the question of the law of settlement generally?—I have occasionally, in the discharge of my official duties, when obliged to bring under the notice of the Poor Law Board, and the Poor Law Commissioners, cases of paupers becoming chargeable upon the union—paupers transmitted from England; and I have been always impressed with the necessity of a legislative enactment for charging paupers upon their own districts, or transmitting them to those districts.

5748. Have you considered the difficulties which are attendant upon a definition of settlement, and the enforcement or recovery of maintenance charges by one union against another?—I am aware the matter is beset with a good deal of difficulty, but there is a necessity for some change. I see that Waterford city is open to the ports of Liverpool, Bristol, and Milford, with which there is communication, and I find a very large number of paupers sent over here, the great proportion of whom belong to distant inland counties. These poor people very often, when they are landed from the steamer, come to the Mayor, and I am obliged to send them to the workhouse. I also find that even under the existing law for the transmission of paupers, a very great number of persons are improperly sent over; that when a man is sick, and is likely to become chargeable upon a parish in England, although he is legally entitled to relief there, and should not be transmitted, he is sent over to this country. There is a great deal of cruelty and injustice perpetrated in that respect.

5749. Is there any suggestion you would wish to make, beyond what you have stated, with reference to the subject of our inquiry?—I may mention, on the subject of chaplains, that it would be very desirable that the Protestant and Roman Catholic inmates of the institution should be afforded the spiritual benefit derived from the attendance of the chaplains of their respective religions. There seems to be some difficulty in the existing law, which may probably go to deprive them of that benefit. Previous to their death, the poor inmates of this asylum often call for their clergy, and, in my opinion, it would be very desirable to have the matter settled. With respect to the admission of persons into the asylum who are not paupers, I proposed the following resolution on the last Board day—“Resolved, that the manager be directed, with the assistance of the other officers of the institution, to prepare a list of the inmates of the house, containing a statement of their means of being maintained out of their own resources, or by the aid of their friends, together with any other reliable information calculated to enable the Governors to relieve the rate-payers from their support, or subject them only to the partial maintenance of those inmates. There was a further resolution submitted by me to the following effect:—"Resolved, that the manager be directed to observe, and strictly carry out the sixth general rule for the future, by submitting each case of admission to the Board." Now it is rather a singular thing that up to the meeting held on Monday, 2nd February, we were under the impression that no one but paupers were admissible to the asylum, and that even if the friends of an insane person were disposed to pay for his maintenance, he should not be admitted. A great number of people cannot afford to send patients to metropolitan asylums, and abroad, where they would have to pay £30 or £40 a-year for them, and are therefore obliged to resort to the subterfuges I speak of, to get these persons admitted into the asylum. Many of those people told me they would be quite satisfied to pay the actual cost for their friends if they should be received, but we, being under the impression they could not be received for payment, sent them in here without paying any thing, the parties having stretched their consciences, and filled the forms in such a way as to get them admitted. When I brought the matter under the notice of Dr. White, on the last day of meeting, he said it was the custom in Ballinasloe and in other asylums, to admit them for whatever sum might be fixed upon by the Governors. That is another instance of the desirability of having an inspector to whom these cases could be referred, and the invidious task need not then be undertaken by the Governors. It is strange that we have been supporting people of that class without being made aware that we might receive payment for them. It would be well to have it understood for the future, whether we can charge, and whether we could charge them the entire cost of their maintenance, or leave it at the discretion of the Board to take a reduced sum.

State of the law respecting the admission of paying patients.

5750. I believe the law is silent on the subject, as to whether paying patients can be received or not into the district asylums?—I think it would be very well to have the law defined on that point, and I think it would be also well if we were enabled to receive such people. There are a great many persons who, from a creditable feeling, do not like to send in their relatives as paupers, and therefore submit to a great deal of inconvenience keeping them in their own houses; and it would not hurt the feelings of such people to send in their lunatic relatives to the asylum if payment was taken for them.

Charitable institution for poor patients

5751. Do not you consider that such cases are more properly subjects for a charitable institution?—I do not; there are some people well able to pay, and quite willing to pay the actual cost of maintenance.

5752. I refer to a charitable institution where they would be taken in at a reduced rate, the difference between that and the actual cost of maintenance being defrayed out of the funds of the charity?—I think the numbers I speak of are not sufficiently large for a district like Waterford. I think the ratepayers could be saved a good deal of the cost of the maintenance of some of the inmates.

Patients admitted
of the Board.

5753. Supposing paying patients to be admitted, do you consider the absolute pauper lunatic should have a prior claim to admission?—Oh, certainly; I do not consider you need increase the asylum very considerably. I believe the number of patients in it is 119 or 120, and I dare say the class of patients I speak of would not cause an increase of more than ten or fifteen per cent. At present when persons want to get a patient admitted, they have only to go before a magistrate and make the necessary affidavit, then get the certificate of the doctor, bring the papers here, and the case is received, and we hear no more about it. I do not recollect, in the course of my experience, any case being brought before us with reference to admission.

Council of Lunatics to the gaols.

5754. Are you aware that the Privy Council regulations contemplated quite a different order of things; that the Board should specially direct the admission of patients?—That is under the sixth general rule. I never had an opportunity of seeing it till the last day the Board met. With respect to cases admitted on the last Board day, there is a column for observation in the paper laid before us, and there was no observation made by any officer of the asylum. You asked a gentleman preceding me a question as to sending lunatics to gaols, and I think that so far as our goal is constituted at present, it is very objectionable to do so. I found a very great deal of difficulty in dealing with cases of dangerous lunatics from time to time. The prison arrangements are very imperfect, we have been for a long time endeavouring to have an amalgamation of these gaols, and if that amalgamation takes place, I suppose a better provision will be made for lunatics, but at present we have not a proper classification; and if a lunatic comes, they are obliged to send him in amongst the other prisoners. We have not a staff to take care of that class, and a good deal of danger is thereby caused. It is very difficult to deal with the case of a dangerous lunatic when taken up, for there is a great deal of formality to be gone through with reference to him; while if a person is not placed in custody, it is very awkward and likely to be attended with injury to the patient. In such cases, I think the Mayor ought to have the power of sending them to the district asylum, and not to the prison, where there are no arrangements made for the reception or care of such people. They should be sent to the district asylum for safe custody till disposed of. It is very easy, I believe, in country districts particularly, to get a certificate for the sending of a person into an asylum, and persons are sent who are really not fit subjects for such an institution. The Manager, instead of admitting all the cases on his own responsibility, ought to bring them before the physician. If they came from a distant place, I would give the power of immediate admission; but their friends should be given to understand that the admission was only provisional till the doctor decided upon the fitness of the person. I also wish to recommend very strongly the establishment of an infirmary.

Pierce Connolly, Esq., M.D., sworn and examined.

5755. I believe you are the visiting physician of the Waterford Lunatic Asylum?—Yes.

5756. How long have you held that office?—Since the 30th April last.

5757. Had you previously given your attention in any hospital to the treatment of the insane?—Yes; before I came here I was attached to Stevens' Hospital, and, therefore, almost in daily attendance at Swift's Lunatic Asylum.

5758. I believe, according to the practice which has hitherto prevailed in this asylum, you have been in the habit of admitting the patients who may have presented themselves, at your own discretion?—The manager does so; and afterwards, when I see the patient, if I think he is not a fit subject for the institution, he is dismissed.

5759. Have you had frequent occasion to represent that the person so admitted was not a fit subject for a lunatic asylum?—Yes.

5760. The manager of this asylum is not a professional man?—He is not.

5761. What is your opinion as to the propriety or otherwise of the manager of a lunatic asylum being a medical man?—I think it would be a judicious arrangement to have the manager a medical man. It is very often necessary to have a physician for consultation in a large asylum, and there are occasions when the asylum is put to great expense in procuring a consulting physician.

5762. Those occasions have arisen in this asylum?—Yes; particularly with respect to operations. If I have occasion to operate, then the assistance of a second medical man is required.

5763. Is there an apothecary attached to the establishment?—Yes.

5764. Does he reside in the house?—No.

5765. You are, of course, non-resident?—I am not resident.

5766. There is, therefore, no medical man of any kind resident in the asylum?—No.

5767. In case of attempted suicide, or any emergency requiring medical attendance, is there not an inconvenience in having no medical person on the spot?—The distance is very short, and the inconvenience is very little.

5768. Whatever inconvenience there is would be obviated by having a medical man resident?—Yes.

5769. In the event of the law being so altered as to require the manager to be a medical man, would you consider the attendance of a visiting physician still necessary?—Yes.

5770. To whom would you give the responsibility of treating the insane—to the resident or the visiting physician?—I should say, to the visiting physician.

5771. Would you say the visiting physician, who visits only three times a week, would be as competent to direct the treatment of the lunatics, as the resident physician, who has daily opportunities of seeing the patients?—He is only required to visit three times a week, but he is at liberty to visit every day in the week, which I am in the habit of doing. Under those circumstances, the visiting physician would be as competent as the resident.

5772. I believe the Privy Council regulations require the manager to inform himself of the condition of the several patients, and to consult with the visiting physician respecting them—is there much value in that consultation, when the manager is not a medical man?—I should say, not much. A great deal depends upon the medical man's opinion as to the employment that may be fit or suitable for patients; a great many patients might be employed in agricultural pursuits, who were not fit for them.

5773. It has been stated that there is no infirmary attached to this institution?—There is not.

5774. Have you felt any inconvenience from not having an infirmary?—Very great inconvenience.

5775. In case of epidemic disease breaking out, you are obliged to treat patients in the several wards?—Yes.

5776. Have you represented the necessity of an infirmary to the Board?—Yes.

5777. What classification exists in the institution?—We have six heads, under which we classify the patients—mania, monomania, melancholium, dementia, epilepsy, and idiocy.

5778. Am I to understand that the classification you have stated exists upon your list, but the patients are not disposed according to it in the several wards?—Yes; it is the classification upon the list.

5779. In the return which you have furnished, it appears that you considered about fifty patients out of the 131 in the asylum, on the 1st of January, to have been incurable?—Yes.

5780. Have many of those patients been here a considerable period?—A length of time; some were sent here from the old House of Industry.

5781. What time was the old House of Industry given up?—About twenty-two years ago.

5782. Are many of the class of incurable patients to which you have referred quiet?—No; but at the same time some of them are very useful in the institution.

5783. Is it your opinion that the district lunatic asylums of the country generally should be reserved for curable cases?—It might be better. A great many cases come in here that we know when they arrive are incurable.

5784. Supposing the wants of the district to be more than they appear to be in the county Waterford, would not the number of incurables in the asylum prevent the admission of curable cases who might otherwise be received and cured?—Certainly.

5785. Do you consider the incurable cases might be maintained at a lower rate than the average cost of patients in a lunatic asylum?—Yes. We sent some of the incurable patients from this institution to the poorhouse, where they are supported at a much lower rate than they could be in this institution.

Please Conolly, Esq., &c.
5786. A suggestion has been made to the Commissioners in the course of this inquiry that establishments should be created immediately adjoining lunatic asylums for the reception of those incurable cases, and it has been said that economy might be secured by the employment of the superior officers of the asylum for the government of the new institution; do you consider that to be practicable?—I think so, but I am not aware that there would be any great economy generally.
5787. Would not the medical attendants and superior officers, such as the manager and storekeeper, be available for both establishments?—Yes.
5788. Do you consider a workhouse a proper place for the detention of lunatics generally?—For incurables and idiots I think it is.
5789. Are not many of those incurable cases and idiots patients who may be easily excited if they are subjected to any annoyance?—Yes.
5790. Would not that be likely to take place in a workhouse?—Such persons we do not send there.
5791. In workhouses the lunatics must be left daily in charge of poorer attendants?—Yes.
5792. I presume you do not consider the attendance of such persons is likely to be as proper and as careful as the attendance of paid servants?—Certainly not.
- Discipline in goals.
 5793. What is your opinion as to the propriety of lunatics being detained in goals?—I think the sooner they are removed from goals to lunatic asylums of this description, the better. I understand that in goals when a patient becomes refractory he is likely to be restrained by straps, &c., and I do not think that is advisable.
- Restraint.
 5794. Is restraint much practised in this asylum?—Scarcely at all. I had a man named Coffey who was sent here from the goal a short time ago; he had been under restraint in the goal for eight or nine days, and on his coming into the asylum the restraint was taken off, and he became very quiet.
5795. Do you see that the instruments of restraint are kept in the custody of the manager?—They are.
5796. It is not, therefore, in the power of an attendant to apply restraint without his authority?—It is not, except at night, when it is optional with the attendants to use restraint.
5797. I presume every case in which restraint might be found necessary at night would be reported to you?—Certainly, in the morning statement book. I enter it myself in my daily report.
- Occupation and amusements.
 5798. Are any amusements or occupations provided for the patients?—Yes, they are employed in agricultural pursuits, in tailoring, and shoemaking. There is a ball-alley attached to the institution, where they amuse themselves, and they have also music; some play the violin, others the fife, and they amuse themselves with a dance.
5799. Are any books or papers given them for amusement?—Yes.
5800. I suppose you consider amusement a very essential agency in the curative treatment of insanity?—The class of curable patients who are employed in cleaning the house, or engaged in other pursuits, we are always sure to send out cured.
- Proportion of cures and deaths for the Asylum.
 5801. Are you enabled to tell the Commissioners generally what has been the proportion of cures within the last twelve months?—Something under thirty per cent.—about twenty-nine.
5802. Is the proportion of deaths considerable or otherwise?—It is under six per cent.
5803. Are there proper baths throughout the establishment?—Yes.
5804. Are precautions taken that the shower-baths cannot be used without your authority?—Yes.
- The dietary.
 5805. Are you satisfied with the dietary afforded to the patients generally?—I think nothing can be better than the dietary generally for such an institution. It is optional with me to improve it for any individual patient.
5806. How frequently is meat given to patients in the week?—Generally three times, but to those that work it is given every day except Friday. For instance, if a man is employed on the farm he gets meat every day except Friday—half-a-pound of meat boiled down into a pint of broth, with vegetables, and ten ounces of bread. Those that do not work get ten ounces of bread and a pint of skim-milk for dinner.
- School instruction.
 5807. It has been stated that there is no school, and that there is no instruction afforded to any of the patients?—There is not.
5808. Do you consider that a want?—Well, I think it would be advisable if there was a school. There was a school here for some time, and I heard that it fell away.
5809. Would you desire to see the school again established?—Certainly.
5810. I presume a certain proportion of the inmates are unable to read or write?—A great many.
5811. Besides the value of the instruction, it would be in itself an employment to the patients?—Certainly.
- Chaplain.
 5812. What is your opinion as to the advantage of chaplains being attached to the institution?—Well, since I came here there was scarcely a patient died who was not most anxious to have the chaplain. At the present moment there is a patient very ill who requires the attendance of the chaplain, and asks most anxiously for him.
5813. But independently of the chaplain's attendance upon patients in an extreme state, is it your opinion the constant ministrations of chaplains is desirable or otherwise?—I think it is most desirable to have chaplains attached to the institution.
- Ventilation.
 5814. Do you consider the arrangements for ventilating the house generally, and the cells, sufficient?—I think so.

5815. Is there any suggestion you would wish to make to us with reference to our inquiry?—Except on the necessity of having an infirmary. I have found it a great inconvenience to patients to have them treated in the wards. Some time ago a woman died of consumption, and the other patients in the room were kept awake by her, and the effect was very injurious.

The Rev. Patrick Wall, M.P. of Ardmore, sworn and examined.

5816. I believe you are the Roman Catholic chaplain of the Waterford District Asylum?—I am.

5817. Have you been long in that capacity?—About six years and seven months.

5818. What proportion of the Roman Catholic inmates are enabled to benefit by your religious ministrations?—Between sixty and seventy is the average attendance at Mass.

5819. From your experience as chaplain of the institution, are you satisfied that the attendance of a chaplain is essential in an establishment of this kind?—Certainly; but I must observe I have had now a good deal of experience, and from that experience I think that a prudent and sensible clergyman is necessary in dealing with insane persons; one who will take pains with them will do good with them. Much will depend upon the cause of the disease of the patient. If a man be insane from any malformation of the brain or any organic cause, a priest can do nothing towards his cure; but if the insanity arises from other causes, such as intemperance in eating or drinking, a priest's interference will have a good effect. I consider the insanity of a great number of the patients arises from various causes acting on the mind. It may be produced by despair of salvation, owing to some real or imaginary sin, and in such a case the ministrations of a clergyman are of the highest importance. And the same is the case with parties whose mental affliction has arisen from vicious habits. In fact, wherever the disease has arisen from mental causes, such as I have stated, or reverse of fortune, or distress, the ministrations of a clergyman will be productive of the greatest service in promoting the cure, as well as in a spiritual point of view.

5820. From what you have stated, I gather that you find very considerable prudence and discretion required on the part of a person performing the duties of chaplain?—Yes, he must be a man of general experience.

5821. Have you had many cases where you were informed by the authorities of the asylum that further communication at the time with a patient was not desirable?—None.

5822. Would you be governed by the direction of the medical officer of the asylum if he stated it would not be conducive to the restoration of a patient's health that you should at that time communicate with him on religious matters?—A great deal would depend upon the opinion I formed myself as to the state of mind of the patient, and of the motive of the medical officer. What I wish to convey by my answer is substantially, that if I was satisfied the medical officer gave the direction not to communicate with the patient because of an opinion entertained by him as a medical man, that such communication would be injurious to the mental condition of the patient, I would be guided by him, and would not interfere with that patient.

5823. Are you satisfied with the arrangements which are made for the celebration of Divine service?—I am not. I wish that some place were set apart for religious service, and also that vestments and the requisites for our worship would be procured. I was obliged myself to provide those matters.

5824. Are religious books provided for the members of your persuasion?—No, indeed; and it would be very desirable that they were.

5825. Have you made applications to the Board on the subject?—I made application, perhaps, three or four years ago for the vestments, and I was then refused. Having been once refused, I did not think it right to apply for other matters.

5826. Is it your practice to preach on Sundays, or to deliver any discourse to the patients?—No; it would excite them, perhaps, to address them in a body. Whatever influence I can exercise upon them for their benefit is privately, in the confessional, where I can see the state of the mind, and act in a prudent manner accordingly. If a patient comes to me a second time with the same story in a week or fortnight, I can see that that patient's mind is not so bad as it may otherwise appear—that is, the repetition of the same statement would show a coherent state of mind, and I could deal with the person accordingly.

5827. Do you consider it would be advisable that a school should be established in the asylum?—I do. However, a great deal would depend upon the teacher; he, too, should be a very prudent man, and take care never to interfere with their religious feelings.

5828. Did the breaking up of the school which existed here arise from any thing of that kind?—That was before my time.

Thomas L. Mackery, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S., sworn and examined.

5829. I believe you are a medical practitioner in the city of Waterford?—Yes.

5830. Have you turned your attention a good deal to the provision which the law makes for the insane poor?—Yes.

5831. Do you consider it advisable that an asylum should be so regulated as to afford, at all times, the opportunity of admitting any acute cases that might present themselves?—The same as in a surgical hospital; when an acute case is presented for admission into an establishment like this, there should be accommodation for it.

5832. Will you state more fully the advantages which you consider would arise from that arrangement?—I think the treatment of the disease in its early stages affords a chance of recovery, much more so than if there is delay.

pauper lunatics, but who cannot pay the cost in private asylums.The resident Manager a medical man;
Visiting Physician.Responsibility for treatment.Want of an infirmary.

5833. Is it equally true that the detention of an insane patient in an unsuitable establishment, such as a gaol, would retard his recovery?—I do not attend the gaol. I am quite satisfied the medical officer there gives every assistance when a case goes in; but I am also satisfied that what you state occurs, because they have not the appliances or means of treating acute cases in a gaol, such as are to be found in institutions devoted to the treatment of such cases.

5834. Do you entertain the same opinion as regards workhouses?—I do.

5835. Do you consider that the district asylums should be maintained merely as curative hospitals?—I do.

5836. What provision do you consider should be made for incurable pauper lunatics?—That is a question I have not turned my attention so much to.

5837. Is it your opinion that there is a considerable portion of the lunatics over Ireland who are in circumstances, though removed from pauperism, that would not admit of their paying the sum required for their maintenance in private asylums?—I know, in my own private practice, several cases to whom I am quite satisfied much disadvantage has resulted from the want of proper attention. Their friends could not get them admitted into this asylum, because they could not make the necessary declaration of poverty, and yet their means were such that they could not pay for them in private asylums.

5838. I believe, with the exception of Swift's Hospital, and the Bloomsfield Retreat belonging to the Society of Friends, there is no charitable institution for such cases in this country?—None other that I am aware of; and there is a difficulty in getting admitted into them.

5839. What provision do you consider the State is called on to make for those cases?—My idea was, that if they could be admitted into these curative hospitals on moderate terms, it would be well. I was at one time considering whether it might not be advisable to have separate establishments for those cases; but I am afraid the arrangement would be open to great abuse, and would, probably, interfere with private asylums; but I conceive that the circumstance of such persons being placed in some degree amongst paupers would be a certain guarantee that no one would apply for admission but those who absolutely required it. I should hope that this regulation, although there might be some disadvantage from placing persons who had moved in better society with persons who were of inferior position, would obviate that difficulty. It is impossible to arrange an institution on a large scale without some disadvantage.

5840. With reference to the management of district lunatic asylums, is it your opinion the resident manager should be a medical man?—I think he should; but, in giving that opinion, I beg to say I do not think that should supersede the having a visiting physician. I think it would be difficult to get a medical man to take charge of such an establishment who would be sufficiently educated to render unnecessary the attendance of a second physician. It would be also a disadvantage that the medical man in charge of such an establishment, not having medical practice, might get into a certain routine. In giving my opinion in favour of having a resident medical manager, I do not think it would be by any means judicious to do away with a visiting physician.

5842. With whom would you be disposed to leave the responsibility of treating the cases—with the visiting physician or the resident medical manager?—With the visiting physician.

5843. Do you consider that the asylum, as at present conducted, affords adequate means for effectually treating insanity?—I should say so, provided there is always accommodation for such cases. There is one respect in which I think it is deficient, and that is, in not having an infirmary ward for treating acute or contagious diseases that might arise.

5844. Do you think sufficient recreation or amusement is provided for the patients?—I have not visited often; but whenever I did visit, I found every thing most orderly and regular; and I visited at uncertain periods.

5845. What is your opinion as to the importance of religious ministrations of chaplains in cases of insanity?—Not being a Governor, or connected with the institution in any one way, I do not think I can give an opinion.

Mr. Thomas Keary.

Mr. Thomas Keary sworn and examined.

5846. I believe you are clerk and store-keeper to this asylum?—Yes.

5847. Do you reside in the asylum?—No.

5848. Have you received the permission of the Board of Governors to reside out of the asylum?—Yes.

5849. How long have you held your present office?—Nearly nine years.

5850. Did you receive that permission on being appointed to the office?—Yes.

5851. Do you receive into your charge all the stores and articles that are brought to the asylum for consumption?—Every thing that is received for use comes into my hands.

5852. What check have you upon the issue of those articles subsequently?—The ledger, and the accounts, which agree with the quantity entered in the ledger.

5853. Do the matron and the other officers, on receiving stores from you, give you a receipt for the same?—No.

5854. Are you always present yourself to issue the stores?—Yes; I issue the stores.

Receipt and issue of stores.

5855. When articles are made up in the female department, are they handed over into your custody?—They are, and they receive the mark of the institution before they are issued.

Witnessed.

5856. Whenever articles of clothing are issued by you in order to replace those worn out, do you always require the old articles to be given up?—I always require every one of them to be given up.

Penitentiary District
Asylum,
Mr. Thomas Henry.

5857. How are they disposed of?—They are sold as worn-out stores.

5858. What they realize is, of course, brought to the credit of the institution?—Yes.

Hours of attendance.

5859. What are your hours of attendance?—There are no specified hours. I am here early in the morning; I go to breakfast, and remain away about an hour; at dinner-time also about an hour; and I remain then at the institution till it is dark in the evening, generally.

5860. Do you attend at the time of meals, to see that the patients get a proper allowance?—Frequently.

5861. Who keeps the accounts of the produce of the farm?—I do.

5862. Are the seeds required for the farm received by you?—The order is written by me, from the direction of the manager, Captain Dobbs, and the gardener receives them into his charge; he has a place for keeping them.

The farm.

5863. Is there a separate account kept of the produce of the farm?—There is, showing the expenditure and profit.

5864. Are the supplies for the use of the asylum furnished by contract?—Not all the supplies.

Contracts.

5865. What are the principal supplies not furnished by contract?—Straw, new clothing of any description, new bedding of any description, or works done in the house.

5866. Is any made-up clothing received into the establishment, or is all the clothing made up in the establishment?—We have had all the clothing made up in the establishment for the patients—the tailoring, and so on.

Clothing made up in the Asylum.

5867. Is the material of which the clothing is made up furnished by contract?—No.

5868. Has that been always the case?—Always.

5869. Is there any particular reason for that?—No.

5870. Is the leather for the making up of shoes furnished by contract?—Not now.

5871. The contracts seem to be principally for provisions?—For provisions.

5872. Are the articles for the use of the sick patients—wine and such things—supplied by contract?—Groceries are, but not wine and spirits.

Issue of extras.

5873. Have you charge of the supplies of these articles as well as of what is furnished by contract?—Yes, of every thing in the house.

5874. To whom do you issue the wine which may be required?—To the person in charge of each division.

5875. Upon what authority?—That of the manager and physician. When I say that, it is because the manager is aware that such is issued.

5876. Are tenders for contracts invited by public advertisement?—They are.

5877. Do you exercise any superintendence over the keepers, nurses, and servants?—I do, next to the manager.

Duties of Store-keepers.

5878. Have you an inventory of all the property in the house belonging to the Governors, of bedding, furniture, clothing, &c.?—I have, with the exception of a few articles which the manager has.

5879. Are you enabled to tell at any time what is in charge of the several keepers in the different wards?—Yes.

5880. Do you take stock annually?—Yearly of all articles; monthly of those in store.

5881. Do you keep an account as against each of the servants, of all the things in his or her charge?—Yes, and an account showing every month what is in store.

5882. Are any potatoes used in the establishment?—No.

Consumption of vegetables.

5883. Has that been always the practice?—Not always; some years ago they were used, when they were cheap.

5884. Do the patients get vegetables frequently in the week?—They do, every day that soup is made.

5885. Are these vegetables the produce of the farm?—Yes; we never purchase any. I wish to remark, that the duties I have to perform in this institution are very responsible. I am constant in my attendance, and I think it should be taken into consideration that I have to live outside, there being no apartments in the house for me. The salary is only £55 a-year, and I think it is insufficient. I would, if I were residing in the house, be allowed coal, and candles, and such perquisites; and by residing outside, I am deprived of those, and I am obliged to live very near the asylum, and pay rent out of the sum I have mentioned. The whole of the office business devolves upon me.

The Rev. Martin Flynn, F.R., Trinity Without, sworn and examined.

Rev. Martin Flynn,
F.R.

5886. Have you been long a Governor of this asylum?—About a year and a-half.

5887. Do you attend regularly the meetings of the Board?—As often as I can.

5888. Have you been present when the question of erecting a new infirmary was discussed?—I was.

Chapel and infirmary accommodations.

5889. Was the propriety of any additional chapel accommodation under consideration also?—Yes.

5890. Has the matter been finally disposed of by the Board?—I believe not. It was suggested and recommended by the Board, as far as their opinion went, that both an infirmary and a chapel should be built. The chapel, at present, is very inferior indeed; it is a room occasionally used for a chapel, and during the week for other purposes; and I think there ought to be a distinct apartment permanently set apart as a chapel.

5891. The room at present used for Divine worship on Sundays is, during the week, appropriated to other purposes?—Yes.

5892. What is your opinion as to the advisability of a school being established in the institution?—I think it would be very desirable and very useful.

5893. The Commissioners have received a good deal of evidence with reference to a class of patients not absolutely paupers, but whose means are not sufficient to enable them to be maintained in private asylums—does your experience in this district enable you to say that they are a considerable class?—I know that there are persons in this asylum whose friends and relatives could afford to pay for them.

5894. Do you consider that a charitable institution, for the maintenance of persons who would not be able to pay the full amount requisite for their support, would be a great boon?—I do.

5895. Do you consider that, in a public institution supported out of the rates, an absolute pauper lunatic should have the preference for admission before any paying patient?—I do.

5896. Is there any indisposition on the part of the poorer classes of this country to commit their friends to the charge of the authorities in lunatic asylums?—I think not. I think there is a great willingness to have them in asylums.

Extent of insanity in the county.

5897. It has been stated in the Police returns, which are appended to the Seventh Report of the Inspectors-General of Lunatic Asylums, that there are 143 of various classes of lunatics at large in the county of Waterford; do you consider these lunatics being at large arises in any degree from an indisposition to send them to the lunatic asylum?—It does not. The return surprised me.

5898. I presume the return includes all weak-minded persons?—I presume it does; I do not know upon what it is founded. From my knowledge of the district around here, the number astonished me.

5899. Nothing has arisen at the Board, in the shape of very numerous applications, that would lead you to believe there was a large demand for admission into the institution?—No; there are generally vacancies for all that apply. It very rarely happens, as far as I am aware of, that any one applying is refused.

Paying patients.

5900. Do you consider that any danger might arise, if paying patients were admitted, that after a while the payments might be discontinued, and the patients be left a charge upon the district?—No; I conceive that none should be received as paying patients whose relatives could not be compelled by law to pay for them. I do not think a matter of that kind should be left to the mere discretion of friends; they should be bound by some legal obligation to pay for them.

5901. Is there any thing else you would wish to mention to the Commissioners?—Nothing more than to particularly request their attention to what has been stated relative to the chapel and infirmary.

CLONMEL, 13th FEBRUARY, 1857.

CLONMEL DISTRICT ASYLUM.

Stephen Moore, Esq., M.D. and J.P., sworn and examined.

Clonmel District Asylum.

Stephen Moore, Esq., M.D. and J.P.

5902. Have you been for many years a Governor of this asylum?—Since the commencement.

5903. That was, I believe, about the year 1834?—Yes.

5904. The asylum is, I believe, one for the whole county of Tipperary?—Yes, one for the North and South Ridings of Tipperary.

5905. Have you been a constant attendant at the meetings of the Board?—Yes.

5906. Have there been many occasions on which a Board was not held, in consequence of the non-attendance of the members?—Very few indeed. There may have been some. I never was here that there was not a Board formed; in general, I am sure there is a good attendance.

Attendance of Governors.

5907. Are many Governors resident in the North Riding of the county?—There are some, I believe; but I cannot say exactly how many.

5908. Do you find the attendance of Governors is chiefly of those who reside in the vicinity of Clonmel?—Chiefly.

5909. Is there any visiting committee appointed by the Governors, to see that their orders are carried out?—It is a general rule amongst the Governors to come occasionally to see how things are going on. I do not know exactly whether there is any committee. It is a general understanding amongst the Governors, that they do take every opportunity of visiting.

5910. Do the Inspectors of Asylums attend the Board generally as members?—Always when they come.

5911. Do they take part in the proceedings of the Board?—Generally.

5912. What is your opinion as to the propriety, or otherwise, of the Inspectors being members of the local Board?—I think if the Board were left to themselves, they would do as well. They may suggest things, which we sometimes carry out, and sometimes do not.

The Inspectors as members of the Board.

5913. Does one or other of the Inspectors generally attend the meetings of the Board?—Not very often.

5914. Do they vote when a division takes place at the Board?—Generally. They have a right to do so.

5915. Has there been any considerable demand for admission into the asylum of late?—No; I do not think there was. We have not rejected any.

Demand for admission into the Asylum.

5916. Is it your opinion that the present asylum is adequate for the wants of the lunatic poor of the county of Tipperary?—Well, I think we might add a few beds more, for the taking in of criminal lunatics. We find that could be done at little expense.

5917. You mean lunatics who are in gaols?—Yes; dangerous lunatics.

5918. Has the question of the enlargement of the asylum occupied the attention of the Board of Governors?—A good deal.

5919. In what position does the question at present stand?—Some of us went round and examined the building, and there is a plan laid before us by our manager in reference to it. The thing could be done at little expense, which we consider it our duty to the county to do; for we found that, by raising the roof of some of the houses, and building additional apartments, we could add about sixty beds for a very small sum of money, and make the place perfectly comfortable, and sufficient to give all the accommodation required.

5920. Were the plans for the enlargement of the asylum submitted to the executive Government?—They were.

5921. Have they been approved?—They were not exactly approved, because the Government wanted to have a great deal more enlargement than was absolutely necessary. I should state that this case was laid before the Grand Jury of the county, of which I was foreman at the time. We memorialised the Lord Lieutenant to give effect to what was done. At the same time there was a specification sent down from Dublin, which would cost the county an enormous sum of money; and, whilst it would put the county to immense expense, it would not do much good.

5922. I believe, in the present state of the law, any works to be carried out for the enlargement of the asylum, should be executed by the Commissioners of General Control and Correspondence?—That is so. I think we might make an enlargement that would give sufficient room, for much less expense than what I know to have been incurred in other asylums.

Execution of new works; state of the law.

5923. Do you consider the local Board more competent than, or as competent as the General Board of Superintendence in Dublin, to execute such works?—I really think that the local Board, with the attention I know they always pay here to matters of the kind, are quite competent for the purpose, particularly as it is their duty to relieve the county from as much expense as they can, in order to lower the taxation.

5924. I believe, as the law at present stands with regard to the building of new asylums, that the decision ultimately rests with the central authority in Dublin?—Certainly.

5925. Are you satisfied with that state of the law?—Certainly not. We considered that the specification sent down would put the county to great expense, and that it was our duty,

- CLARENCE.

- as men holding large property in the county, and from a regard to the tenants of the county, to see that we were relieved as much as possible from extra expenditure.
5925. I believe the county prisons are entirely under the direction of the local authorities?—Entirely, and very properly.
5927. Has it ever been under consideration to establish a second asylum in the North Riding of the county Tipperary?—It was never mooted to us. I consider this quite sufficient for the two Ridings.
5928. I believe that a considerable addition to the quantity of ground belonging to the asylum has been made within the last few years?—Yes.
5929. Is that land principally used for the employment of the inmates?—Yes; and very beneficially.
5930. I believe that, under the present state of the law, the Grand Jurors are called on to present a certificate to the authorities in Dublin for the expenditure that has taken place?—Yes.
5931. Has any desire been expressed by the Grand Jurors from time to time, to receive more detailed information with reference to expenditure?—Every thing is laid clearly before the Grand Jury, and as one of the Grand Jury, I never found it necessary to make any statement with a view to economy.
5932. Do you consider it would be advisable to make any alteration in the manner in which the Governors are appointed for this asylum?—Some people wish to leave every thing to the Grand Jury; others are satisfied with things as they are. If I was to give my opinion, I think the Grand Jury are the most competent, from their knowledge of the county.
5933. What is your opinion as to an arrangement by which the Grand Jury would be allowed to name a certain number of members of the Board, the executive Government being still left the power of appointing Governors also?—The Grand Jury, in the cases where they have the power of selection, such as for the Board of Superintendence, generally select the names of those whom they consider to be the most efficient, and most attentive, and who would be most regular in their attendance; and I think the Grand Jury would do the same as regards the asylum.
- Manager.
 5934. I believe the gentleman who holds the office of manager of this asylum is a medical man?—He is.
- Chaplain.
 5935. Does that arrangement work satisfactorily?—Yes.
5936. Are there any chaplains appointed to this institution?—There are, a Protestant and a Roman Catholic Chaplain.
5937. Has that been always the case?—Not until lately.
5938. Has the appointment of chaplains, in your opinion, been beneficial or otherwise?—Well I was against their appointment, because I did not consider chaplains necessary for people in the condition of the inmates of the asylum.
5939. Is there any place of worship connected with the institution?—No; there is no place of worship.
- The paying patients.
 5940. Are paying patients received into this institution?—No; at least, we have none. There are pensioners here, but they are not paid for.
5941. I believe you are also a member of the Board of Superintendence?—I am.
- Detection of lunatics in goal.
 5942. Have you from time to time had many lunatics detained in the Clonmel goal?—Sometimes more, and sometimes less, not to any great extent—fifteen or eighteen.
5943. Have those lunatics been for any considerable period in the goal?—Sometimes; not very long, indeed.
5944. Have you had complaints of lunatics in goals interfering with the discipline?—We have them separated, and we have people appointed to take care of them.
5945. What is your opinion as to the capability of the goal for the curative treatment of the insane?—That is a question I would not like to answer. The doctor of our asylum is the doctor also of our goal, and I am sure the lunatics in the goal are treated in the best possible manner.
5946. Are all the lunatics, no matter what their state may be, in one department of the goal?—I believe there is a particular place set apart for them. Within the last four days we appointed an extra female to attend female lunatics.
5947. But the lunatics in a prison, whether violent or otherwise, would be detained in the same ward with the others?—I cannot exactly say that.
- Dangerous Lunatic Act.
 5948. What is your opinion with reference to the Dangerous Lunatic Act—do you consider it advisable there should be a power to commit lunatics direct to the goal?—My opinion is, that some magistrates take upon them more than they ought—that is, that they commit people whom they ought not to commit. I have known instances of the kind.
5949. Are you a member of the Board of Guardians of the Clonmel Union?—I am.
5950. Have you experienced any difficulty in the asylum in getting the friends of patients to remove them?—Sometimes they take a longer time than at others to remove them, but in general I believe they are removed pretty soon.
- Paying patients.
 5951. You have stated that no paying patients have been received into the asylum except pensioners?—Yes.
5952. What is your opinion as to the propriety of accommodation being provided for persons who would pay a portion of the cost of their maintenance but not the entire?—I think in this country very few people would wish to pay; I know there has been a person admitted in here who ought to pay.
5953. Have any difficulties arisen with regard to the removal of lunatics who may be detained in goal on the Lord Lieutenant's warrant as dangerous lunatics?—No; you can, however, get more information on that point from others.

5954. Is there any thing in reference to the inquiry with which the Commissioners are entrusted that as a member of the Board of Governors you would wish to bring before us?—No; I am perfectly satisfied with the management of the asylum, except, as I said before, it would be desirable to have a few more beds to increase the accommodation without putting the county to much expense.

James Flynn, Esq., M.D., sworn and examined.

5955. What office do you hold in connexion with this asylum?—At present I am manager and resident physician.

5956. How long have you held these appointments?—I have been manager since the 7th August, 1841, and resident physician since the 14th October, 1840.

5957. There is also a visiting physician attached to the asylum?—There is.

5958. What arrangement is made between you and the visiting physician as to the medical charge of the establishment?—When I was appointed resident medical officer by letter from the Lunacy Office in Dublin Castle, Dr. Shiels received a letter also at the same time, and he said to me, "Dr. Flynn, you are now resident physician, and you get the charge of the institution in your medical capacity." From that out he and I have gone on in the best manner together: I take the ordinary charge of the patients, sick and well; he visits three times a-week, as the day-book shows, and at all hours, night or day, whenever I have occasion to call on him; I have sent for him at unreasonable hours, and he has always attended; there has been a most cordial and united co-operation on his part and on mine, not only medically but otherwise.

5959. You conduct the curative treatment of the insane, Dr. Shiels acting as consulting physician?—Yes.

5960. And in like manner with reference to the bodily treatment of patients, apart from insanity, you take charge of that, consulting Dr. Shiels?—Yes; always directing his attention to any thing that might be serious, and he and I consult together about it.

5961. You consider, therefore, the direct responsibility of treatment rests with yourself?—I do; the Governors think so too.

5962. Is there an infirmary attached to the institution?—Two rooms have been built within the last eight or nine years by the Board of Works, which serve as an infirmary when required. One is now used for three male patients—on the female side there is no infirmary. We have rarely any sickness. The apartment, from the pressure of patients, is used at the present moment as a sleeping room.

5963. At the present moment are patients treated in their separate cells?—At the present moment there is one, but extraordinary cases are treated in the infirmary.

5964. What is your opinion as to the propriety of treating cases in separate cells?—If a patient be very noisy and extremely dirty, you must treat him in a separate cell rather than in a room where there are five or six other patients.

5965. Are there any means of warming or heating those cells?—None, except the fire-places in the corridors.

5966. Is not a patient left entirely to himself except when occasionally visited by the nurses?—Yes.

5967. In the ordinary infirmary the presence of the nurses is constant?—I would say constant. There are only three attendants, the sick nurse and two attendants. On the male side there is a man exclusively devoted to the attendance on the sick.

5968. Do you discharge fully the duties of civil manager, as prescribed by the Privy Council regulations?—Yes, as well as I can do so.

5969. Do you keep a general registry containing all the particulars of cases admitted into the asylum?—The clerk enters them from the admission papers. I hold myself responsible for them.

5970. The book is regularly kept?—Regularly kept; I am ready to produce it.

5971. In the case of patients received under Lord Lieutenant's warrants from gaols, have you any means of filling up that book to any extent?—None, except what may be stated from the gaols; no particulars come with these cases, except what is contained in the warrant.

5972. Do you consider that a disadvantage?—A manifest disadvantage.

5973. What means have you of obtaining any knowledge of the previous history of the case?—No means whatever. You may get a rambling statement from some friends of the patients who may come here with them, but that very rarely occurs in the case of patients from gaols. There is a visitors' book to show when friends come to the institution. The gate porter enters their visits on the visiting days.

5974. What is the ordinary practice with regard to admissions—are the patients admitted by the Board?—Generally speaking there are three modes of admission here, by the Board, by his Excellency's warrant, and urgent cases by Dr. Shiels and myself. We are extremely chary in admitting patients, unless required by two, or, perhaps, more Governors, or magistrates of the county, stating that it is an extremely urgent and sudden case, likely to get well after a short time.

5975. In cases of patients admitted by yourself and the visiting physician, is the usual entry made upon the order of admission of the particular circumstances?—Invariably.

5976. In ordinary cases the admission papers are brought before the Board?—Yes; the admission papers are laid on the table by Dr. Shiels, and if he is not present by me. I advise the Board to the best of my ability when a vacancy occurs. The Board take no trouble unless a vacancy is reported.

CLERICAL.

Chapel District
Asylum.

James Flynn, Esq.,
M.D.

Discharge or removal of patients; bonds;
and patients.

Proportion of applications from the two ridings of the county.

5077. Is it usual to make inquiries as to the means of a patient, to ascertain whether he is in circumstances enabling him to pay?—An affidavit being made, that precludes all inquiry. I am aware loose statements might be made as to the means of the friends of patients. However, it is a delicate thing to question an affidavit sworn by parties, and supposed to be signed by a magistrate. We have no option here, presuming that document to be correctly filled.

5078. With regard to the discharge of patients, have any difficulties arisen in securing their removal from the asylum?—Yes; the bond of removal is supposed to be signed by some person binding himself under the penalty of £10 to remove the patient. This bond is frequently signed by a member of the patient's family, who comes with him; and that person is frequently poorer and more destitute than the patient admitted. As a penal document, the bond is, therefore, of no value; and when the time of removal comes round the person who signed it may, perhaps, be in America, or may be dead. Then a difficulty arises with respect to the patient; the Board of Guardians will not receive him into the workhouse, because he is not actually destitute; and no remedy remains but to send him to the district from which he was received. Cases from gaols are so peculiar, and generally so destitute, that I never, on my own responsibility, discharge a gaol patient. The usual course is to make inquiry as to the district from which the patient came, and send him to that barony or parish, and leave him to work his way as well as he possibly can.

5079. Do you find that the number of applicants for admission into this asylum is greater from the South than from the North Riding?—In truth, we have few, if any applications, from the North Riding. They generally send their patients to the gaol; for it would involve a very heavy expenditure on a poor peasant to bring a lunatic relative thirty, or forty, or fifty miles here. I got a letter, perhaps from a magistrate, or a clergyman, or a country gentleman, requesting me to send him a form of admission. I forward it; he requests at the same time to know whether there is any vacancy; and if I state in my reply, there is no vacancy, I never hear any thing more of the case.

5080. I understand, then, that the lunatics in the asylum from the North Riding are usually lunatics who have been committed from the gaol there?—Generally speaking; in fact, latterly we received none, except in that way, from the North Riding.

5081. I presume that explains why, amongst the inmates of the asylum on the 1st of January last, out of 141, only thirty-seven were from the North Riding?—It may partially explain it.

5082. Have you many lunatics here now belonging to the old house of industry?—I would say about twelve. I cannot speak precisely as to the number.

5083. Are those lunatics classed as South Riding lunatics?—When the present Lord Donnell got the Privy Council to separate the county into ridings, I took the most anxious pains to ascertain where every person in the asylum came from, so far as the ridings are concerned. I wrote to magistrates, clergymen, and every one from whom I could get information, when I could not trace where the parties came from; and I classified them for the North and South Ridings, according to the answers I got. I should explain that there are wandering lunatics taken up, who do not belong to the county; and my belief is that there are three in the house at present that belong to other districts. I know one man who belongs to Cork, and another to the Limerick district.

5084. Have these cases been transferred, on the Lord Lieutenant's warrant, from the gaols?—Yes.

Morning Statement
Book.

Restraint.

5085. Is the Morning Statement Book regularly kept?—Yes.

5086. Are the cases of restraint duly entered?—There is no case of restraint in this house but one, and that is done under the sanction of the Board, in consequence of the patient's terrible propensities. He has one arm confined to a belt, in order to prevent him from committing murder on the attendants or patients.

5087. Is that restraint duly entered in the Morning Statement Book?—It has been entered the first of every month, and repeated through the month. The case is a notorious one.

5088. Describe the restraint?—A small chain round his waist; a belt with six or seven small hooks, to give him liberty, or to loosen it, and a clasp around his wrist to prevent his climbing.

5089. Has he been guilty of very great violence since his removal to the asylum?—Yes, before and since. He was admitted in September, 1841, shortly after my appointment. He came with a terrible character; and Dr. Shiels and myself resolved to give him every possible fair play, and we put no restraint upon him. He escaped, and got down the town, and committed violence; was brought back by the police, and we put him under restraint for some time. He made promises of amendment, was relieved from the restraint, and we put him to work at his trade as a shoemaker. Dr. Shiels and I ordered him tea, and a little ale sometimes. Then he broke out and committed other depredations. He got out of the asylum, and was throwing stones at every one; was taken up, and put again under restraint. After the lapse of six months I had him again relieved from the restraint, and let him go about, gave him books and every thing to amuse him; but he broke out once more, got up upon the roof, and began throwing slates down on me. Some of the men went up after him, and amongst the rest the clerk, whose skull he fractured, and the poor man is labouring under partial paralysis. Since that he has been put under that one-arm restraint I have described, with the full sanction of Dr. Shiels and the Board.

5090. Is he under that restraint during the night?—It is taken off about four or five o'clock every evening. He gets his supper, with two men standing by, and he is put to bed; at seven or eight o'clock in the morning it is put on. He is walked out, and he gets a book or a newspaper to read.

5991. Is there any padded room in the asylum?—No.

5992. What is your opinion as to the advisability of having such a room?—I have had no experience of it in this house; but I have heard it highly spoken of by medical gentlemen and others elsewhere, and in England, where I visited.

5993. Is seclusion practised?—Very little. We quietly remove a patient to a room for a few hours—one of the usual bed-rooms, with no furniture in it. I visit the patient and remove him when he is quiet. Instances have been known of patients breaking a piece of iron off the bed, and striking with it, or putting it through the hole where the inspection plate is. I am an advocate for non-restraint. I have a patient who was in an iron crib in Fort Clarence for years.

5994. Do you keep a minute book of the proceedings of the Board?—The Board have me in attendance, and I keep the Minute Book.

5995. Where are the communications which may be made by the Inspectors to the Board recorded?—In the Visitors' Book. [Same is produced.]

5996. This book appears to contain the minutes made by the Inspectors on the occasion of their visits?—Yes.

5997. My question had reference to communications by letter to the Board of Governors?—They are laid before the Board, and afterwards entered in the Minute Book. The letters are very few.

5998. Am I to understand that there is no separate letter book kept?—There is a separate letter book, where letters are entered, and memoranda taken of letters received and issued.

5999. Have you any book that contains memoranda of matters to which you may desire to call the attention of the Board?—There is a book that is supplemental to the Minute Book; it is called the Manager's Memorandum Book.

6000. Is there a Medical Journal kept in this asylum?—There is.

6001. As you have the charge of the medical treatment of the patients in the house, are you enabled to keep all these various books, and discharge efficiently the civil duties of Manager?—I have a clerk.

6002. Is that clerk in addition to the ordinary clerk and storekeeper?—No.

6003. Do you daily visit all parts of the institution?—Yes, several times a-day. Some days I might be ill. There is scarcely a day passes that I do not visit the patients, and some patients I visit four or five times in the day.

6004. How frequently in the year do the Inspectors visit the institution?—Perhaps twice; sometimes three times. I only speak from memory. The 4th July is the last entry of Dr. Nugent; 31st of October, of Dr. White. Dr. Nugent was here four or five weeks ago, and there is no entry of that visit.

6005. The Inspectors therefore do not make a memorandum of their visit on each occasion?—I cannot charge my memory with any they have not entered except two.

6006. Are their visits made upon notice?—I never received any notice. On one occasion I requested Dr. White to come down about some disputes with contractors, and he came.

6007. Are the visits made usually on Board days?—Dr. Nugent was here at two special boards; he was here in September and in October. They are regularly summoned, being ex officio members of the Board.

6008. You spoke of Dr. White having visited on one occasion when there was some dispute with contractors?—Yes, about two years ago.

6009. What power has the Inspector of interfering in such matters?—The contracts sent to the Inspectors' office to be examined, and I was anxious one of them should attend here in order that he might see the difference that existed, and he did so.

6010. What was the nature of the difference with the contractors?—It was about inferior supplies.

6011. Was not the Board the proper authority to deal with the matter?—I invariably bring all matters before the Board, and I am invariably get redress; but I was anxious, in consequence of some remarks sent to the Inspectors' office in Dublin, to have the presence of one of them. Some parties in Council wrote to the Government that they did not get fair play here. The Chairman of the Commission was Under-Secretary at the time.

6012. What authority have the Inspectors as Inspectors in the establishment?—They make suggestions to the Board, which may perhaps have greater weight than those of an humble individual like me. Their suggestions are received with the greatest attention.

6013. I believe it is the practice to send up all the contracts to the office of the Inspectors of Asylums, to be laid before the Privy Council?—Yes.

6014. What time elapses between the period the contracts are sent up and their return?—Five or six weeks; in fact, on two or three occasions contractors commenced supplying before there was any legal sanction for doing so.

6015. By whom are the servants of the institution appointed?—By me, subject to the sanction of the Board. I invariably employ the servants on the recommendation of Governors.

6016. With whom does the removal of servants rest?—That is done by me. I scarcely ever remove, except for drunkenness or something of that kind.

6017. Do you dismiss absolutely without bringing the matter under the notice of the Board?—I would consider it monstrous to have a servant disturbing an institution without removing him at once. For instance, a short time ago, I removed an assistant gardener for being drunk. I always report these things to the Board.

6018. Have the provisions of the recent Superintendence Act been carried out in this asylum?—No; we had no applications, but before the act was passed, though I scarcely like to speak of the Board as they are present, in their humanity and benevolence, they broke through the Act of Parliament, and gave a small allowance to two servants who were broken down, one after twenty years' and the other after twenty-one years' service; to one they gave £1 a month, and the other 10s. a month to keep them from the workhouse.

6019. Are the attendants in the institution required to undergo any examination with respect to their knowledge of reading and writing?—No one could make a greater struggle than I did, to have attendants with these acquirements. I invariably got them in the end, but on very few occasions do I find them with the female attendants. The sick nurses and the upper nurse do read and write.

6020. Is there any limitation as to the age of the persons appointed?—I never take any person over thirty years of age if I can.

6021. There appeared to be in the asylum yesterday, a person appointed two months since, above the age you mention?—Yes, she is a very competent person. She has been a servant of mine for fifteen years in the asylum. She is only a deputy and not a nurse, and she will never be higher here than what she is.

The land of the Asylum.

6022. A considerable quantity of land has been taken by the Governors within the last few years, for the employment of the patients—is that entirely cultivated with the spade?—No; part of it could not be cultivated with the spade, in consequence of the worn out condition which it was in. They had ploughs and barrows to tear it up and got it into a good condition. There was part of it under grass.

6023. I presume the quantity of land affords abundant field for the occupation of those who can labour with the spade?—At present it does.

6024. Have you found advantage to arise from the employment of the patients in that way?—I have found great advantage to arise both pecuniary and sanitary.

Use of vegetables.

6025. Are you enabled to supply the house with vegetables?—Yes, I save over £100 a-year from that source.

6026. Are vegetables much used?—Three times a-week abundantly.

6027. Are potatoes used?—We use none at present. We had potatoes planted last year; some failed and others rotted. We find bread more economical at present.

6028. Has the disease of the potato in the asylum arisen since its failure?—Entirely.

6029. What has been the effect upon the general health of the inmates?—For a year or two after the disease of the potato, our mortality increased from four or five to ten per cent., and after that it came down to a very small per centage; indeed it is amazing how small the per centage is.

The dietary;
employment of
patients.

6030. Is the same diet given to patients who labour and those who are not able to work?—No, the idle men get four ounces a-day less bread than those who work. The idle men and women are on an quantity of dietary.

6031. How are the females employed?—Knitting, sewing, quilting, cleaning, washing, and in the ordinary occupations belonging to females.

6032. Are you enabled with the labour of the establishment to make up all the clothing and articles required for the use of the inmates?—Except that we have the assistance of one tailor, who assists occasionally in any emergency, but not as a keeper. The female clothing is exclusively made up in the house. The shoes for both males and females are made up in the house.

Amusements;
books.

6033. Are any amusements provided for the inmates?—Yes, we have a little library, a ball-alley, and they go out and run about. The attendants read for them and amuse them the best way they can.

6034. I presume you find the occupation of a patient's mind very essential and advantageous towards his cure?—Well, very much; I keep them employed as much as possible at labour—those that are of the agricultural class.

6035. Do the patients, themselves, exhibit any anxiety or desire to avail themselves of any amusement provided?—They do; they feed pigeons, and like the trifling amusements outside. I allow three or four of them to go out to catch birds' nests, and they take great care of them.

The airing courts;
ventilation, heating,
lighting.

6036. What is your opinion as to the suitability of the present airing courts for the inmates?—They are too prison-like.

6037. Do you refer to the size of the airing courts?—I do.

6038. Would not the proposed addition to the building, by raising the wings, tend to make the yards still darker and less cheerful?—Yes. The Board intended, at my request, to have made two yards outside, extending the land at either side.

6039. Are there any particular arrangements for ventilation in the house?—None, except through windows, and through some apertures, which I caused to be made myself some years ago in the ceiling. It requires close attention on the part of the attendants to keep every thing cleanly and to secure ventilation.

6040. Are you satisfied generally that the ventilation of the house is good?—The ventilation of the house depends now more on care and supervision than upon any artificial means that have been adopted. You are aware that in large buildings artificial means are provided, such as flues, and none of those exist here. They are generally failures. In America this artificial ventilation has cost in one asylum 30,000 dollars, with doubtful results.

6041. How are the passages and wards warmed?—By large stoves, which, after I came here, the Board most kindly allowed me to put up. These are lighted in wet weather, for the house being built of limestone, great dampness is perceptible inside in wet weather. When these stoves are lighted they create an agreeable warmth.

6042. How is the establishment lighted?—Partly by candles and partly by oil.

6043. Has it been under consideration to introduce gas?—It was under consideration in 1849. I submitted a letter from the Gas Company to the Board, and the Board considered the letter unsatisfactory.

6044. Is there a regular supply of hot water laid on through the wards?—No, that is one of the deficiencies of the house.

6045. I believe there are inventories in each ward?—Yes.

6046. How is the hot water supplied for baths?—By two modes, one is from the laundry and one from the kitchen. That is an original defect. We cannot remedy that. With respect to baths, we have a portable bath, which we carry about.

6047. When hot water is required in the building it has to be carried up?—Having a surplus of labour here, we employ the patients in carrying hot water from the laundry iron cask in the yard to the different divisions.

6048. Is the supply of water for the use of the establishment good?—We have admirable water, but there was a defect in the well. I tried to remedy that, and was greatly assisted by a very intelligent scientific member of the Board. We sunk a large jumper hole twenty feet deep. I put down nine pounds of powder, ignited it with a fuse, and blew the whole thing open, shaking the place considerably. We got a good supply of water from that time. We have 500 gallons supplied daily, but for a house of this kind we should have three times the quantity. We should have a constant running supply.

6049. Is there any regular periodical bathing of the patients?—There is not.

6050. What bedding is in use in the establishment?—Straw; we have a few eocen beds, but I did not like them. When I submitted the matter to the Board some time ago, they said to try them, and we got twenty-four of these beds; but I found they did not suit.

6051. For what reasons do you prefer straw?—For the sake of cleanliness and economy, and it is useful subsequently for manure.

6052. Is the bedding of the country people generally straw?—Yes, that is what is usual in the country.

6053. Are there any water-closets in the establishment?—There are. There was great trouble with them, but I got them fixed some time ago, and since they have given us no trouble.

6054. Are there water-closets in each of the divisions?—No. On the ground-floor there are privies, and water-closets upstairs.

6055. Is the sewerage of the house satisfactory?—No. We have no sewerage from the privies in the yards. We clean them out periodically by persons engaged for the purpose.

6056. Are the patients at all employed at that work?—Merely in assisting to draw it off.

6057. Have you any reason to complain of damp in the house?—Yes.

6058. What does that arise from?—The defective state of the walks outside; the out-stone work.

6059. Has that occupied the attention of the Board of Governors?—Several times. It has been covered in some parts by the Board of Works with Roman cement.

6060. What classification of patients exists in the asylum?—Practically speaking the tragical and impracticable, as we have only two yards at each side, but we have sub-divisions which appear in the list before you.

6061. From the list to which you refer it would appear that out of 141 lunatics in the asylum 103 are incurable?—Yes.

6062. What may be the average number of vacancies for which admissions are made on each board day?—Last board day none.

6063. Do you consider that the 103 incurable cases are likely to remain in the asylum?—Yes.

6064. The opportunity, therefore, of affording relief to the lunatic poor of the district for curative treatment will merely depend upon the vacancies that will occur amongst the other curable cases in the asylum?—Yes.

6065. The Commissioners have received suggestions with reference to the propriety of providing another institution for incurable cases; what is your opinion on the subject?—I would consider it advantageous to have one attached to this institution.

6066. Do you consider great economy would arise from that?—Yes; patients who are incurable could be supported at a lower rate, and in the next place the staff need not be so large for them.

6067. With regard to the support of the patients, you mean that the same nourishing food is not required as in the case of lunatics whose cure is in progress?—Yes. A steward and his wife might take charge of such a building with a few attendants, if attached to an institution like this.

6068. It has been stated that in the construction of that new building by the introduction of associated dormitories, in which many of those incurable patients could be placed, there would be also considerable saving effected?—Yes. I gave a plan to that effect to one of the Inspectors, who asked me for some time ago, and an estimate of the expense.

6069. What are the arrangements for religious worship?—The Roman Catholic clergyman attends at half-past nine o'clock on Sunday morning, and the Roman Catholic patients attend him to divine service. The Church of England clergyman's congregation come into this Board-room at three o'clock, and he gives religious instruction to them here. He also attends at three o'clock on Thursday.

6070. There is no separate building appropriated exclusively to the celebration of divine services?—No. I got a temporary altar fitted up for the Roman Catholic clergyman in the day-room; it is turned up, and service is performed there for sixty or seventy patients.

6071. Do the chaplains visit patients during the week?—There is no attendance on the part of the Roman Catholic chaplain except on Sundays, and when he is sent for to visit sick or dying persons. The Church of England clergyman attends on Sundays and Thursdays.

*Actions of Chaplains

 6072. Has each chaplain access to any particular patient of his persuasion he may desire to visit, without your authority?—Certainly. I never prohibit any clergyman coming officially here—from coming into the establishment at any time he may think fit. As the appointment of chaplains is now recognised by the Board as well as by the Government, I will exercise a sound discretion, with Dr. Stiel, and allow them discriminate admission.

6073. You consider there are occasions on which communications by clergymen with patients would be injurious?—I do.

6074. Would you consider it your duty on these occasions to prohibit a clergyman interfering with a patient?—Certainly.

6075. How many years have the chaplains been appointed to this institution?—Five years.

6076. From your experience during those five years, what is your opinion as to the advisability of having chaplains connected with such institutions?—I would rather decline offering any opinion on that, unless I saw the duties clearly defined and carried out; then I would form a definite opinion.

6077. Has any injurious effect arisen from their attendance and ministrations?—No.

6078. Previous to the appointment of chaplains, was religious worship ever performed in the asylum?—Several times by a Roman Catholic clergyman. There was a Roman Catholic clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Walsh, whose visits to the house I admired very much. He was a kind, good man, and he came here frequently to see the patients. I allowed him to see them, and he conversed with several. I got him to say divine service on various occasions myself, without any expense to the establishment. He died in 1847.

6079. Was the service of the Established Church performed here previous to the appointment of the chaplains?—No.

6080. Did the attendants of the establishment attend religious worship previous to the appointment of the chaplains?—Yes; they got leave invariably to attend divine service on Sundays.

Attendance at divine service.

6081. How many of the inmates attend religious worship?—Sixty-eight Roman Catholics, generally speaking, attend. Five, six, sometimes seven and sometimes eight of the members of the Church of England, in fact all the members of that church in the asylum, when unmolested, attend divine service.

6082. That is, more than half of the inmates attend religious worship?—Yes, more than half the number of inmates.

School instruction.

6083. Is there a school in the establishment?—No.

6084. Was there ever a school?—I had a school here, but the person in charge of it was a confirmed drunkard, and I discontinued him.

6085. I presume there is a considerable number of inmates incapable of reading or writing?—About three-fourths.

6086. What is your opinion as to the propriety of a school being established in the institution for the instruction of those people?—I think it would be beneficial; the expense is the only difficulty.

*Paying patients;
 provision for inmates of small means.*

6087. There are no paying patients in this institution?—None.

6088. From your knowledge of the country, is it your opinion there is a considerable proportion of the population the lunatic members of which would not be able to pay for their support in a private asylum, and yet cannot be considered paupers?—A great number.

6089. Do you consider that any provision should be made at the public charge for the maintenance of such lunatics?—I have a very strong opinion that there should be no lunatic anywhere except under public supervision. I do not think the country should be bound to support patients who could pay a portion of the cost of their maintenance.

6090. Are we to understand you would leave such cases to be provided for by private benevolence in charitable institutions?—My opinion on that point is this, that it is for the Board of Guardians applications should be made for the relief of such persons, the Board of Guardians paying for their support.

6091. Do you see any objection to associating paying patients in the institution with pauper patients?—I would not, provided they were supported on exactly the same scale of dietary, otherwise you have nothing but confusion, interference with officers, and servants corrupted and attempting to give patients advantages. To guard against this, they should be all, in my opinion, treated in the same manner.

6092. Do you consider that the dress of paying patients, under such circumstances, should be the same as that of the ordinary inmates?—Ordinary inmates are frequently allowed to wear their own clothes when it tends to their cure. I think they should all wear the same dress, and that the paying patients should conform in every respect to the discipline of the institution; they should be treated in every respect the same as any ordinary patient.

Criminal inmates.

6093. Are criminal lunatics usually removed without delay to the Central Criminal Asylum?—All the criminal lunatics who have been in this house have been removed without delay, except one man.

6094. No delay now occurs?—We had one since the Dandrum Asylum opened, who remains with us; he is about five years here.

6095. Has any recent application been made to the Inspectors-General for his removal?—Within the last twelve months application was made.

*Treatment of inmates suffering
 under sickness.*

6096. Is it your opinion that lunatics suffering under sickness, especially those affected with diseases that would render cold injurious to them, should be treated in an infirmary rather than in their own cells?—It is.

6097. Do you think it advisable to treat any of those cases in their own cells?—I do not, unless they were very dirty and very turbulent.

6098. Do you think that their being dirty is a valid reason for keeping them in their own cells?—I do not; I say when dirty and turbulent.

6099. We saw a patient yesterday who was not turbulent, but who soiled her bed; she was paralysed, was in her own cell, and had been there for some time?—She had been brought suddenly up from the day room the morning before, where she had taken suddenly ill; she was carried down in the most careful manner by the sick nurse, and left in a warm day room, sitting by the fire on a low straw stool or chair. She was then taken suddenly ill, as I have stated. I was sent for, and I immediately went and saw her. I had her brought up to bed, gave her half a tumbler of wine, and I really thought she was dying, it being an epileptic case, and I sent for a clergyman.

William James Shell, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S., sworn and examined.

6100. How long have you been connected with the Clonmel Asylum?—Nearly twenty-three years.

6101. During that period you have held the office of visiting physician?—Yes, I have held the office of visiting physician.

6102. It has been stated that some years since, in consequence of Dr. Flynn, the manager, being appointed also resident physician, you came to an arrangement as to the way in which the medical charge of the establishment should be conducted?—I received information from the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums which in some measure regulated our duties.

6103. What change was made in your position?—I used to attend three times a week, and I continue to do so still.

6104. As regards the treatment of cases coming into the asylum, do you feel it your duty to inspect each case on each of your visits?—Dr. Flynn and I in every instance have a conversation about the case, and we enter generally into arrangements as regards the treatment whenever any thing particular is required.

6105. Are we to understand the general treatment of the case is left to Dr. Flynn, you consulting and advising with him as occasion may require?—In a case of illness Dr. Flynn does what he thinks the case requires, and he consults me when I go round through the asylum. We always go round together—at least I may say almost always—and we advise together.

6106. Is there a case book kept recording the treatment of each case?—There is no actual book kept recording the different symptoms from day to day, but there is a kind of case book or register in which the improvement or otherwise of patients is registered.

6107. What is your opinion as to the propriety or otherwise of treating such patients in their separate rooms?—I think it should be avoided as much as possible, unless under special circumstances, when a person would disturb the other patients for instance.

6108. You consider, therefore, that an infirmary should be attached to each of these institutions?—Yes; in this institution there is a room at each side of the house used as an infirmary.

6109. When a patient is treated in his own room or cell, is it the ordinary attendant of the ward who attends on him, or is it the nurse in charge of the sick who is in attendance?—It is the nurse who attends that is held responsible; the medicines are generally given up to her for administration.

6110. Supposing patients belonging to different wards to be unwell, and to be treated in their separate cells, are we to understand the nurse of the hospital would have to go round to those different cells to visit the various patients?—I cannot bring to my recollection any thing of the kind occurring. It is very rarely cases are treated in their cells; that is the exception when the cases are dirty and turbulent. The rule is to treat sick patients in the infirmary.

6111. I believe there is an apothecary attached to the establishment?—There is.

6112. Are the drugs purchased by the Board or supplied by the apothecary?—They are purchased by the Board and compounded in the house.

6113. Do you concur in Dr. Flynn's views as regards non-restraint?—Yes, perfectly; in fact, we have but one thought in the management of the institution. We have invariably made up our minds with respect to every thing connected with it concerning us; and there is not the slightest shade or shadow of a difference of opinion between us.

6114. What is your opinion as to the advisability of incurable patients being removed to a separate house?—I am decidedly in favour of it.

6115. Do you consider the building should be attached or adjacent to the existing asylum?—Certainly it would be both economical and convenient.

6116. In stating it would be economical, I presume you refer to the staff and the dietary?—Yes; the staff and dietary. This being a curative institution there may be required an improved dietary, which would be attended with some additional expense, and which would not be required in the other establishment.

6117. Do you think that any injurious effect might result to the patients who possibly might be curable, although the medical attendant was not of that opinion, by their removal to what might be considered a condemned part of the institution?—They might be removed for organic diseases or for established incurability. In that case they would be removed by the medical attendant, who would give them a long probation in the curative institution before doing so. I think, perhaps, from six to eight years would be the time in which we could decide as to whether a patient was curable or incurable, unless there was organic disease. We have witnessed cures in this house after that length of time.

6118. In preparing the return which has been made to the Commissioners, and in which 103 out of 141 in the asylum, have been set down as considered incurable; have you been guided by those views in determining the numbers?—Perhaps not so fully. We have put down some as incurable as to whom there might be a remote possibility of their being cured.

6119. Do you consider that any interference would be likely to be exercised, by the friends of a patient, to try and keep him in an establishment where a better diet would be given, rather than have him transferred to an incurable institution?—I am not prepared to say; that would be entirely a matter for the physicians, who would not be influenced by the friends, but by their own judgment, of course, in each case.

6120. Do you consider that any large proportion of the incurable cases should properly be treated in the workhouse?—I fear not; I fear the ordinary workhouse is not a place for even the very worst and most helpless cases. The attention required for their conduct, and that humanity would require for them, would be much better given in a lunatic asylum. I have seen in a workhouse, idiots buried in straw, perhaps up to their necks, and things of that kind, which persons connected with a lunatic asylum would not tolerate. I have not literally inspected the lunatics in the pothouse.

6121. Do you consider the arrangements in a workhouse do not admit of lunatic paupers receiving that attention which their helpless condition would require?—I fear they do not.

6122. Have you found that patients of that class would be likely to be subjected to great annoyance from the same inmates?—I should suppose that in a workhouse they would be separated, and therefore would not be exposed to annoyance.

6123. Is it not the practice in workhouses to select the attendants upon lunatics from the other paupers?—I am not aware of the arrangement; I think that is the case, but I am not certain that it is. Here it is not so.

6124. Are you also the physician of the gaol?—I am.

6125. What means of classification exist in the gaol?—No classification; in fact, until very lately, till the gaol became less crowded than it used to be, there was the very worst accommodation for lunatics; but latterly we have one room set apart for males and another for females, but we cannot make any further separation of the male and female classes.

6126. So that the tranquil and the violent male lunatics in gaol would be in the same ward?—Yes. I look upon the gaol management or treatment for lunatics as very bad, indeed I have often and often deplored it, finding great difficulty in having them removed to this institution from want of room.

6127. What is your opinion as to the possibility of adopting any thing like a curative system for lunatics in gaols?—I think it would be difficult.

6128. Who are the usual attendants in charge of lunatics in gaols?—Heretofore they were under the care of the attendants of whatever division they belonged to, but now there is one specially set apart for them.

6129. Are other prisoners in charge of them?—Yes; there have been prisoners in special care of some violent or refractory lunatics.

6131. Is any mechanical restraint used in the gaol?—There is. They do not understand the proper management of them without restraint.

6132. Would it be used without your authority?—If a lunatic was very violent the waistcoat would be put on in my absence. The waistcoat is the only means of restraint.

6133. Are those instruments of mechanical restraint kept by the governor or left in charge of the turnkeys?—They are left in charge of the man in care of the hospital. Generally they put on the waistcoat in the gaol for the slightest cause. When the gaol was very full it was almost impossible to do any thing advantageous for the lunatics; now, however, there is more room than there used to be.

6134. Do you consider the law should be altered which enables magistrates to commit lunatics direct to gaol?—I think there is a very great abuse of it at present. In fact, the friends of lunatics at a distance—the facility is so great of getting them into an asylum through the gaols—will not be at the trouble and expense of securing their admission in the usual way, and they have them committed to gaol, where they are often left for years before they can be admitted into the asylum; I have known cases become incurable from being detained in the gaol too long.

6135. How long have you known lunatics to be detained in gaol?—Several over four years.

6136. Were those cases generally acute cases, that when they first entered might have been curable?—Yes.

6137. I presume the detention in gaol of such cases necessarily impedes their ultimate cure?—Certainly.

6138. If such cases eventually be transferred to the asylum, the effect of their detention in gaol, in fact, would be to leave them a burden upon the county?—Yes; still some are cured in gaol—yesterday I sent out one, and there is scarcely a year that I do not send out perhaps from six to eight cured.

6139. Have you any means, when a lunatic is transmitted to the gaol, of ascertaining any of the particulars of his case or previous history?—None whatever, unless he happens to belong to the town; he is sent by the parties without any notification of any consequence.

Commitment of to gaols; state of 6140. Do you feel that to be a loss?—Very great; especially when he is afterwards removed to the asylum.

6141. Have you known many complaints of lunatics being committed to the goal under the Dangerous Lunatic Act, who are not inhabitants of Tipperary, but who belong to other districts?—A few, and they have generally been transferred to the districts to which they belong.

6142. Has any difficulty been found in transferring them?—I think not. There was one sent, not long since, down to Waterford, I think under the Lord Lieutenant's warrant. In the case I discharged yesterday, the man was within the borough boundary, though not within the county of Tipperary.

6143. Have you reason to believe that many of the lunatics who are committed to goal as dangerous lunatics are not really persons who, if at large, would be dangerous?—Very many. I think in many instances they excite a lunatic to commit some overt act, so as to give a pretext for swearing he is dangerous, in order to have him committed to goal.

6144. In point of fact, the law admits of being so abused as to facilitate the entrance of cases into this asylum without a due precaution?—Very much; and it also adds very much to the expense upon the county, because they cannot be sent from the goal to the asylum without the certificate of two medical men, and one of those, not belonging to the goal, must receive a fee. The whole expense of transmission, from whatever part of the county a patient may come, falls upon the public—the cost of hiring cars, &c.

6145. What is your opinion as to the good or bad effect of the appointment of chaplains to the asylum?—I do not think our experience has been sufficient at all to enable us to form an opinion. I am not prepared to say whether they are advantageous or otherwise; no bad effects have yet arisen.

6146. With regard to the lunatics in the goal, are they visited by the goal chaplain?—I am not aware.

6147. Have you yourself been present at a time when religious service was performed in the chapel?—I was present when they assembled for religious service, but I was never present during its celebration; they appeared to be very orderly coming into service.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Donoughmore sworn and examined.

6148. I believe you are a member of the Board of Governors of this asylum?—I am.

6149. What is your opinion as to the manner in which the admissions to the institution are now regulated?—I think it is open to several objections. I think that there should be direct means of obtaining local information as to the circumstances of each patient who is admitted; that the best way of obtaining that information would be through the Boards of Guardians of the various districts; and I think that all the lunatic asylums of Ireland should be carried on upon the same principle upon which, I understand, they are conducted in England—that is, that each district should be responsible for the support of those lunatics who come from it. By that means we could obtain two things: first of all, security that the lunatics supported at the public expense are really paupers; and next, we could have every information with respect to each case from the Boards of Guardians, who are the persons most likely to be truly informed with respect to the circumstances. There is another advantage which, I think, might be derived from this system, and it is this. There is a very large class in this part of Ireland, and, I am sure, in all parts of Ireland, who, although not absolutely paupers, are still so poor that they would not be able to pay for the proper care and support of their lunatic relatives in private asylums. Now, if the admissions to the county asylums was through the Boards of Guardians, and that the Board of Guardians paid a fixed annual sum for the support of each lunatic sent by them to the Central institution, the Board themselves, having full knowledge of the circumstances of each case, might make an agreement with the friends of the lunatic who belonged to the second class to whom I have referred, to pay a certain sum towards the maintenance of that lunatic. Suppose, for example, the cost of the support of the lunatic was £30 a-year, the Guardians might say to the friends of the lunatic, "We know you are poor, still you are not absolutely paupers; and if you will give us £10 or £15 a-year in aid of the cost of the support of your relative, we will recommend him for admission to the Asylum, and will become responsible to the Asylum for the entire cost of his support." But I quite agree, at the same time, with Dr. Flynn, the manager of this asylum, in thinking that if persons of that class are admitted into a lunatic asylum, they must be admitted on the understanding that their treatment, dress, and diet shall be exactly the same as that of the pauper lunatics.

6150. What your Lordship suggests as to the admission of lunatics in the name of the Boards of Guardians would indicate that you do not contemplate the asylums being limited to the reception of what you would call the destitute poor?—I think they ought not to be so limited. I think a very large number of the lunatics we see in the country do not belong to the class which may properly be called destitute poor. As it is the concurrent opinion of all the medical men who have had the care and management of lunatics that the chances of cure are infinitely greater if the case is treated when the disease first shows itself than if the lunatic is left to the care of his relatives, and, as often occurs, foolishly or badly treated, I think, in a public point of view, it is an object of great importance to encourage those who are not absolutely paupers to use the asylum, not in the sense of a place intended merely for the safe custody of lunatics, but to use it in the sense of an hospital for the cure of lunacy. The lower classes of this country have such a horror of the disease of lunacy, that if they were assured their relatives would be taken care of, I do not think they would make any objection. I was going on to say that I think there are many persons who, at present, would have an objection to sending their friends into a lunatic asylum where the whole cost is borne by the county, considering it a disgrace to have their relatives classed with absolute paupers—that would have no objection if a certain part of the cost of the support was payable by them to send their relatives to such establishments.

6151. Is it your view that the absolute destitute paupers who would be unable to contribute, but any portion of the cost of their maintenance should have the preference to cases such as you have referred to?—Decidedly; but I think arrangements ought to be made in every county for having sufficient accommodation for the care of the probable number of lunatics that may be sent to the asylum. I would draw a great distinction between the curable and incurable cases.

6152. If the destitute paupers, meaning thereby those who would be unable to contribute any thing towards their support, were not allowed a preference before this class to whom you have referred, would it not be likely the Boards of Guardians might be induced to give a preference to those cases in which a proportion of the expense was paid by the relatives or friends?—When you consider the supervision under which the Boards of Guardians act, and that at least half of the body are elected by the ratepayers, and that they are subject to the control of public opinion, I do not consider there is much danger of corrupt motives intervening; but I should hope that arrangements might be made to render such supposed cases impossible—that, in fact, the lunatic asylums should be of sufficient size to receive all the cases that might be sent to them, and that object might be gained by removing the incurables to a General Asylum.

Difficulty of obtain-
respecting cases.

6153. With reference to the difficulty which your Lordship considers to exist in obtaining correct information as to the circumstances of an applicant, because of the distance at which he may reside from the asylum, is that particularly felt in a county like Tipperary, where the asylum is remote from portions of the county?—Of course, the officers and, in point of fact, the Board who manage the institution, are all of them resident in the immediate neighbourhood; and if a patient comes from Nenagh, or Thurles, or Roscrea, we can know nothing of the circumstances of his case.

Central establishments for incurables.

6154. In providing additional accommodation for lunatics, I understand your Lordship suggests that the incurable cases should be placed in a separate asylum?—I would prefer that the incurables of the whole of Ireland should be placed in a large central establishment, under the control and management of Government.

6155. By whom would you propose the expense of this asylum should be defrayed?—Rateably, according to the patients sent by each county—that the amount should be calculated of the weekly or yearly cost of each patient, and that each county should pay according to the number of patients sent by it to the asylum.

6156. You consider it would be more satisfactory to have the incurable patients provided for in an establishment of that kind than in an establishment under the immediate control of the ratepayers?—I think so, and for this reason, I think the manager and the visiting medical officer of a lunatic asylum would naturally take more interest and pay more attention to the curable cases in the asylum than to the incurable cases. And if the system suggested by Dr. Sæll and Dr. Flynn was adopted—that there should be two departments, a curable department, separate and distinct from the incurable department—I should fear that in some cases nearly the whole of the attention of the officers, and, indeed, of the Board also, would be directed to the curable department, and that the incurables would be neglected; whereas if the whole of the incurable class were put into an institution under the immediate control of Government, I think we should have a better chance of those unfortunate poor creatures being well attended to; and I think if they were brought together in large numbers, they would not cost more than under the other arrangement in the counties.

6157. Would you provide for any local management by Governors of that central institution?—That I should leave entirely in the hands of the Central authority. I should imagine the Government would place it in the hands of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums, most probably, and that the institution would be located some place near the metropolis, or in some situation which would be easily accessible by railway—in fact, in the most convenient central position.

6158. Are you aware that there is, in the existing law, a provision under which such an institution might be established in each province?—I was not aware of that.

The Dangerous
Lunatic Act.

6159. What is your opinion as to the operation of the Dangerous Lunatic Act?—The practical effect of it is, that we have our gaols crowded with unfortunate creatures to whom, from the nature of the discipline of the prison, and the accommodation which it provides as a prison, we are not enabled to give that care and attention which their state requires; and from the fact of the asylum being crowded with incurable cases, vacancies occur so slowly that for a very long period of time the lunatics in the gaol are left without curative treatment, or with very imperfect curative treatment; and, of course, the longer that those cases remain in the gaol, the more the chance of their ultimate recovery, when removed to the lunatic asylum, diminishes.

State of the law with reference to lunatics wandering at large.

6160. Are you aware of the provisions of the English law with reference to lunatics wandering at large?—I do not know what the powers of the English magistrates are; the Irish law is very summary.

6161. The 16th and 17th Vict., chap. 97, English Act, provides that, after certain examination, the justices may direct any lunatic wandering at large, whom they consider a proper person, to be taken charge of and detained under care and treatment; and who is not under proper care and control, or is cruelly treated or neglected, to be received into an asylum, or into a licensed house or hospital registered; the power of committing to goals not being conferred in the Act; would you approve of an alteration to that effect?—Certainly I should; but I think it would be highly dangerous to make that alteration until means were taken to secure accommodation for that class of lunatics in asylums. There are cases constantly occurring where lunatics are really dangerous to public safety, and where there is no room in the lunatic asylum, and it is necessary to secure them somewhere. At the same time, I very much doubt whether the power which the law gives in Ireland has not been stretched to its utmost; and there are cases where persons have been committed to goal under magistrates' orders who might just as well have been left at large.

6163. Might not a lunatic who has attempted to commit a crime, or who is dangerous, be held to bail under the ordinary law, although the Dangerous Lunatic Act did not exist?—I do not know how a magistrate could do that. I should feel great difficulty myself, as a magistrate, in taking bail for a person whom I believed not to be responsible for his actions.

6164. You are not aware that such persons may be committed in default of bail?—I believe so.

6165. What is your opinion as to the detention of lunatics in workhouses?—I think it is very much to be regretted that circumstances oblige us to keep them in workhouses. The same remark, indeed, applies to the workhouses as to prisons. A workhouse is built for special purposes; its staff is organized for special purposes; and there are no means at hand for the proper treatment of lunatics.

6166. I believe the arrangements made in workhouses for the detention of lunatics were not at all made with a view to their being kept there for any period or for their curative treatment?—Certainly not. In all the workhouses built by the Commissioners there are generally three or four cells, which are called idiot wards; but I believe they were originally intended merely for the temporary care of lunatics.

6167. What is your opinion with regard to the state of the law in reference to the erection of asylums; do you consider the carrying out of works of that kind should be left to the local authorities?—That is a very difficult question. I have heard great complaints made of the enormous expenditure by the Board of Works, particularly in the neighbouring county of Cork, where they built an asylum at a cost of £120,000; but, on the other hand, I should not wish to give the local boards a complete authority. I think it might be arranged by giving to the local boards the power of making additions, with the consent and approval of the Lord Lieutenant and Council; and so far as the existing asylums are concerned, that would be the only power that could be given.

6169. I believe under the present state of the law, when a new district is created, and a new asylum declared to be necessary, that the arrangements for the erection of the asylum, &c., are entirely carried out by the Commissioners for Control and Correspondence?—Yes.

6170. What is your opinion as regards the mode of appointing Governors?—Well, I think the elective system should be introduced in the appointment of Governors; and I am strongly of opinion, that in the event of the proposition to which I have already alluded being adopted, that is, that the county or district asylums should be reserved entirely as hospitals for the cure of lunacy; the nomination to all the offices in the county asylums should be given to the local authorities.

6171. Would you give any power to a central authority to remove any of those officers after investigation?—I would give to a central authority, whether the Lord Lieutenant, or a Board of Commissioners of Lunatic Asylums, in the event of such being appointed, exactly the same powers as are now enjoyed by the Poor Law Commissioners, with respect to the officers under the Board of Guardians, a power to refuse approval when, in their opinion, an improper person has been appointed, and a power to dismiss summarily on proof of misconduct.

6172. What is your opinion as to the propriety of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums being members of the Boards of Governors?—I think that they should have a deliberative voice; that they should have authority to attend to give their advice and opinion; but I rather think that in local matters their opinion should not be allowed to overbear that of the Local Board. I should incline to have them in the position of Poor Law Inspectors. To return to your former question, as to the constitution of the Boards of Governors, I think the same principle which obtains with respect to Boards of Guardians, might be introduced into them with good effect; that the Boards should be partly elected by the public, and partly nominated from the magistrates of the county. In the Boards of Guardians half of the number are ex officio members from the magistrates residing within the district, the other half being elected by the ratepayers. I think it would be very safe and very wise to introduce that principle into the constitution of the Boards of Governors of Lunatic Asylums, that half the body should be elected by the ratepayers of the county, and the other half should be nominated from the body of magistrates, by the Lord Lieutenant, or by the Lord Lieutenant and Council.

6173. In cases where the district comprises more than one county, I presume you would distribute the representation on the Board, in proportion to the extent and liability of the county?—That might be done, of course; but there would be a great practical difficulty, said that is, whoever you nominate as members of a body of that kind, the practical power always rests in the hands of those who reside near the asylum. In this county, if magistrates who reside at Nough or Borrisokane, and in the distant parts of the county, were nominated members of the Board, perhaps on occasions of great importance they would attend, but the practical working of the institution would be in the hands of those who reside near the asylum.

6173. In carrying out the elective principle, would you propose that a certain number of the elected members of a Board of Guardians should be Governors, or that the occupiers should select?—I should propose that each Board of Guardians within the county, should elect from their own body one or more, according as might be deemed most expedient, to represent them at the Board of the lunatic asylum; but I beg to be understood that I think it a very important point, that there should be the two elements in the Board, the elected element and the nominated element.

6174. Would there not be some difficulty in the case of poor law unions situate in two counties, that might not be in the same district?—Yes, in one case in this county we have a poor law union situate in two provinces; the union of Callan is partly in the province of Leinster, and partly in the province of Munster. Such cases do occur, but, generally speaking, the boundaries of unions and counties are coterminous.

Chargeability of the
posed change.

6175. Would you propose any alteration of the law as regards the chargeability of the lunatic poor?—I have already alluded to that. I think that each Board of Guardians should be responsible for all the lunatics coming from their district; and that instead of the money for the support of the institution being raised, as at present, from the county, it should be raised in the unions, and paid by each Board of Guardians to the Board of Governors of the asylum, which I understand is the case in England, where each parish pays to the county lunatic asylum for the support of the lunatics who belong to it.

6176. You are aware that as the law at present stands, the monies for the maintenance of the asylum being advanced out of the Consolidated Fund, the repayment is made to the Government in the nature of an imperative presentment?—Yes.

6177. What remedy would you provide for the enforcement of repayment by unions to Government?—Experience has shown us that a very unpopular tax may be imposed, through the medium of poor rate, and paid; if it was possible to oblige the Irish unions to pay the rate-in-aid, I do not think there is any doubt of a power being found sufficient to raise the other.

Chaplain.

6178. What is your opinion with reference to the advisability, or otherwise, of chaplains being appointed to lunatic asylums?—That is a question which I have not heretofore considered much, but I understand the system has been introduced into large asylums in England with good effect, and I should be disposed to follow it out here. At one time I was under the impression it was not the case, but I have heard lately, that at Hamwell and other large asylums in England they have chaplains. With respect to raising funds for the support of the asylum, I may observe that what I proposed was this, that the establishment charges, that is the fixed cost of the building, the grounds, the current expenditure for the support of those buildings, the salaries of the staff, and all those things, should continue to be paid as they are at present out of the county rates; but that the maintenance of each lunatic should be paid for by the district to which he belonged, out of the poor rate. I did not contemplate that the whole cost of the institution should be paid by the Boards of Guardians.

Recovery against divisions or unions.

6179. What mode of recovery as against the electoral divisions or unions, would you give to the treasurer of the county?—I would have the accounts kept in this way, as they are now kept by the Boards of Guardians, a division made between the establishment charges and the expense of the lunatics. The establishment charges under the Poor Law are divided according to the value of the whole union; then the cost of the paupers is divided according to the electoral division from which they come. Now in keeping the accounts of the county lunatic asylum, they could divide the charges in the same manner. The advances the Government make for establishment charges could be recovered as at present from the treasurer of the county; the maintenance charges for the lunatics could be recovered from the Boards of Guardians of the various unions.

6180. According to that arrangement, the cost of maintaining a lunatic asylum would be defrayed by the ratepayers according to two different systems, by one of which the occupier would pay the whole, and by the other of which he would pay a proportion—do you see any objection to that?—I do not practically see any objection to it. To the extent of the maintenance charges I believe what I propose would be a relief to the occupier. In a vast number of instances, the lands of Ireland are held at will, and I do not think altering the incidence of the tax would have any practical effect, for if the owner of the soil sees that any additional burden is placed on him, he will increase the rent to meet it.

Lieutenant-Colonel Pownall Phipps, F.R., sworn and examined.

Phipps.

6181. I believe you are a member of the Board of Governors of this institution?—Yes.

6182. Have you been for many years a member of the Board?—I have.

6183. I believe the question of affording additional accommodation for the lunatic poor of the county of Tipperary has been under consideration?—Yes, we considered it very often.

6184. Do you consider additional accommodation is urgently called for?—I consider it absolutely necessary, to the extent that would accommodate the insane of all descriptions in the county.

Additional Asylum
accommodation.

6185. In what manner do you think it would be most advisable to afford that accommodation?—I would prefer having a separate building for the incurable and idiotic, and that this building should be entirely allocated to the curable.

6186. Your desire, therefore, would be to have a curative hospital for the insane in addition to the asylum for incurable cases?—Yes.

6187. We have heard that plans have been under the consideration of the Board of Governors for affording additional accommodation in the present asylum?—We have been considering the matter, but there have been two distinct views taken of it; some of the Board wanted to restrict the ceiling as much as possible, and, therefore, to restrict the intended accommodation to what would cost least. They proposed to extend the accommodation to the extent of sixty beds, by raising two of the wings; but, I believe, most of us think that would still leave a great many applicants whom we would not be able to receive. I do not think sixty beds would be sufficient; at the same time we would be very glad to get that increase.

6188. The plan to which you have referred, we understand, contemplated airing grounds being given at the ends of the building?—Yes; I belong to the sub-committee who were appointed to investigate the matter, and we thought that thirty beds would be given by the proposed arrangement to each class—male and female—and that it would be a great advantage to get even that.

6189. Do you consider such an addition would be desirable, supposing the present building limited to an hospital for the curative treatment of the insane?—I am not able to speak as to that.

6190. Do you concur in the opinion expressed by Lord Denbighmore as to the class of paying patients who might be received into the asylum?—Perfectly.

6191. The admission of such a class would, I presume, render a greater addition to the accommodation necessary than the present state of the law would contemplate?—Certainly.

6192. You concur in the opinion also, I understand, that the incurables might be placed in a detached building?—Yes, and that a great deal of expense would be thereby saved.

6193. Do you consider the ground now in the possession of the Governors would admit of such a building being suitably erected?—Yes; I think it was originally purchased with that intention.

6194. What is your opinion of the suggestion that the cases for admission to the asylum should undergo a preliminary investigation by the Boards of Guardians of the several unions?—That would be very satisfactory and very desirable. We are very much in want of information relative to the cases.

6195. I presume there must be considerable difficulty in obtaining information at Clonmel with regard to cases from distant parts of the county?—We know nothing about them.

6196. Do you know how distant the most remote part of the county is from Clonmel?—I think between fifty and sixty miles.

6197. What is your opinion as to manner in which the Board of Governors are at present appointed?—I should be very much disposed to think, with respect to what Lord Denbighmore has suggested about the guardians of unions—though at the same time what he states is of great importance—that you would find great difficulty in getting guardians from distant unions to come here. There are Governors living throughout the county, and they hardly ever attend. That is the only difficulty attending his plan, and I do not see how you can get out of it. Ratepayers living thirty or forty miles off would not be got to come here.

6198. You are favourable to representatives of the ratepayers being on the Board of Governors?—Yes, I think it would be satisfactory; and I also think with respect to the raising of the money, that it would be desirable to have it from the guardians.

6199. You are aware that the monies for the maintenance of the asylum are at present advanced by Government and repaid by presentment?—Yes.

6200. Do you consider the same means for procuring money should be adopted as provided for the payment of the rate-in-aid?—Something of that description.

6201. Are you aware the transference of the charge for the maintenance of lunatics from the county cess to the poor rates would create a change in the incidence of taxation—namely, that the landholder would become the payer of part of the charge, whereas, at present, the entire is paid by the occupier?—Yes. There is one difficulty occurs to me at present: half of our union runs into Waterford, and our rates are levied according to that, and there would be, perhaps, some difficulty in providing the Waterford portion.

6202. As regards the payment of the rate, the electoral divisions, I presume, might be charged with the maintenance of the lunatics belonging to them?—Yes.

6203. Do you concur in the opinion that the officers of the asylum should be appointed by the Local Board?—I do.

6204. What is your opinion as to the Inspectors being members of the Board?—I think they ought to be the same as Poor Law Inspectors at the Boards of Guardians; that they should attend the Board, but not vote.

6205. What is your opinion as to the propriety of lunatics being detained in goals?—I think that is a very great evil. Our goal is better situated now than formerly. Two or three years ago we had 1,000 prisoners in it; now we have 150. When there were 1,000 prisoners the wards were overcrowded; there was no separate place for the lunatics. They were associated in the same day rooms and elsewhere, there was no classification whatever. The men's ward has got a kind of thing that might be called a cage; a half circular room with iron bars, in which those men for the day were confined. Now, since the number of prisoners has so much diminished, they are enabled to allot some room to the women, and they are going to build a yard for them; and they have been enabled also to allot a ward to the men, so that they are better cared for. I think there should be some distinct understanding as to their position in goals. I think the lunatics in goals should be under the charge of a doctor as sick persons; that the officers of the goals should not be allowed to put them under any restraint, except on sudden occasions; that they should be reported then to the medical officer, and should not be longer under restraint than be thought necessary. Until recently there were eight female inmates; there were three women, prisoners, in charge of them—probably prostitutes; the matron exercised a general superintendence. When I went there once or twice I found the whole of them with what they call strait-waistcoats on them. I mentioned the matter to the Board, and since that they have been better attended to; but I think it desirable that there should be some positive regulation preventing the women in charge of them from using those means of restraint, except on particular occasions. I am talking of the goals in Ireland generally rather than of this particular goal, where I believe we are doing our best.

6206. The present goal regulations give the governors of goals the same control over those prisoners as over the others?—Yes.

6207. The reduction in the number of prisoners to which you have referred has enabled the Board of Superintendence to place the lunatics of the two sexes in separate wards?—Yes.

6208. Do you think that although such arrangements might be made, a goal is still a proper place for the detention of lunatics?—No, I think decidedly not; it is for safe custody, but not for curative purposes. It is generally considered that a regular, nourishing diet should be given; but in goals and workhouses they get the same rations as the other prisoners and paupers, and no more. The medical man, of course, is allowed, at his own discretion and judgment, to change the diet for them; but, practically speaking, it is not often done. Where the medical officer saw a case that he thought might be benefited, the case has been, perhaps, taken into the hospital and treated there; but, generally, most of the lunatics are on the same diet as the other inmates; and if that dietary would not do for the inmates of this asylum, I do not see why it should be deemed sufficient for the same class of persons in a goal.

6209. Would you be prepared to approve of any alteration of the law by which the magistrates were enabled to send dangerous lunatics direct to the asylum?—There must be vacancies for them if that power was given. I think it would be an excellent arrangement.

6210. It has been urged in evidence before the Commissioners that you cannot expect more civility in goals than in asylums, and that in goals also there might be no vacancies?—That is true; but they are obliged to receive them in goals. I do not think idiotic or epileptic cases ought to be sent to goals; such cases may be dangerous a day or two, but cannot be fairly considered dangerous to such an extent as to require commitment. I do not know myself what plan could be adopted in order to facilitate the sending of the lunatics in the goals to these asylums. I addressed the Government a few months ago upon the subject. I sent them a return of the persons in the goal, with the dates of their commitment, and also one from this house to show the number of people that had been since admitted here; and still those are cases remaining in the goal from year to year. Perhaps thirty or forty women have been admitted here since one went into the goal four or five years ago. If we report a vacancy, the Government go through forms of office, and, perhaps, a month or six weeks may pass before we get an answer; in the meantime, the vacancy is filled up, and then the person they propose to be removed remains longer in the goal. I suggested that some discretionary power should be given to the Board, so that the most urgent cases in the goal should be sent at once here when there were vacancies; but they had some objection to that. It seems strange to me that persons should remain in the goal year after year, while others were constantly admitted here. Forty women, or thereabouts, have been admitted into this asylum since one woman I know of entered the goal.

6211. Is it competent for the Board of Governors of the Asylum to admit a dangerous lunatic from the goal without a warrant from the Lord Lieutenant?—No.

6212. How long have you known lunatics to be detained in goals?—I think five or six years. There is one woman who, I think, is five or six years in the goal, and there is a man four years.

6213. Are you of opinion that the provisions of the Dangerous Lunatic Act have been rather abused in the committing of dangerous lunatics?—I think so.

6214. Have you heard of any cases where friends have endeavoured to get rid of a relative whom they wished to be put out of the way, by procuring his commitment as a dangerous lunatic?—I do not think they have done it without some ground to go upon. They may have aggravated an irritable person in order to get him admitted; I think there have been several instances of that kind. Our workhouse was formerly a house of industry, and there were special rooms there for lunatics, and that is the reason we have got more of them than other workhouses have. I must say that one strange thing in Ireland, and a matter which leads to inconvenience generally, is the disregard of the law. It is a very great evil, in my opinion, that the law, as in England, is not enforced, whether people consider it good or bad. In England, by the law, no man can be kept in a workhouse three hours after he has given notice of his desire to get out, while here we have a number of people kept in the poorhouse whom we have no right by law to keep. They are not allowed to go out, because it would be considered dangerous to have them at large.

6215. Is that detention based upon the opinion that a lunatic is not competent to make a legal demand for his discharge?—Yes, that is the point; but I do not know that authority is given to any body to refuse the discharge.

Overlooked of dangerous lunatics.

Delay in transferring lunatics from the goal to the asylum.

Legal difficulty.

Abuse of the Dangerous Lunatic Act.

Detection of lunatics in workhouses.

6216. How many years have you known lunatics to be detained in the workhouse?—The cause, I believe, of so many lunatics remaining in the workhouse is, that when this system was established they took from the workhouse all the cases they thought that were likely to be curable, and left there all the cases which they considered to be incurable, which cases remain there to this day. They were idiots, and persons of that class. I think there are thirty-six or thirty-seven cases in the workhouse.

6217. What arrangement is made in the workhouse for the custody of the lunatics?—There is a distinct building, both for males and females; each person has a cell to sleep in. There is a very small day-room for the lunatics of each sex, and a yard, having a large shed in it for them, to take recreation in. It was in reference to that yard the statement was made about them lying in straw. A quantity of straw was put in under the shed, and the lunatics were allowed to lie down there, or to take whatever recreation they pleased.

6218. Are the lunatics attended by other paupers in the house, or are there paid attendants?—Both; there are regular paid nurses, and, I dare say, some paupers to assist them.

6219. As regards the dietary of those lunatics in the workhouse, do they practically receive a better dietary than the other inmates?—There has been a little alteration in that respect within those few months, both in the goal and in the workhouse. More attention has been paid to the dietary in the workhouse; and they have given them more bread, and, I rather think, some of the women get some meat.

6220. Are the lunatics considered to be more particularly under the charge of the medical attendant of the workhouse?—Yes.

6221. Have you reason to believe they are visited daily in the same manner as in the hospital wards?—Yes, they are very carefully attended to, and kept extremely clean. Every thing is done for them in that respect.

6222. Have lunatics been recently transferred from the workhouse to the asylum?—No; what we have done occasionally is this, when we thought some person was excessively violent and difficult to manage, we have made an exchange, but not often. A person was sent here from the asylum who was not violent, and the violent case was sent from the workhouse to the asylum. That was done when there was no other way of providing accommodation.

6223. How was the admission paper filled up in the case to which you have referred—who entered into the bond for the removal of the lunatic, if he or she should recover?—I cannot well state that.

6224. I believe you are a Governor of the Clonmel District Asylum?—Yes.

6225. How long have you been a member of the Board?—I think since 1835.

6226. What is your opinion as to the manner in which the Governors are appointed?—I disapprove of the present mode of appointing them. I think it would be much better for the establishment to have a limited number of working men living within a certain district about the asylum, who should be appointed by Government.

6227. You would, therefore, preserve the existing arrangement?—To a certain extent. I do not approve of the present system of appointing a large body of Governors, who only come here when there is any great question brought forward, and do not attend regularly to look after the establishment and its management.

6228. As regards the officers of the asylum do you consider that any alteration should be made in the mode of their appointment?—Yes, I think there are three officers that ought to be appointed by Government: that is the principal officer, who should be a medical man, and termed the resident physician; the second is the resident apothecary, who should act as principal clerk; and the third is the housekeeper, not the matron, who should take care of the female side, and look after the clothing and the washing. I would have these appointed and paid by Government.

6229. With regard to the other officers of the institution do you consider they should be appointed by the local Board?—I think the nurses, keepers, and other officers, should be appointed by the resident physician, with the approval of the Board, an arrangement similar to the present.

6230. Do you consider that the removal of the keepers and the servants should be left to the resident physician?—Certainly, but he should report in each case to the Board.

6231. The medical manager, the apothecary, and housekeeper, being appointed by Government, would you give the Local Board any power of removing these officers?—Certainly not.

6232. You have suggested that the apothecary should discharge the duties of the clerk?—Yes.

6233. Is there any strict affinity between the duties of apothecary and those of an ordinary clerk?—No; but I think he could attend very easily to the duty of clerk. It is merely to keep the books or assist in keeping the books. The resident manager keeps them at present.

6234. Would you suggest the apothecary should be resident?—Yes.

6235. Why do you consider the residence of the apothecary necessary?—I think it is well to have another medical person in the house, so that if the resident physician should be absent, the apothecary could be present here at night.

6236. Do you think the resident physician would himself compound what was necessary for the use of the establishment?—I should say so, but I would not put that duty on him.

6237. What difference exists between the officer whom you describe as housekeeper and the person who now discharges the duties of matron?—The matron is rather of a better class of person. My idea is that we should not exactly have a person of that class as is the case. I would not have one in the rank of a lady to be housekeeper.

6238. Under the existing Privy Council Regulation is it not contemplated that the matron should be strictly such a person as you refer to, acting under the direction of the manager?—Yes.

6239. Have you any suggestion to make with reference to the manner in which the proceedings of the Board are recorded?—I think when a member approves or disapproves of any thing, and if the Board generally differ with him, that member who is left, I may say, in a minority, should have his views recorded on the minutes. For many reasons I would wish that.

6240. Do you consider that there should be a power on the part of each Governor to require to have his dissent entered?—Yes.

6241. With regard to the attendance of Governors, have you any suggestion to make as to the disqualification of Governors who have not attended to their duties in previous years?—Decidedly; I should say that if the Governors did not attend within the year a certain number of times, their names should be reported to Government for removal, and in order to have others appointed in their places.

6242. What is your opinion as to the Inspectors being members of the Board?—I disapprove of their acting on the Board. I think it proper they should come to the Board, but not interfere in the proceedings.

6244. What is your opinion as to the propriety of chaplains being attached to this institution?—From long experience, not only in this institution, but in the old asylum, I think they are unnecessary. This asylum is for curable patients, and as soon as they are cured, they are removed, or should be removed, and the idiots and decidedly insane persons, do not, from my experience, require the attendance of clergy. I know there are people here who are not exactly what I would call insane; they are eccentric characters, and it may be desirable to have clergy to attend them occasionally, but I do not think that they are proper inmates for this asylum.

6245. On what ground do you consider persons whose minds may have become in some degree diseased should be deprived of those religious ministrations which they enjoyed when at large?—There is a great number of persons here who do not understand you. I certainly would have clergymen to attend on persons when they desired to receive them. Before chaplains were appointed here no clergyman ever refused to come. There are not many cases suitable for them.

6246. I understand your objection not to be entirely against chaplains being appointed to this institution, but that the number of cases requiring the attendance of chaplains is so small that there is no necessity for it?—Certainly.

6247. It is therefore an objection more on the ground of economy than principle?—Certainly, it is for economy; but I will not oppose the appointment of chaplains if it is proved to me that they are necessary.

6248. With regard to that class of patients to whom reference has been made, who are not being supported themselves or their families, are yet unable to pay for their maintenance in a public or private asylum; how far do you consider their maintenance should be provided for in an asylum at the public charge?—My view would be to have an institution like Swift's and let them be maintained there at a reduced cost, say £10 or £15 a-year; something of a charitable institution under the Government control, into which parties could be taken for what their families could afford to pay for them.

6249. Do you see that any danger might arise of persons being admitted into such an institution whose means would enable them to be maintained in private asylums?—I think their means should be duly inquired into before they were admitted into the asylum. I think there are patients here now who might be sent into such an asylum and not kept here.

6250. In all such cases there would be no test?—I think there should be some test.

6251. What test would you propose?—Why, to ascertain how their families are situated.

6252. Is it merely the protection of an investigation?—Yes.

6253. Is it the practice in the asylum for the families of any of the servants to live within the building?—I believe they do. I have known the matron's family and the manager's to do so; and I have heard of children belonging to servants being here; I do not know whether they are here now or not.

6254. Have those matters been brought under the notice of the Board?—I do not think they have particularly.

6255. I believe there is no portion of the Board appointed as a visiting committee of the house?—No.

6256. Would you consider the appointment of such a visiting committee advisable?—I certainly would.

6257. Are you aware the Privy Council Regulations seem to contemplate the appointment of such a visiting committee?—I am not.

6258. You are not aware that the second section of those Regulations, provide that it shall be the duty of such local Board, not meaning the general Board, to see to the actual execution of the orders of the General Board, and regularly inspect the asylum and its inmates?—I used to visit here regularly when I was living in the neighbourhood; I think there should be a visiting committee.

6259. Is it your opinion that the Boards should have a more complete control over the expenditure for the making of additions to asylums or the erection of new buildings?—Yes.

6260. What control would you give to a central authority with reference to the plans or arrangements for such additions?—I think before they were satisfied as to the expenditure they ought to appoint an officer to examine and inquire and see that it was not an extravagant expenditure, or wasteful, and they should see that the money was properly expended.

The Rev. Henry Fry, sworn and examined.

6261. I believe you are the Protestant chaplain of this institution?—Yes.

6262. How long have you held that office?—For nearly two years.

6263. What proportion of the inmates of your persuasion attend your ministrations?—There are, I believe, twelve Protestants in this establishment, and eight of them attend, I may say, regularly, and sometimes nine.

6264. Do you think those eight are capable of appreciating your instruction?—No, the eight are not, but they are capable of attending and conducting themselves properly during the service. The object of religious worship is not, I conceive, more instruction, it is also worship, bringing them together into the presence of God, and not only praying with them but praying for them. Four of those persons can give good reasons for the truth in which they have been instructed. There is one who is rather violent and cannot be admitted here, but he will converse rather reasonably with me upon the subject of religion; and since my connexion with this place two inmates have died, I would say, in the full enjoyment of religious peace and comfort. I should myself, if the Government were not willing to pay for chaplains, be sorry to resign my connexion with the institution, from the benefit I know the inmates derive from the instructions, and the worship we have here on Sundays and Thursdays.

6265. I need not ask you whether you consider it would be a hardship to deprive those inmates of the advantages of attending religious worship?—I consider it would be an injustice.

6266. With regard to attendance upon patients whose end was approaching, I believe the old regulations provided that there should be every facility given to the clergymen to see them?—I believe so.

6267. Have you observed that the members of your persuasion attending your worship are orderly and sensible of what they are doing?—They are very orderly during their presence here, and sit and kneel down as orderly as I do myself. Your understanding what is going on, and two give the responses of our Liturgy. The others listen apparently in good order; I could not say they derived any information from what I said.

6268. Where do you perform divine service?—In the board room.

6269. Are you allowed free access to the patients of your persuasion?—Very free and friendly access.

6270. Are the patients provided with Books of Common Prayer and with the Bible?—Yes, they are; that is, we have some books for public worship here, but I should say we have not enough of books. I believe there is a difficulty in giving them books at other times, as they might fall into the hands of persons who might perhaps abuse them.

6271. Do you mean into the hands of persons of another persuasion?—No; persons who may be more violent, and even by themselves at times they might be abused.

William Henry Hall, Esq., J.P., sworn and examined.

6272. You are a Governor of this asylum?—Yes.

6273. Have you been long a Governor?—Since the year 1843.

6274. Have you given your attention to the management of the institution?—I have.

6275. Do you find any difficulty in getting a sufficient number of persons to tender for contracts?—No; I think not.

6276. Are you satisfied with the checks which are placed upon the accounts and the expenditure?—Quite satisfied.

6277. I believe there is a clerk and storekeeper in the institution?—There is.

6278. Does he reside upon the premises?—He does not.

6279. Is his non-residence by permission of the Board?—Yes; by permission of the Board.

6280. You have heard the suggestion which has been made, as to the manner in which the maintenance of lunatic paupers should be charged upon localities, namely, upon electoral divisions or unions, as the case might be: are you in favour of that suggestion being carried out?—No; I think it is better collected in the county cess, as at present, the money being first issued from the Consolidated Fund.

6281. Do you give that opinion from any indisposition to change the existing arrangements, or upon principle do you consider there ought to be any difference in the manner in which the maintenance of a lunatic pauper and a destitute pauper should be charged?—It is merely to prevent change. I think it is hardly worth while to alter the system, and I think the other would be much more complicated.

6282. Was the Poor Law in force at the time this institution was established?—No.

6283. What is your opinion as to the reception of patients able to pay a portion of their maintenance?—I think it would be very wise and charitable to admit patients on the payment of a certain sum. The Governors could find out the means of such persons very well, indeed, by application to the Inspectors of Police, the Poor Law Guardians, and the Magistrates of the district, and they might regulate the sum they would require each person to pay by the information they received.

6284. Do you think the regulation under which paying patients would be eligible for admission, as well as pauper patients, might not lead to a desire to admit first those who could pay a portion of the cost of their maintenance?—I do not.

6285. What is your opinion as to the proposition, that a lenient hospital for the cure of insanity should be maintained, and at the same time another building for the reception of incurable cases?—I think it would be well if there were in each province in Ireland an asylum for the reception of incurable cases, and that those district asylums should be kept altogether as curative establishments, it would save very great expense. The present establishments are very complete, and would answer very well for curative hospitals. It would be better, I think, to have an institution in each province for the incurables; and I am afraid as to what Lord Denaghmore said about having one for all Ireland that it would not be enough. If you were to have another establishment here on the same ground for the incurable cases, you would have two different establishments under different regulations.

6286. Need there be any difference in the regulations?—Yes; there should as to the diet. 6287. Might not the difficulty as regards the diet be got over, considering the inmates would be in totally distinct and separate buildings?—In my opinion it would be better to have one great establishment in each province for these classes of lunatics, than to enlarge the present asylums for the same purpose.

6288. I believe the law under which asylums were established, contemplated their being asylums for the reception of pauper lunatics in the first instance?—Yes.

6289. Would you give a preference to pauper lunatics before the paying patients in all cases?—I think if the provincial asylums I suggested were established, there would be plenty of rooms for all, and I do not think the necessity would ever arise of determining between the two; but if it did, I certainly would give the pauper lunatic the preference. At present I consider the affidavit in the form of admission is demoralizing in its operation, for people swear they are paupers, who are not paupers at all, in order to get their relatives admitted.

6290. Are idiots received into this establishment?—Yes, I think so; but these establishments I take it, were intended for curable cases.

6291. With regard to the constitution of the Board of Governors, would you suggest any alteration in the mode of appointment?—Yes; I think the simplest way would be to let the Grand Jury of the county appoint the Governors, subject to the approval of the Lord Lieutenant or the Lords Justices.

6292. Would you give the Executive Government the power of appointing any other Governors in addition to those named by the Grand Juries?—No.

6293. With regard to the appointment of the superior officers of the institution, such as the resident physician, or the manager, or the chaplain, and the master, &c., with whom do you consider those appointments should rest?—The Lord Lieutenant.

6294. Would you leave the power of removal with the Board of Governors?—I would, subject to the approval of the Lord Lieutenant.

6295. Why do you consider it advisable that the appointment of those superior officers should rest with the Lord Lieutenant?—I think he would have a wider range to select from, and would have better information as to who would be the proper person to appoint.

6296. Might not the Local Board, if entrusted with the appointment, equally invite applicants to present themselves from all parts of the kingdom?—I do not think they would have the means of finding out who were the most eligible.

6297. Does your experience lead you to believe, the Executive Government makes happier selections than the Local Board?—I should think they would for such offices as those.

6298. What is your opinion as to the Inspectors being members of the Board?—I think the Inspectors should have the power of attending at every Board, but I do not think they should vote; they ought to attend and advise, but not vote.

6299. You concur in the opinion then, that their position should more resemble that of the Poor Law Inspectors at the Boards of Guardians?—I consider that where they do not contribute to the payment of the expenses of the establishment, they should not have a vote in its management.

6300. Practically, do the Inspectors take part in the proceedings of the Board by voting?—I cannot say.

6301. You have heard the statement made as to the inconvenience which arises with reference to tenders which are transmitted to Dublin, and which are often not returned before the period arrives for receiving provisions from the intending contractor?—Yes; and I consider it extremely inconvenient. In fact we are obliged to act illegally.

6302. Practically, is much objection raised to the tenders by the authorities in Dublin?—Not very often; there have been.

6303. Are the tenders for the year or half year?—For the half year.

6304. Are the tenders usually received just at the period of the expiration of the previous contracts or long before?—About a month before.

6305. If the tenders were received at an earlier period, would that obviate the inconvenience which at present arises?—I should think it would.

6306. From your experience, what practical good result do you conceive, if any, has arisen from the transmission of those tenders to the central authority in Dublin?—I do not know, that in any one instance the slightest good in the world resulted. A great deal of inconvenience, and no good whatever, I believe has been the result.

6307. Has a tender ever been refused where it was accepted by the Board?—I do not think that has ever occurred.

CARLOW DISTRICT ASYLUM.

Matthew Kennedy White, Esq., M.D., J.P., sworn and examined.

Carlow District
Asylum.

Matthew E. White,
M.D.

6308. How long have you been officially connected with the Carlow District Lunatic Asylum?—Since April, 1836; I think it was about the 5th April or the latter days of March.

6309. What office do you at present hold?—Manager, or, as they call it, Resident Physician.

6310. Had you previously held any other office in connexion with the establishment?—I was Visiting Physician.

6311. What number is the asylum calculated to accommodate?—The house held about 207, but we were then too much crowded.

6312. What are the actual numbers at present in the house?—One hundred and ninety-nine. Of those, 46 are from Carlow, 65 from Kildare, 88 from Wexford, both males and females. Number of patients in the Asylum.

6313. Are these the three counties included in the district?—Yes, at present included.

6314. When the district was originally formed, did it comprise a larger area?—It did, a much larger area. In addition to the present counties, it comprised the county of Kilkenny and the county of the city of Kilkenny.

6315. Is the asylum in your opinion at present adequate for the wants of the district?—Not at all.

Inadequacy of the Asylum for the wants of the district.
Number of lunatics
in gaols and workhouses in the district.

6316. Do you form that opinion from the demands for admission with which the Governors are unable to comply?—Partly from that, and partly from having, in the early part of last November, applied by letter to the public institutions containing lunatics for a return of them. I then got voluntary returns from the gaols and workhouses of our district; and it appeared there were about 130 lunatics in those places, besides persons at large living with their families, the number of whom I had no means of ascertaining. That was on the 1st November, the date of my inquiry.

6317. Has that statement of facts caused the subject of additional accommodation to be brought under the consideration of the Board of Governors?—Yes, very seriously.

6318. I believe no final determination has been arrived at on the subject?—So far as our Governors are concerned, they appear to have come to a final determination as to what to recommend.

6319. No final decision has been given by the Executive Government?—No.

6320. What was the final decision of your Board?—They recommended the enlargement of this house.

Proposed additions to the asylum;
improvements.

6321. To what extent?—To double its present extent at least, if not more.

6322. By enlargement you mean additions to the present building?—Yes, increasing the size of the present building.

6323. Is it also contemplated to make any improvements in the existing building?—Yes, with regard to the internal arrangements; to supply different things that were wanted, a chapel, and an infirmary, and baths, all of which have been postponed for some time in consequence of the pending change.

6324. Was the plan which met with the approval of the Governors one by which the building was to be extended at either end?—Yes, they have approved of a plan, but the absolute plan was only furnished this morning. [A sketch of the plan is exhibited to the Commissioners.]

6325. What is the extent of the asylum grounds?—Within the enclosing walls ten Irish acres and some roods and perches. There are four and three-quarter acres outside rented by the Board.

6326. Is it proposed to take any additional ground in carrying out the extension of the building?—I think not. I think it does not appear necessary for the extension of the building; it may be for employment hereafter.

6327. Would there be any difficulty in procuring additional ground?—I should think not. Mr. Bruen, whose land adjoins us, and who is a member of our Board, would, it is my impression, accommodate us.

6328. Were the Board of Governors unanimous in their determination on the subject of the extension of the building?—Those who attended were. The whole Board, I believe, if they were present, would not be unanimous. Opinion of the Governors generally on the subject of the proposed extension.

6329. Has the attendance been generally of Governors from the three counties, or more on the part of those from one county?—I may say from two counties generally. Wexford has occasionally sent a Governor here, but not very frequently. Sir James Power, Mr. Derinzy, and Mr. Braddel, I think, were here.

6330. Were the Board of Governors summoned specially to consider this plan before it was adopted?—Several times.

6331. Did the Governors from Wexford and Kildare absent themselves on the occasion?—The Kildare Governors did not; the Wexford Governors were absent.

CARLOW.
Carlow District
Asylum.
Matthew E. White,
M.D.

6332. You have stated that the district originally comprised the county and the county of the city of Kilkenny, which have now been erected into a separate district?—Yes.

6333. Has any settlement been made of the amount to be repaid to Kilkenny in consequence of that change?—There was a Commission came down here on the subject, consisting of Sir Thomas Deane and Mr. Lanyon, who held a Court and made an inquiry, but they gave no opinion then. I heard since they had made an award.

6334. I suppose it is understood that something will have to be repaid?—I believe the Board expect it.

Paying patients.

6335. In calculating the accommodation which it would be necessary to provide, in addition to that already existing in the asylum, was any computation made for patients who might be prepared to pay a portion of their maintenance?—I do not think there was. I do not think that consideration, in relation to the extension of the house, was brought into the calculation of the Board. They were of opinion that double the present size of the house would afford quite sufficient accommodation for all the wants which presented themselves. In the present state of things the Board, generally speaking, have not much discussed the question of admitting the paying class; but I do not think they are much in favour of doing so. At the same time they consider it a great hardship, upon the friends of such persons, that they are not enabled to place them in some institution where they would be safe. So far, however, as I could gather, there was a fear on the part of the Governors that if they allowed that class admission, the house would be filled up by paying patients, to the exclusion of paupers.

6336. Then I am to understand that at present there are no paying patients in the establishment?—We have one patient who pays a pension. There is another in the house, and her family proposed to pay £5 a-year, to which they said the girl was entitled. £2 10s. was paid one half-year, and then when I applied for further payment, the answer I received, and the representation made to the Board, was, that the girl, being insane, could not give a proper receipt for the money, which was in her own right; and that as she could not give this proper receipt for the money, the payment was not made to her family, and therefore they could not remit the money to us. That was the purport of the communication. She is from Rose, in the county of Wexford.

Modes of admission.

6337. Are the patients admitted into the asylum by the decision of the Board?—Yes, by the decision of the Board, with some exceptions. There is a clause which states that under certain urgent circumstances the officers of the asylum may admit patients, taking care to report to the Board at their next meeting to have the admissions confirmed. I do not think that has been acted upon. I am not aware that there is at present a patient in the house so admitted. There is also another arrangement with respect to any urgent cases. Three Governors sign the admission form, stating in effect that "we, the undersigned Governors, believe this case to be an urgent one, and we recommend its admission." Without waiting for a Board if there is a vacancy I admit the case, and report it on the next Board day, and the admission is confirmed. That is a by-law.

6338. Can you furnish the printed form of admission which is in use?—Yes. [Same is delivered in.]

Epileptic and idiot cases; difficulty as to admitting.

6339. Are epileptic or idiot patients refused admission into the asylum?—We have such patients in the house, but it is a bar to their admission—idiotcy certainly; epileptics we do take in. We consider the house is for curable patients, and we do not consider an epileptic or an idiot curable. I have not absolutely known, or at least I do not remember, a case positively refused on the ground of its being epileptic; but there is an unwillingness on my part to state to the Board that I think they ought to admit such cases, and there is an unwillingness on the part of the Board to receive them.

6340. I observe that although the certificate requires a statement to be made that the patient is curable, it does not exclude idiots or epileptics?—No, it does not.

6341. Of course you are aware that the Privy Council regulations declare that epileptic persons, whose the fits produce imbecility of mind as well as of body, shall be received?—I think that is the case. It depends very much on the local medical certificates as to whether the case is curable or not.

Discharge or removal of patients from the Asylum.

6342. Have you ever found any great difficulty in obtaining the removal of a patient by the person who has entered into the bond for the purpose?—Frequently; I am often obliged to send a patient home. I have sent them down as far as Wexford. I have been obliged to send a keeper or a nurse with a patient a reasonable distance to deliver the patient up.

6343. Of course at the cost of the asylum?—Yes, at the cost of the asylum.

Want of information respecting the previous history of gael cases.

6344. In cases which come to the asylum from the gael upon the warrant of the Lord Lieutenant, are you enabled to obtain all the particulars of their previous history?—None whatever, and that is a great deficiency. I have spoken frequently on the subject. We get no information whatever, unless I may happen to see the gaelor and ask him, "Can you tell me any thing about that man?" He will say, perhaps, that he was committed on such a day, and that he believes he is subject to such and such fits, and that that is all he knows about him.

6345. I presume you consider it would be of advantage to have such information furnished?—Yes, of very great advantage.

Transmission of cases from the gael in the district; Wexford gael.

6346. Do you receive very many patients from the gael?—A great number.

6347. Are the cases transmitted from the gael in excess of those admitted by the Board?—I think latterly they have been.

6348. Have you received a greater number from any one gael in the district than from another?—We have got ten or twelve in a batch from Wexford. I speak of the time we cleared out the Kilkenny cases, and had plenty of vacancies; then I got, I think, twenty in two different days; the males on one day and the females on another day.

6349. It appears from the latest information the Commissioners have received, that there are twenty-six lunatics in the Wexford gaol: have you recently received any cases from that gaol?—I think I have within the last two months.

6350. Are patients frequently received here from workhouses?—Yes, from Gorey and Ross. We have, in one instance, a long time ago, exchanged a patient with the workhouse people—an incurable patient. That was done by order of the Board with the Carlow workhouse. We received in return a case that was considered curable.

6351. When you receive patients from a workhouse, are you enabled to obtain the information which you require respecting them?—No, not always. Sometimes, for instance, in this way, I may get it; I receive a letter from the workhouse, stating that they have a dangerous lunatic to get admitted into the asylum, and inquiring how soon I can admit it. I immediately send one of the forms, telling them to let me have it by such a day to lay before the Board. Sometimes they will fill up that form and send it, and then I will have the information so far as they can give it; but generally speaking, it is very imperfect. The previous history they cannot give. The doctor gives a statement of the actual condition of the case.

6352. Who enters into the bond for the removal of the workhouse patient?—Generally speaking, the master.

6353. Have you ever experienced any difficulty in procuring the removal of those patients?—No, except in this way, a case now occurs to me, that was from the Gorey workhouse. My colleague and I reported our opinion to the Board that the patient was recovered, and we were ordered to discharge her. I then wrote to the master of the workhouse to come and take the patient. He came according to his bond, and took her out, and the parties in charge lost her on the way, and as I suspect not unintentionally. She wandered that night to the Tinnahilly workhouse and was there taken in, and we had to receive her back again. She was not insane, in my opinion, any more than any one here, but she might have been in some degree eccentric. We dismissed her again, and the master of the Gorey workhouse came and took her.

6354. How soon after her reception at the Tinnahilly workhouse was she admitted here again?—Within ten days. She was sent from Tinnahilly to Gorey, and came back to me from Gorey, and the man who brought her here said she was not insane.

6355. How was she ultimately disposed of?—She was sent out again.

6356. Do you mean discharged at the door of the asylum?—No, I never do that—she was sent to Gorey. I never discharge a case in that way, except he belongs to the town here, and then I generally send down a keeper or a nurse to take the person to his friends who placed him with me.

6357. It appears by returns furnished to the Commissioners, that there were 116 incurable cases out of 199 in the asylum on the 1st January, 1857?—Yes, that was only by estimation. Some of those we considered incurable may turn out curable, while a great many we estimated to be curable may positively be incurable.

6358. Are the curable cases distributed through the various wards?—Yes.

6359. Have the Board ever had under their consideration a plan for providing for the quiet and incurable cases in a separate and distinct building anywhere?—The Board have discussed the question of building an hospital or a house for incurables, into which to draft the incurables, after a certain length of time, from the asylum.

6360. Am I to understand that such a proposition did not meet with as much favour as the extension of the present asylum?—No I do not think it did, and the matter turned up curiously, perhaps, more than otherwise.

6361. What is your opinion as to the economy of such an arrangement, supposing the new building to be contiguous to the existing asylum, and managed by the same staff?—I do not think there would be more economy in that than in a larger house; it would be about the same thing, perhaps not so costly; unless it was very close indeed to the asylum, we should have another staff for cooking and washing, whereas if the present building was enlarged, the cooking staff and the officers generally, and the washing arrangements with some additions, on account of the increased number of the inmates, would answer. I think it would be more economical to enlarge the house, than to build a new house for the incurables. I do not know whether it would be more desirable in other points of view.

6362. Do you see any objection in other points of view?—I think it would not be advisable to consign a person to a house avowedly allotted to incurables. It would be saying to that person, "You will never recover," and that, in many cases would have an injurious effect upon them. It is, in point of fact, saying to a patient after some years' experience of him, "We consider you incurable."

6363. You fear it would have an injurious effect upon the minds of the patients?—I think it might, and I shrewdly would, have an injurious effect.

6364. Are the incurable patients generally persons of that sensitive condition of mind, that they would be affected by it?—Many of them are. They are only insane occasionally, and they have lucid intervals for perhaps a month or two, and they then break down again, and are insane for periods varying from a fortnight to three months as the case may be.

6365. Do you consider that the minds of those patients are more sensitive than those of patients in the ordinary hospitals, who are discharged as incurable?—Their minds are sometimes very sensitive; I would not say they are more so. I have not instituted in my mind a comparison between the two classes, but the minds of such persons, in my opinion, are sometimes very sensitive.

6366. Supposing such an institution established, does it of necessity follow, that the watching of the patients' mental disease should be abandoned in a medical point of view?—I think not. I should premise that our estimate of curables and incurables, is founded amongst other circumstances, on the continuance of the disease. That was one element in our consideration. I have known cases to recover that were considered incurable, and I can understand a person considered incurable for twenty years recovering after that time. I do not say that it is impossible or improbable.

6367. I believe there is a visiting physician belonging to the establishment?—Yes.

6368. With whom does the responsibility of the medical treatment of the patients rest?—According to the absolute rules, with Dr. O'Meara, the visiting physician; according to practice, we divide it. Of course, according to the rules, the responsibility is with the visiting physician; but, in practice, we treat the cases as we would do in private: we go round together, and see them, and consult together, and do the best we can for them.

6369. Am I to understand, then, that, practically, the visiting physician, Dr. O'Meara, is more in the nature of a consulting physician, as regards the treatment of the lunatics?—No, I would say he is more in the nature of a joint attending physician. He attends with me every second day, and we visit together and consult together. It is precisely as if we were both attending a case having been called in from the beginning, I mean in private life.

6370. Have you ever considered that the responsibility should rest absolutely with one party or the other, in a case of the kind?—Perhaps it ought. In every establishment the responsibility ought to be on one person, but in practice, I do not find any inconvenience arise at present.

6371. Supposing a difference of opinion to arise between you and Dr. O'Meara, as regards the treatment of a case of insanity—whose opinion should prevail?—I do not know. We talk the thing over; we reason with one another, as men do in the world together. If we were both equally positive, and that I said, "I will not mind your treatment," I think it is in his power to say, "It is my order, and let it be done." That is according to the rules. He might say, "I have asked your advice, you do not agree with me, and I will follow out my own course;" then I should obey.

6372. The answer you have given, is in accordance with the rules?—Yes.

6373. But supposing the law to be altered, and that the manager should be declared to be the resident physician of the establishment, would you see any difficulty in the way of defining the duties of the resident physician and the visiting physician?—I do not think there would be any difficulty in defining them, placing the charge of the house in the hands of the resident physician, and the medical treatment, and letting the visiting physician consult with him. If there was a clash of opinion, I would say to the visiting physician, let us call in a third man, and we will both abide by him. These things do not occur, however, so often in practice as people imagine.

6374. You apply your answer to the case of treatment of insanity?—To the treatment either of insanity or the bodily diseases of patients; but in establishing general rules for an institution, I think there ought to be a responsibility placed upon one person solely.

6375. Such being the case, if there were an alteration of the law, upon whom would you place that responsibility—upon the resident or the visiting physician?—I should say upon the resident physician, particularly with regard to insanity; perhaps I would not be so confident with regard to bodily disease.

6376. Is it your opinion that the resident physician, whose attention is more particularly directed to the study of the cases of insanity in his charge, would be more competent to deal with them than the ordinary practitioner would be?—Yes; he lives amongst them, sees them every hour, and thus has a great advantage over a person who visits three days in the week, and to whom a lunatic patient will put on an appearance quite different from his real character and condition. The man who is going daily and hourly through the establishment, and hears the particulars of all the cases, is, I think, a better judge and better enabled to treat them than the man who sees them at the intervals I have stated.

6377. Is it your opinion the medical treatment of insanity requires a more constant attendance than the visits of a visiting physician?—I think it does.

6378. Do you consider the withdrawal of the resident physician from general practice would render him less capable of treating cases of ordinary disease?—I think it would.

6379. Is there any thing exceptional in the treatment of ordinary cases of lunatics which would give him an advantage over an ordinary practitioner?—There is this exception, that in many cases lunatics do not complain of their diseases in the way patients in the world do. I have known a patient here have a cavity in the lung, with ptisis, and not to make any sign till the disease was far advanced; he never said a word, and the first thing we observed was, perhaps, that the patient was declining, and then, on making examination the cavity was found in the lung. I speak now of bodily disease. The patient does not tell you he is affected, nor is he able to tell you truly and correctly what are his sensations. It is like the case of young children, who cannot tell correctly how they are affected.

6380. Might not that difficulty of ascertaining the nature of the disease, from the very concealment you describe, render the presence of a person of considerable practical experience of much greater advantage?—I think so; two heads are better than one, and a man may see a thing, particularly if he is out in the world, daily witnessing the character of disease, better than another who has not the same opportunities. The former may be better qualified to treat the bodily diseases of lunatics than the man who is withdrawn from practice and confined in an asylum.

of the two physicians

6381. The question in the case is, which would be the best to direct the treatment?—I think perhaps the resident man, from his being better acquainted with the condition of the insane.

6382. Am I to understand, therefore, that you would give the responsibility of treating bodily disease also to the resident physician?—I do not see how you can well separate them?

6383. The visiting physician, therefore, would become very much a consulting physician under the scheme you advocate?—He would be an attending physician. In private practice an attending physician may say to a family, "Your friend or relative is very ill and I would like to have another in with me," and the family select another medical man whom they call in. I would call him a consulting physician; or if two men differ with respect to the treatment of a case, a third is called in as a consulting physician.

6384. Is there an infirmary attached to the institution?—No.

6385. Are the patients treated in their several cells?—Yes; in their several cells.

6386. What is your opinion as a medical man, as to the advantage of an infirmary in an institution of this kind?—I think most highly of it. It is upwards of twenty years since I spoke about it first. There were two wards in this house originally intended for infirmary wards, and when I came here first they were labelled on the outside "Infirmary;" but the pressure of patients caused them to be turned into dormitories. They were badly constructed for their purpose, for in case of contagious disease, they were quite open to the rest of the corridors; in my opinion an infirmary should be a separate place.

6387. Will you state, particularly, the grounds on which you consider patients in lunatic asylums should be treated in an infirmary rather than in their separate cells?—First, if contagious disease occurs in the asylum, it is necessary to separate the persons affected from the others; next, a patient in a cell is exposed to the annoyance of the turmoil and noise of persons going about, waking up and down, screaming and shouting, and at night particularly so, which I think is very injurious to sick persons; besides, it is of advantage to have an infirmary with a female nurse constantly attending—no one can attend a sick person like a woman.

6388. That attendance cannot be secured in the same way if the patients be distributed throughout the separate cells of the various divisions?—Not at all.

6389. Are there any means of warming the cells in which the patients may be treated?—There are fireplaces in the corridors, and in cold weather they are lighted.

6390. Are those sufficient to give adequate warmth to the cells of the patients?—Generally speaking, they are not, in some of the corridors. Where there are four-bedded dormitories we have a fire in the chamber itself, and frequently when I have a couple of patients in different cells, I move them into one and have a fire lighted in it; I speak of sick patients; if there is a patient ill in No. 5, and another in No. 7, I bring them together into one or other place.

6391. In the case to which you refer, that of placing patients together in the same ward, would there be patients in the dormitory who would not be sick?—Yes; but the cases I speak of would not be cases of contagious disease.

6392. Suppose an epidemic unfortunately to break out in the asylum to-morrow, how would you be enabled to make the necessary arrangements for treating the patients?—I had once or twice typhus fever in the asylum, and I was obliged to remove patients to the garden house, and get a hired nurse to attend them. I have no means of separating them if such occurred, but I would be obliged to do the best I could.

6393. What particular classification is made of the patients?—We have convalescent, refractory, and tranquil; the names are over the doors, but, in point of fact, they are not so classified, in consequence of the crowded state of the house. Generally speaking, the refractory are put together, but they are very much mixed up.

6394. Are any amusements provided for the patients?—They read and walk.

6395. Is there a library of books for their use?—Well, there was, but it is gone; the books were torn. It is twelve years, or perhaps fifteen years ago, since there was about £5 worth of books bought, and they are not now forthcoming.

6396. If the library is not forthcoming, how are the patients enabled to read?—They get books or newspapers. I frequently give newspapers to patients; some of their friends send them prayer-books.

6397. Are any games such as backgammon and draughts played by them?—The men used to play cards, but they would fight and quarrel, and I was obliged to put a stop to it.

6398. Do the female patients take exercise in the grounds daily?—Yes; they walk daily.

6399. How are they otherwise employed?—Sewing, knitting, spinning, carding, cleaning the corridors, washing in the laundry, and assisting in the kitchen; there are different sorts of female occupation.

6400. Do you make up in the establishment all the clothing required for the use of the inmates?—All the female clothing; the male clothing is made up by a tailor in the town, who is paid so much a suit.

6401. Are none of the inmates employed at tailoring?—We have one man a tailor, but sometimes he will not work; sometimes he will make braces and do things of that kind, but no more.

6402. Are the shoes made-up in the establishment?—No; they are supplied by a person in the town by contract.

6403. It would appear from the return which you have furnished to the Commissioners

- that, with the exception of the one tailor to whom you have referred, there have not been male inmates in the establishment who, during the last year, were employed either in weaving, tailoring, shoemaking, or carpentering?—Yes.
8404. Have any attempts been made to introduce these employments into the house?—We had a carpenter in the house, a criminal lunatic from the county Wexford; he is now in Dundrum Asylum. As long as he was here he used to work, but I always considered it a risk to have him working, as carpenters' tools are so exceedingly dangerous.
8405. Is it your opinion that occupations of this kind are advantageous to the patients?—Decidedly.
8406. How do the patients employ themselves in the long winter's evenings?—They talk, dance, have music, and sit by the fire.
- Frequency of dancing and music. 8407. When you speak of dancing and music, how frequently are such entertainments given?—They have them every day almost. The sexes do not meet. There may be a violin played within a very short time; in the outside division there is a patient plays the flute.
8408. Are we to understand these amusements take place in the day-rooms of the asylum during the long winter's evenings generally?—Frequently.
8409. How frequently do you suppose they have had these amusements during the last three months?—Perhaps twice a-week and perhaps oftener; sometimes every night during the winter, and sometimes only once a-week—just according as the patient is well, or inclined to play.
- Hour of retiring to rest. 8410. The patients retire to bed at eight in the evening, and rise at seven in the morning?—Yes; they rise at seven in the winter's mornings, and six in the summer. A report is made to me that they are all in bed at eight o'clock; they begin to go to bed at half-past seven. If a man is tired after working all day out in the garden, he will go to bed very frequently immediately after supper, and he will not be prevented.
- Baths, lavatories,
&c. 8411. What number of baths are there in the establishment?—One for the whole establishment, a very bad one. That was one of the things under the consideration of the Board, and which was postponed in consequence of the contemplated change respecting Wexford. We have estimates and plans for making two baths—one for each sex.
8412. Is the bath connected with the corridors and cells?—It is outside: it is only a cold and shower-bath.
8413. Supposing a bath to be required for a sick patient, how is it provided?—We have a slipper bath in the house, which is a most inconvenient thing for a sick patient, particularly if the patient is at all refractory. If a patient should faint, I think the slipper bath is very dangerous.
8414. Do each of the patients in the asylum, fit to be so treated, get a bath once a-week?—Generally speaking their feet are washed; they do not get a bath.
8415. How frequently are they so washed?—Twice a-week; that is the direction; generally speaking, from twice to once a-week, according to the state of their skin.
8416. Are there lavatories in each of the wards?—No.
- Patients washed in the yards in fine
weather. 8417. Where are the patients usually washed each morning?—Sometimes under the piazza in the morning; that is, the men and the women wash in their rooms, and sometimes, in fine weather, they wash in the yard.
8418. Do you mean by the yard, a place unprotected from the weather?—There is a piazza in the yard; the front is open.
- Water supply. 8419. Is any hot water laid on in any part of the establishment?—No, except in the washing baths of the laundry, from the laundry fire.
8420. Has the question of a proper supply of hot and cold water, and the erection of lavatories, been under the consideration of the Board?—Yes; I am not aware that the lavatories were included in the plans for the baths.
- Proposed baths. 8421. Is it proposed to have these new baths in the wards or in the detached building, to which you refer?—Dr. O'Meara and I are anxious to have the baths in the wards, that is, we wish to have them opening from the wards outside into a little building. We think it would be offensive to have them in the wards.
8422. Do you mean that they should be so placed that an inmate could not be brought up to receive a bath without passing through the day-room?—No; in fact, Dr. O'Meara has a plan by which there would be a bath room and a bedroom off it, so that when a patient got a bath he might be brought to the bed temporarily, and be afterwards removed to his own cell.
8423. Do you see any objection to having one bath for the use of a whole division?—I think when I came here first there was in each corridor a shower bath and a cold bath, at the lower end of the corridor. I forget exactly how it was; but at all events, whether it was from the pressure of patients and the want of room, or from their becoming offensive, which I am quite aware they did become, they were removed, and the bath-room was converted into a single room. The bath-room is there still, with the marks of the opening in the floor where the bath was.
- Water-closets;
sewerage. 8424. Are there water-closets in the several wards or divisions?—No; there is only one water-closet in the whole house.
8425. Are there privies?—Yes, privies in the yards.
8426. Are these accessible in wet weather, so that the patients need not go through the yard?—They can go under the piazza.
8427. Is the sewerage of the establishment perfect?—It is not; a large sewer passes under the house, and goes out to the fir wall; when I came first, as resident physician, it was blocked up altogether, and I had it opened and cleaned out.

6428. How are the privies discharged?—Into a hole, which is covered with turf mould.
6429. Who are employed in that work?—The patients themselves, superintended by a keeper. A nasty job it is. The privies have been greatly improved since I came here.
6430. What are the arrangements for ventilating the house?—The windows and doors, and little openings in the doors, opposite the windows.
6431. No ventilating shafts or flues?—Not to my knowledge.
6432. No means of extracting the foul air?—No.
6433. Do you find, generally speaking, that the ventilation is sufficient?—I think so. We have sometimes offensive smells, which, I think, is owing merely to the want of cleanliness; at the same time, better ventilation would remove the smell.
6434. Is the establishment lighted with gas?—Yes.
6435. Where do the patients dine?—In their day-rooms; I think it would be better to have a general dining-hall for each sex. We have already recommended that, in a report we made some two years ago.
6436. What furniture is there in the day-rooms?—Tables and forms.
6437. Have you chairs with backs, for weak or delicate patients?—We had two; I think the inspectors did not approve of them; we have not got them now.
6438. Have you furniture in the corridors?—No, except a box for coats.
6439. Are the corridors much used on wet days by the patients?—Yes; they walk up and down in them, and on fine days, too. If a patient is moody, and keeps away from the rest, he will not go into the day-room, but will walk up and down the corridor.
6440. There are no means whatever to enable patients to rest in the corridors?—No.
6441. Are the airing courts provided with seats?—In summer I bring out the forms from the dining-rooms into the airing courts, and in very fine weather in summer I frequently bring out the tables, and let them breakfast, and dine, and sup, in the airing courts.
6442. Are the airing courts surrounded by buildings on all sides?—Either by buildings or walls. There are two of them surrounded by buildings, and four of them partly surrounded by buildings, and partly by a high boundary wall.
6443. Are they, in your opinion, suitable places for the recreation of inmates?—I should think them cold and damp.
6444. Are there any shrubs or trees?—I put a tree into each court on the female side, and on the male side, but the bark was cut and spoiled; and on the same side I put a grass plot round each, and they walk round that plot. Some shrubs which I put were partly destroyed by frost and partly by mischief. The trees on the female side have not been much injured.
6445. Is the clothing supplied for the inmates sufficient?—Whenever I want clothing I have only to apply to the Board, and I always get it.
6446. What bedsteads are generally used in the institution?—They are made of iron, with the exception of one like a hammock, made of chains, instead of rope. I have only the one which I got for an experiment, and I do not like it.
6447. Have you found the iron bedsteads answer?—Yes; but they are liable to be broken very much.
6448. Have the patients ever succeeded in breaking them?—They jump on them, and break them sometimes.
6449. Do the patients injure themselves or others with the broken portions of the bedsteads?—They do not break off portions; I have never known them attempt that.
6450. What bedding is generally used?—Straw; and they have lately had cocoa fibre for mattresses.
6451. What is your opinion of the comparative advantages of the two?—For clean patients I think the cocoa fibre makes a very nice bed, with straw under it to keep the bed from being pressed down through the openings of the slats; otherwise, unless it is made very thick indeed, I do not think it is as good a bed as the other; I mean, that they should be thick enough to keep the lads from pressing up and being felt by the patients.
6452. The lower classes in this country generally use straw?—Generally, or chaff.
6453. What is the general dietary of the establishment?—Stimulant for breakfast, bread and milk for dinner, bread and cocoa for supper.
6454. How often in the week is animal food given?—Three times a-week to all patients, and then any one that requires more gets it every day as a medical allowance or extra.
6455. What is the allowance of animal food?—It is made always into soup. The soup is made of a quarter of a pound of meat per patient, with three ox-heads put in for the advantage of all generally. The meat is served up with the soup, cut into small bits.
6456. Are potatoes at all used?—Yes, by the servants and patients when they express a particular desire for them.
6457. Am I to understand that the general diet of the house is in any way regulated by the general desire of the patients?—No, except in that instance. If I am going round, a patient may say to me, "let me have potatoes, I don't like bread," and I may say, "you will have potatoes." The females often express a wish for tea; that I set my face against as much as I possibly can, but I sometimes give it.
6458. Has a general meal of potatoes been given to the whole house within the last year?—No. Before the potato disease potatoes were used in place of bread for dinner.
6459. Is there any particular reason for not reverting to the practice which existed before the potato disease?—The potatoes are not yet plenty enough, and the number of patients in the house has increased very much, and there is a delay in cooking potatoes.
6460. Are potatoes in general use now amongst the lower classes in the country?—I am not aware, I rather think, not so much as they used to be.

- CARLOW.
Catholic District Asylum.
Matthew E. Widdis, M.D.
8461. Do you think patients, upon being admitted into this asylum and being placed upon a bread diet, are subjected to an alteration from their ordinary dietary which has an injurious effect upon them?—I think quite the contrary; they almost invariably get fit.
8462. Did you find the change from the potatoes to the bread diet to be attended with good or bad consequences?—I have found no bad consequences. We used to give milk in the evenings, and to give cocoa also on account of attacks of dysentery.
8463. Are any vegetables used?—Yes, cabbage, turnips, calary, parsnips; they are made up into soup; and also, any patient that gets stout, if he likes cabbage, or turnips, or parsnips, gets them.
- Religious ministrations.
 8464. Are there chaplains attached to this institution?—Two; a Protestant and a Roman Catholic chaplain.
8465. Have chaplains been always attached to this institution?—Not always; I think since about 1844.
- Attendance at.
 8466. How many of the inmates usually attend Divine worship?—I am better able to speak of the Catholic worship. Generally from sixty to eighty attend Catholic worship, and about, perhaps, six or eight attend Protestant worship. These are the average numbers. There are not more than eight or ten Protestants in the house.
8467. That is, something under fifty per cent. of the inmates attend Divine worship?—I dare say there are rather more—eighty or ninety—about one-half.
- Effects of.
 8468. Is it your opinion, that allowing the inmates an opportunity of attending Divine worship, and of receiving the ministrations of chaplains, has an advantageous or injurious effect?—Most advantageous, according to my experience.
8469. Has a case ever arisen in which you considered an individual patient might be injuriously affected by communication with a chaplain?—Yes; I mean for Divine service, I do not mean conversation with a chaplain. I have frequently forbidden a man to be allowed to go to either Protestant or Catholic service, when I considered him to be unfit. If he was very violent he would disturb the congregation, and it would be injurious to himself as well as to the others. I have forbidden such a man for a fortnight or three weeks successively from going.
- Manager may interfere as to patients unfit for religious communication.
 8470. In cases where you considered that the state of a patient's mind would not admit of his receiving any advantage from communication with his clergyman, what course would you usually take?—I do not think I have ever found it necessary to prevent absolutely all communication with a clergyman. I do not think I would prevent the communication; I would go with the clergyman to the case, apprise him of the sort of case it was, and give him my opinion about it. I do not think I would have a right to interfere further, unless it were a very violent case, so that the clergyman would be in danger.
8471. Supposing, which is not likely, that a clergyman was so indiscreet as to pursue his conversation with a patient, very much to the injury of the patient, without any practical religious good at the time, would you consider it your duty to interfere?—Yes.
8472. Do you consider that power should be left with the manager?—I think so.
8473. Is there any chapel provided for the celebration of Divine worship?—No.
8474. Where is Divine worship celebrated?—Catholic worship is celebrated in one of the corridors. We have a little portable altar, which is placed against the wall; the males are below and the females are above. I generally attend Mass myself. The members of the Established Church go into No. 5 day-room.
- School instruction for the inmates.
 8475. Are there many of the inmates capable of reading or writing?—I would say, perhaps, thirty per cent.
8476. Do you consider it would be of advantage to provide instruction for them?—I cannot see how it could be done. The ages they generally come in at interpose difficulties. I do not think a man of forty or fifty is very willing to learn or very capable of learning. As an occupation for the mind it might be of use, the same as their playing backgammon or any other game.
- The Apothecary; the medicines.
 8477. There is an apothecary, I presume, attached to this institution?—There is.
8478. Does he compound the medicines upon the spot?—He comes up on the same days as the visiting physician, generally with him, and compounds the medicines before he leaves the house, and he also comes whenever sent for.
8479. The medicines being provided by the establishment?—Yes, and kept in a surgery in the establishment.
- Clerk and Store-keeper.
 8480. Is there a clerk and storekeeper?—There is.
8481. Does he reside on the premises?—He resides on the premises.
- Appointment and dismissal of inferior officers.
 8482. By whom are the inferior officers appointed?—I appoint the servants, reporting to the Board, who confirm the appointment.
8483. By whom are they dismissed?—By me, under the same circumstances. I feel of course that a servant has the power of appeal, if he conceives himself wronged.
- Daily statement. Restraint; the punishment of inmates.
 8484. Do you keep the daily statement book regularly?—Yes.
8485. Are the cases of restraint entered in that book?—The doctor enters them in his Medical Register.
8486. Then that portion of the daily statement book, which requires a return of the persons under daily restraint or seclusion, is not filled up?—It is sometimes, but not invariably.
8487. Is restraint much practised in the establishment?—Very seldom.
8488. By whom are the instruments of restraint kept?—They are generally in one of the lockers in the office, and sometimes they are in the different divisions. The nurses and keepers have them sometimes. We have very few of them; nothing but the strait waistcoat, and the strap and buckle.

6489. Have you no ankle straps?—Yes; the one is for the hand or ankle.
6490. Is seclusion ever practised?—Frequently; a patient is put into a cell until the paroxysm is over.
6491. Is there a padded room?—No.
6492. Is the shower bath ever used as a punishment?—Not latterly; it is threatened as a punishment, but not used.
6493. How long has it not been used?—I suppose, for the last year, or two years, it has not been used. It is very frequently threatened. In fact, I think the system of punishing lunatics is most erroneous.
6494. Is it not contrary to the general principle of the law to punish a lunatic?—It is; and speaking medically, I think it is a most erroneous system.
6495. You do not consider punishment to be proper medical treatment?—I do not.
6496. You are aware that, by the Privy Council rules, the instruments of restraint should be kept by the manager himself?—So they are, generally speaking, kept in the office.
6497. It appears that on one of the Commissioners going through the house this morning, a patient named Michael Doyle, was found in bed in a single cell, where it was stated he had been for some weeks?—He was up the day before yesterday.
6498. Is he able to walk?—He is; but when I was going round at dinner-time, he was reported to me as having got a weakness, and I sent him to his cell.
6499. The door of his cell was found locked, and he was tightly strapped down in the bed with body straps?—I did not see that. I suppose it was done to prevent him tearing his clothes, or to prevent him getting out of the bed; or something of that kind.
6500. His bed is also stated to have been in a bad condition, and the room very offensive; do you consider that a suitable mode of treating such a case?—I do not. I did not see him to-day, as I was preparing for the meeting of the Commissioners here.
6501. Are you generally satisfied with the officers and attendants in the establishment?—Generally speaking, I am; but with respect to the case of the keeper who is over the patient referred to, I do not consider him a good officer, and some others are far too old.
6502. Have the Board had under consideration the superannuation of any of the servants of the establishment?—I do not think they have had it regularly under consideration; it may have been spoken of.
6503. By whom is the minute book kept?—By one of the Governors, who acts as secretary for the day. It is kept in a rough proceeding book, and copied by the clerk afterwards into a fair copy book.
6504. In what manner do you bring before the Board any matter that you may think it proper to direct their attention to?—On a little slip of paper. There are half a dozen of them on the table, and the business of the day is noted down on them.
6505. There is no regular memorandum book, then, kept, as contemplated by the regulations?—No.
6506. Do the Inspectors enter minutes in any particular book?—They frequently make a remark in what we call the visitors' book; not always.
6507. Do they usually make an entry of each of their visits?—Not invariably; they generally do.
6508. In what manner are any matters they may desire to bring before the Board submitted for their consideration?—They generally attend at the Board, and bring the matter before them.
6509. In that case there would be no record of the representation of the Inspectors?—No; except what might be entered on the minutes.
6510. If nothing had been done on the representation, would any record appear?—There might be, if it was negatived, or postponed for further consideration.
6511. Do they regularly attend meetings of the Board?—Not every meeting.
6512. Do they take part in the proceedings, by voting?—I do not know that it has ever come to a vote; but I fancy they would be justified in doing so. They take as much part in the proceedings as any one else.
6513. Has either of them ever acted as the honorary secretary for the day, in the manner that you have described?—I think Dr. Nugent has commenced, and then given it up to Mr. Haughton when he came in, or to some other member.
6514. How frequently do they visit the asylum?—They have not visited us frequently, since Dr. White's illness. I think the last visit Dr. White made, was in October, and Dr. Nugent, I think, in September.
6515. It has been stated that several patients come into this establishment, who have to be brought a considerable distance—what is the greatest distance of any part of the district from the asylum?—From the lower end of Wexford is a long way. I suppose about fifty miles.
6516. Do any large number of patients come from the extreme part of Wexford?—A good number do, from the baronies of Bury, Forth, and Shelburne. About sixty-five per cent. of the Wexford patients come from those three baronies.
6517. The patients, of course, are not brought here, till intimation is given that their admissions have been granted?—No; I write to say that they have been approved of, and that I have a vacancy, and that the case may be sent as soon as possible.
6518. Are the class of persons admitted to the asylum, generally enabled to be brought here in one day from their homes, from the lower parts of Wexford?—Generally speaking, they are.
6519. In what condition are the patients generally on their admission?—Sometimes very bad, with bed sores, old, and worn out, and sometimes tied down on curs.
6520. Is it your opinion that the poorer classes generally do not seek admission for their friends to an asylum, until their cases are considerably advanced?—Generally speaking, that is the case.

6521. From what does that arise?—Well, I think it is from a kind feeling that they do not wish to part with them.

6522. Are the friends admitted to the asylum to see patients?—Yes.

6523. How often?—On visiting days—three times in the week; and if a person comes up from a distance, I relax the rule, and let that person come in; I do not like the idea of sending him or her away again, to come on another day.

Robert C. Browne,
Esq., J.P., D.L.

Robert Clayton Browne, Esq., J.P., D.L., sworn and examined.

6524. I believe you are one of the Governors of the Carlow Asylum?—Yes.

6525. How long have you been a Governor of the institution?—About eight or ten years.

6526. Is there generally a fair attendance of Governors on Board days?—Yes, a pretty fair attendance.

6527. Have there been many occasions on which, to your knowledge, a Board has not been formed, from a want of members?—Sometimes on occasion of bad weather.

6528. The Board meet once a month?—Once a month.

6529. Do you find the attendance to be more on the part of Governors who live adjacent to the town than of those who live at a distance?—More on the part of those who live near the town.

6530. What is your opinion as to the mode in which the Governors of this institution are now appointed?—I think the Grand Juries of counties should nominate.

6531. Do you recommend the Grand Juries should nominate all the members of the Board, or would you give a power of nomination of any portion to the executive Government?—I should be inclined to give a power of nominating the whole to the Grand Juries of the respective counties.

6532. It has been stated that the Board of this asylum have not usually been in the habit of admitting paying patients?—No, they have not.

6533. What is your opinion as to the propriety of any provision being made by law for that class of lunatics who, though not absolutely paupers, are at the same time unable to pay the full sum for their maintenance?—We discussed it the other day; I am in favour of it. I think it would be fair that paying patients should be admitted, they paying the average cost of their maintenance in the institution, which, I believe, is about £18 in the year.

6534. Do you consider that the pauper patients should have a preference of admission before the paying patients?—I think they should.

6535. Do you think the Board should have a discretionary power of admitting paying patients at less than the actual cost?—No, I think not.

6536. In calculating the numbers for whom additional accommodation should be provided in the Carlow Asylum, is there any consideration given to the number of paying patients for whom it might be requisite to provide places?—No, I do not think that was taken into our consideration.

6537. Do you find that the Board of Governors are generally enabled to be furnished with sufficient information with reference to the condition of the applicants?—We do not see the patients. The admissions are grounded on representations on the admission papers.

6538. What is your opinion as to the propriety of a preliminary investigation being made by the Board of Guardians or any other local body respecting the patients?—It would be desirable, but in the case of violent or dangerous lunatics it might be attended with a great deal of inconvenience.

6539. You mean the delay such inquiries on the spot might necessitate would be objectionable?—Yes.

6540. In the case of paying patients being admitted, would you consider it advisable that some power should be given to the Governors to recover, from the persons liable for the support of the patients, the cost of their maintenance, in the same manner as it may now be recovered under the Poor Law?—Certainly.

6541. Are you satisfied with the manner in which the chargeability of lunatics is at present fixed by law?—I think it very fair; every county should bear its share in proportion to the number of patients sent from it.

6542. Do you prefer that system to one which would make the charge more local, such as upon electoral divisions or unions?—That would be a still fairer mode of assessing it.

6543. Do you consider that the charge for the maintenance of inmates is properly provided for at present through the county rate?—I think it is.

6544. Do you prefer that to an arrangement by which it would be provided for through the poor rate?—Yes.

6545. You are aware of the present state of the law with reference to the erection of new asylums and the formation of new districts; are you satisfied with the existing arrangement?—No, I do not approve of the arrangement. That is the point on which we feel so much.

6546. I presume you do not object to the distribution of districts being fixed by some central authority?—No.

6547. As regards the plans of buildings, would you be willing to leave the decision upon those plans to a central authority?—Yes.

6548. What is your opinion as to the propriety of the superintendence of the erection of buildings being left to a central authority?—That is very fair.

6549. Would you be anxious for an arrangement by which the erection of asylums would be left to committees of Governors in the same manner as the erection of county prisons?—It might be done, but I should have no objection to its being done by a central authority in Dublin.

6350. It has been stated that the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums frequently attend the Board of Governors; what is your opinion as to the propriety of the Inspectors being themselves members of the Boards?—I see no objection to it.

6351. Do you consider that they should have the same power of voting with reference to the subjects which come before the Board, as the ordinary members, or would you confine their duties within the limit of those discharged by the Poor Law Inspectors?—Perhaps it would be better to confine their duties to supervision, to inspection, and to their giving suggestions or hints, and that they should not vote at the Board.

6352. Would the Board, in your opinion, derive any assistance from their attendance?—Not a great deal.

6353. Is it usual, when matters come before the Board which require investigation, to refer them for consideration to the Inspectors, or to appoint members of the Board to investigate them?—Generally, when there is any thing particular to be brought before the Board, we request some of the members of the Board specially to take that particular subject into consideration.

6354. I believe the Governors, having felt that the present asylum was inadequate for the wants of the district, have had under their consideration a plan for its enlargement?—Yes.

6355. I presume you are the Chairman who signed this representation now before me, addressed to the Commissioners?—Yes.

6356. The opinion of the Board appears to have been, that adequate accommodation could be provided by additions to the present building?—Precisely.

6357. It is stated in this representation that there were seventy-three lunatics, forty-five idiots, and thirteen epileptics in the goals and workhouses of the district on the previous 1st of November?—Yes; Dr. White took great pains in writing to the different goals and places where those people were, and that was the result of his inquiries.

6358. From the returns which the Commissioners have since received, it would appear that the majority of those cases are in the county Wexford?—Yes.

6359. From your knowledge of the lunatics in the workhouses, do you think that they are of a class who ought to be removed to an asylum?—I think it would be desirable to have them where there are persons accustomed to the care of such people.

6360. I presume you are also of opinion that the goals are not suitable places for the detention of lunatics for ever so short a period?—I am of opinion that they are not suitable places for them.

6361. Have you had under the consideration of your Board the propriety of erecting a building for chronic or incurable cases?—We have been talking about it lately, but I do not think we have made up our minds on the subject. My own opinion is, that it might very well form a part or branch of an establishment like this, and would be much better than having them in poorhouses.

6362. According to the present condition of this institution it would appear that eighty-eight out of 199 patients are from the county of Wexford?—There is a very large proportion from the county Wexford.

6363. Do you conceive that the removal of those eighty-eight patients would adequately provide for that proportion of the 131 now in the goals and workhouses of the district, who belong to the counties of Carlow and Kildare?—Yes, I think it would more than provide for them.

6364. It appears from the representation addressed to the Commissioners that the Board considered it would be more economical to erect additional buildings for the present district than to carry out an arrangement by which they would have to repay the county Wexford its proportion of the cost of the asylum?—Very much more economical, both as regards the first cost and the establishment charges. The building of a lunatic asylum de novo would involve the purchase of ground, and would involve a very heavy outlay. I believe this asylum cost £20,000. An addition might be made, which, I think, would meet our wants and the wants of the county Wexford, for I would say, on a rough calculation, about £10,000 or £12,000; whereas, building a new asylum, and purchasing the ground, might cost from £25,000 to £30,000. Then the establishment charges are to be taken into consideration. Here, in round numbers they are about £1,700 a year. That divided amongst three counties comes, comparatively speaking, light, but if thrown upon two, the counties of Kildare and Carlow, in the event of Wexford being separated from us, it would become heavy.

6365. It is estimated in the representation before us, that this county and the county of Kildare, would have to repay the county of Wexford between £7,000 and £8,000?—Yes; we have not yet got the return of what we will have to repay the county and city of Kilkenny.

6366. Has it ever been estimated how much the proportion of the cost of the new addition to this asylum would be on the counties of Carlow and Kildare?—No. The total cost has been put down at some £10,000 or £12,000, but I do not know the proportion Wexford would have to pay.

6367. Has any rough estimate been given of the cost of the proposed addition?—I understand, £10,000.

6368. I believe the manner in which the charge for the erection of additional buildings is distributed, is according to the population of the several counties?—I believe that is the case.

Number of cases in goals and workhouses; the county Wexford.

Question of Asylum for incurables.

Alleged economy of erecting additional buildings at Carlow Asylum rather than a new Asylum for Wexford.

- Carlow.
Carlow District Asylum.
Robert C. Browne, Esq., J.P., D.L.
 6569. Considering that the population of Wexford is upwards of 180,000, and that the population of Kildare and Carlow united, is about 163,000, the proportion which would fall on these two counties would be something less than £5,000?—Yes.
 6570. Are we to understand that accommodation for 200 patients additional is to be provided by this expenditure of £10,000?—So I understand.
 6571. Have the Board ever had under their consideration an arrangement by which a provincial asylum might be established for receiving the incurable patients of each asylum?—No, we have not taken that into consideration.
 6572. Do the Board of Governors appoint a visiting committee, or any body who, from time to time, inspect the house?—No, we occasionally go through the house.
 6573. Is it the practice on each Board day, for some members of the Board always to go round the house?—No, it is not the regular practice.
 6574. Do you agree in the opinion, that if it became necessary to take any more land, in addition to that which is at present in the occupation of the Board, any difficulty would arise in obtaining it?—No, I do not conceive there would.
 6575. How near the confines of the ground now belonging to the Board, would this additional building extend?—At one side, within about 250 feet of the boundary wall, and at the other side about the same.
 6576. When did the question of the establishment of a new asylum at Wexford come under the notice of the Board of Governors at Carlow?—I was abroad at the time, and on my return, I found the Governors very anxious, and very much annoyed about it; in the middle of November last—very much annoyed, indeed, at the separation of Wexford being decided upon by that county, without giving the Carlow Board of Governors any notice.
 6577. You mean that the question of having a distinct asylum in Wexford had been adopted, and urged by the Wexford authorities, without holding communication with the Carlow gentlemen on the subject?—Yes.
 6578. But no ultimate decision has been arrived at by the executive Government?—No.
 6579. It has been stated, that the distance of remote parts of the county of Wexford, from which a considerable portion of the lunatics received into this establishment come, is very great?—Yes, but a railway is now in progress to it, with branches to Enniscorthy and Ros.
 6580. Has there been a large attendance of the Governors from the county of Kildare, when this matter was under consideration?—Not here.
 6581. Are you of opinion that they agree generally with the gentry of Carlow on this specific point?—Yes. I have been in communication with a leading gentleman of the county of Kildare, and he expressed himself very strongly against Wexford separating from us. I am also in communication with gentlemen from the county Wexford, and they are quite of opinion with the Carlow Governors.
 6582. The Grand Jury of Wexford county appear to have made representations to the Government, in favour of the new asylum?—Yes, but I believe the feeling is far from being unanimous.
 6583. Have the Grand Jury, or local authorities of Kildare, ever made any representation for or against the proposed asylum?—I am not aware that they have.
- Patrick W. Redmond, Esq., J.P., D.L., sworn and examined.
 6584. I believe you are a Governor of this asylum?—Yes.
 6585. You are also a member of the Grand Jury of the county of Wexford?—Yes.
 6586. Are you enabled to state to the Commissioners, what is the opinion of that body with reference to the proposition of creating a new asylum in the county of Wexford?—I have heard that some of the leading persons in that county are in favour of having an asylum in Wexford. It has not come under the consideration of any Grand Jury at which I attended.
 6587. Has the contrary course been advocated to any extent in that county, namely, the enlargement of the existing asylum at Carlow?—I am not aware it has.
 6588. It has been stated that a large number of the inmates of this asylum, and also of the lunatics in goals and workhouses in this district, belong to the county Wexford. From your knowledge of Wexford, would you say lunacy prevailed there to any considerable extent?—I have heard that it does.
 6589. It has been urged that, although parts of Wexford may, at the present moment, be a considerable distance from Carlow, yet there are railways in progress, which will bring them much nearer in point of time, and facilitate access?—A railway bill has been passed by Parliament, but I fear it will be some time before the railway is extended to Wexford.
 6590. How far do you consider the completion of railway communication between Carlow and Wexford, would obviate the objection of Wexford proprietors to the Wexford asylum for lunatics being in the county of Carlow?—I do not think it would obviate their objections to any great degree.
 6591. Was there not formerly a small asylum at Wexford?—I think there was.
 6592. Were you present at the Grand Jury of the Spring Assizes of 1856, when a memorial was adopted in favour of a separate asylum for the county of Wexford?—I attended the Grand Jury this time twelve months.
 6593. Are you aware whether there was any difference of opinion, as to the adoption of this memorial?—I am not aware; I cannot say whether I signed it.
 6594. It is merely signed by the foreman?—Then I think it is very likely it was unanimously agreed to.
 6595. You are not aware whether any county meeting has been held, to consider this Memorial from the Grand Jury of Wexford.

Extent of lunacy in Wexford; distance of the Carlow Asylum from parts of Wexford.

A new Asylum in Wexford; opinions of the Grand Jury on the subject.

question, at which the case-payers and magistrates assembled?—I am pretty sure there was not.

6396. What is your opinion as to the propriety of lunatics being detained in a workhouse; do you consider it a suitable place for their accommodation?—I should say an asylum would be far better.

6397. Does that observation equally apply to gaols?—Certainly.

6399. You have heard the evidence which has been given, as to paying patients of humble means being received into the asylum; what would your opinion generally be, as to the propriety of provision being made by the State for such cases?—From what I have heard to-day, I should think it very desirable. The only thing I wish to observe is, that I heard in the evidence to-day, that there have been discussions at the Board, relative to the enlargement of this establishment, and I do not know whether they have been upon special notice for the purpose.

John H. Nangle,
Esq., J.P.

6400. You are a member of the Board of Governors of this asylum, resident in the county of Kildare?—I am.

6401. Have you been for many years Governor?—No, only for the last year, I think.

6402. Do you frequently attend the Board?—Not very frequently. I have attended only four or five times since my appointment.

6403. Do you concur in the opinion, that additional accommodation is requisite for the humble poor of the present district?—Certainly.

6404. Have you been present at any of the discussions with reference to the manner in which that additional accommodation should be provided?—I have heard it spoken of in this house on Board days.

6405. Do you concur in the opinion, that an addition to the present building is preferable to a new asylum in Wexford, that county being made a separate district?—I have not made up my mind exactly.

6406. Has that matter been under the consideration of the Grand Jury of the county of Kildare?—It has never been brought officially before the Grand Jury to my knowledge. It may have been a matter of discussion; it has never been brought under the notice of the case-payers at read sessions. I think the county at large are very much in the dark on the subject.

Necessity for additional Asylum
accommodation.
How it is to be provided.

The county of Kildare.

6407. You are not aware of any public step having been taken by the county on the subject?—I am sure none has been taken.

6408. Do you concur in the opinion generally expressed, that workhouses and gaols are not suitable places for the detention of lunatics?—I have formed a very decided opinion on the subject, from my being chairman of a union and residing in another, the Edenderry Union; and I consider it very wrong that they should be detained in those places. It is a system attended with a great deal of inconvenience to both parties.

Detention of lunatics
in gaols and workhouses.

6409. Are the arrangements of the poorhouse such as do not admit of curative treatment being carried out?—I should say so.

6410. Have you found their presence in the house to interfere materially with its discipline?—The Guardians have always expressed themselves to that effect, and have been most unwilling to receive them on that account.

6411. What is your opinion as to the operation of the Act under which dangerous lunatics are committed to gaol?—I think it a very necessary Act, but I think it would be better if it was arranged that they should be sent to the asylum at once.

The Dangerous
Lunatic Act.

6412. Considering the numbers at present in this asylum, do you think the law could be at once altered so as to authorize magistrates to commit to asylums direct?—Certainly not, if there is not more room made.

6413. What is your opinion as to the propriety of the State providing an asylum for paying patients, who may not be enabled to pay the whole sum that is required for their maintenance, but yet are not absolute paupers?—I think it would be very desirable, but certainly not while there is want of room for the paupers.

Provision for lunatics not absolute paupers.

6414. Do you consider that paying patients should be received at the actual cost, or that they might be received for a proportion of the cost?—I think that would be a matter for a great deal of after consideration. It would be hard that persons who would be able to pay only a portion, should be excluded, because they did not pay the whole.

6415. Would you give a preference for admission to a pauper before a paying patient?—Certainly.

6416. What is your opinion as to the present state of the law with regard to the chargeability of lunatics; do you consider that they should be made a charge upon the county rates, as at present, or made a charge upon the poor rate, by which arrangement they would become chargeable upon unions and electoral divisions?—It appears to me, that the charge should be put upon the electoral divisions from which they come.

Chargeability of lunatics.

6417. In that case, the repayment of advances would have to be made out of the poor rate?—Yes.

6418. Do you see any difficulty in providing for this repayment?—I should say not.

6419. You are aware that under the present law the repayment is made by imperative presentment, and there is no such mode of drawing money from a Treasurer under the Poor Laws?—That certainly may cause a difficulty.

6620. Do you approve of the Inspectors of Asylums acting as members of the Board of Governors?—I would say, that in my opinion, it would be better if their duties were confined to inspection, and that the same men who inspect should not have the power to vote as Governors at the Board.

6621. With respect to your former answer as to the reception of paying patients, would you give the Board of Governors a power of recovering from the persons liable for the maintenance of a lunatic the sum expended, if he were enabled to pay?—Yes; for otherwise the arrangement would become a dead letter.

William Duckett, Esq., &c., sworn and examined.

6622. How long have you been a Governor of the Carlow Asylum?—About three or four years.

6623. You have taken part in the discussions which have occurred at the Board in reference to the provision of additional accommodation?—Yes; I took an active part.

6624. You concur in the view which has been expressed as to the propriety of adding to the present asylum, instead of detaching Wexford from this district and meeting the wishes of the Grand Jury in that county by erecting a separate asylum?—Yes.

6625. You consider that, on the whole, an economical arrangement for the district?—Yes.

6626. Would you explain more fully your calculation on the subject?—The calculation we went upon was this—that in the first place, supposing Wexford built an asylum for itself, it would be an asylum about the same extent as the one that was built for Sligo—we will say for 250 patients; and in a communication I had with a gentleman from the county of Sligo, he told me that asylum had cost them upwards of £30,000. From the returns which Dr. White, the manager of this asylum, has received from the various places where lunatics are confined in this district, such as workhouses, gaols, bridewells, &c., we are of opinion that all the accommodation which can possibly be required for the three counties, may be had by doubling the size of this asylum according to the sketch of a plan that is on the table. I have that statement from a builder who is a perfect judge in those matters, and who tells me he will execute the work for £10,000. Half of that £10,000, we will say in round numbers, will be levied off the county Wexford, which we calculate is as large as the counties of Kildare and Carlow. Wexford will, therefore, have to pay £5,000; and if that county can get accommodation for £5,000 for all its lunatic population, I do not see how they can possibly refuse what we offer to give them. We all know that the establishment charges of an institution like this are extremely heavy. They are, as Mr. Browne has just told us, something about £1,700 a-year, in round numbers. The proportion of that charge now paid by the county Wexford is about £800 a-year; but if that county builds an asylum for itself, they will have to pay £1,600 or £1,700 a-year for establishment charges.

6627. Have you ascertained the cost of the asylum at Sligo?—I happened to meet Mr. Whelan, the resident magistrate, down in that quarter just as this question was on the tapis here, and he told me the Sligo Asylum cost upwards of £30,000; and I have been told the accounts are not all settled yet.

6628. If the asylum at Sligo, which is calculated to contain 250 patients, cost £30,000, do you think an estimate by which you are to have accommodation for 200 patients for £10,000, can be relied upon?—I do; because the man who drew the plan told me this morning, he would engage to do the work for £10,000. He is a man who has executed work for me, and is doing so at this moment, and doing it in most admirable style, and therefore I have every confidence in him; and in fact, being building all my life myself, I ran over in my mind the cost of doubling this asylum, and I calculate it would not be more than £10,000.

6629. Having now calculated the loss which Wexford would sustain by having a separate building, will you compare the gain to Carlow by her paying her proportion of this £10,000, with the repayments you would have to make if the asylum was not enlarged?—I think the proportion of the £10,000 which the county of Carlow would have to pay, would be about £2,500; Kildare the same; Wexford would pay one-half. Under the other arrangement we would have to pay about £3,000, and Kildare about the same, together with having the house far larger than would be required for the two counties.

6630. Upon the calculation you have given, the loss to the counties of Kildare and Carlow would be about £1,000, in addition to the maintenance of a staff which you consider would be too large for the number of inmates?—The staff, I take it for the house, even if Wexford was detached, could not be diminished in any material way. We could get rid of some keepers to an extent of about £150 a-year, but the main staff, the medical persons, should remain. I calculate we could not get rid of more than about £200 a-year.

6631. Would the withdrawal of the eighty-eight Wexford patients give you a larger amount of accommodation for the unprovided lunatics of Carlow and Kildare than would be requisite?—I think so. I think it would give us very near a third more than we would require, according to the returns Dr. White has obtained of the lunatics that would require admission from Carlow and Kildare, if the Wexford patients were removed.

6632. According to returns which the Commissioners have received, it would appear that in four unions in Kildare there are at present sixty-five lunatics?—I do not think that was in the statement Dr. White received up to November last.

6633. It is possible all these lunatics may not belong strictly to the county Kildare; considering there would be also twenty in the union of Carlow, it may be presumed that no great margin of accommodation would remain over?—If the returns to which you refer be correct, there would not, but we had a very different return from Dr. White. I do not think his return showed there were over thirty.

6434. I do not want to charge you with all I have stated in Carlow, because Shilleagh is not in the county?—It is not.

6435. What is your opinion as to the mode in which the Governors of asylums are now appointed?—Well, I think it would be better to leave the appointments with the Grand Jurors, as the payments are obtained through them. At present we want one or two Governors appointed here, and we are waiting until the Grand Jury assemble to represent the matter to the Lord Lieutenant. In winter, when there is bad weather, we find a difficulty in getting a Board.

6436. Would you reserve to the Executive Government, or to any central authority, the power of naming any Governors?—I think it would be desirable that they should have the power, if they wished to possess it.

6437. What is your opinion as to the present state of the law with reference to the chargeability of lunatics, whether would you have it upon the rates or the county cess?—I think it would be desirable they should be paid for as the paupers in the workhouses are.

Chargeability of lunatics.

6438. Would you be in favour of making them chargeable upon the several electoral divisions or upon the union at large?—I would have them on the same principle as they are in the workhouses.

6439. Electoral divisions are to a certain extent made responsible for the maintenance of their paupers, because it is presumed that they might afford employment for them, so as not to throw them upon the rates?—Yes.

6440. Does a lunatic stand in the same position with reference to an electoral division as the ordinary pauper?—I do not know that he does at present, but I think he ought.

6441. Can an electoral division be supposed to be enabled to provide for lunatic paupers in the same way as for ordinary paupers, by giving them employment?—I think the electoral division should be charged with the lunatic paupers belonging to it, inasmuch as they are paupers, for they will come as such to the asylum.

6442. What is your opinion with reference to provision being made for patients who are not absolute paupers?—I think there should be a place for them, they paying a sum equal to the cost of maintenance to the asylum of a lunatic pauper.

Provision for lunatics who are not paupers.

6443. Do you consider that any provision should be made in the law, by which, if it was found there were persons liable and able to pay for pauper lunatics, the Boards of Guardians should have the power to recover the cost from them?—Yes.

6444. Do you think the amount of the payment to be made by a patient, should be an invariable sum, namely, the cost of maintenance, or that it should be a sum to be regulated at the discretion of the Board?—It should be whatever the rate per annum for the maintenance of the patient is; it sometimes varies here from £16 to £18, according to the rate of provisions.

6445. What would you do in the case of a person who could pay £10 a-year?—It is difficult to say; I would admit that man as a pauper.

6446. What is your opinion as to the Inspectors being members of the Board?—I think it would be more desirable if the Inspectors of Asylums were like the Poor Law Inspectors at unions—that they should be at liberty to bring matters before the Board and give suggestions. I am not quite certain whether the Inspectors-General of Prisons are ex officio members of the Board; I do not think they are.

Propriety of the Inspectors being members of the Board.

6447. What is your opinion as to workhouses being proper places of detention for lunatics?—I think they are most improper places for them.

Detention of lunatics in workhouses.

6448. What arrangements are generally made in a workhouse for the particular care of lunatics?—There is an idiot ward, and I rather think they are crowded there. The dangerous lunatics, I think, are disposed of by being committed to goal.

6449. Are you aware whether restraint is used in the workhouses in the case of violent lunatics?—I have not heard of any cases of the kind.

6450. Are you aware whether the persons in immediate charge of the lunatics in workhouses are paupers or paid servants?—I am not aware.

6451. Would you be surprised to hear that the persons in charge of the idiot boys in the Carlow workhouse had a whip for their correction?—I never heard of it. I would say it is wrong.

6452. With whom do you think the nomination of the superior officers of the asylum ought to rest, namely, the resident physician or manager, and the visiting physician, and storekeeper?—I think it should rest altogether with the Governors of the Institution, subject to the sanction or approval of the Lord Lieutenant, like the officers appointed in workhouses under the approval of the Poor Law Commissioners.

Appointment and removal of superior officers.

6453. Would you give the Board the power of removing, under a like control?—Of course; there being an investigation, and the Inspectors getting notice and attending at the investigation. Under these circumstances I would leave that power with the Governors.

Robert Cassidy, Esq., J.P., sworn and examined.

Robert Cassidy, Esq., J.P.

6454. You are a Governor of this asylum?—Yes, since 1840.

6455. Do you frequently attend meetings of the Board?—Of late I attend as regularly as possible—eight meetings out of twelve in the year.

The providing of additional accommodation; the proposed removal of the incurables to a separate establishment.

6656. Have you attended at the discussions that have taken place with reference to the providing of additional accommodation for the lunatic poor of the district?—On all occasions when the question was discussed I attended.

6657. What are your views upon that subject?—I think, with the concurrence of the medical men, that the provision for lunatics is ample in the present establishment, if the incurables, or persons who do not require medical treatment, were separated from the others. One-half of the present inmates are deemed to be incurable, and to be persons who do not require medical treatment for their lunacy; and from all that I have been able to learn on the subject, there are many incurable cases that could be safely kept in another establishment at a much cheaper rate, and it would be very desirable if that was done. Where there are so many establishments vacant, such as the workhouses, this could be accomplished. In such workhouses as those of Edenderry and Roscrea there is accommodation to five times the extent that is required.

6658. Are any of the workhouses within the district vacant?—No.

6659. In case of a separate establishment being formed, at a distance, for those incurable cases, what do you think would be the economy in reference to the staff?—That was very much discussed in the Lords' Report of 1843. It is much better understood, and will be more fully explained by medical men, who have turned their attention to the subject.

6660. Are you satisfied yourself there would be great economy in such an establishment?—I am.

6661. Do you consider the removal of 113 incurables at present in this asylum would obviate any necessity for an enlargement of the asylum for a considerable period?—That is my impression; and I have made inquiries into the state of Wexford, and the probability of lunatics coming from that county.

6662. Are you aware that the memorial of the Board of Governors states that there are 131 lunatics in workhouses and gaols requiring accommodation?—I am aware there is a certain number, but whether they are curable or incurable I have no means of ascertaining.

6663. Probably some of those cases might be sent to an incurable establishment?—That is my impression.

6664. Supposing an incurable asylum to be erected at a distance from the existing asylum, whom would you appoint as the controlling or governing body?—A body perfectly distinct from those who have charge of this asylum.

6665. Would you contemplate a body appointed as the present Board of Governors are?—The incurables should be under the present Board of Governors, with a separate staff and management.

6666. Supposing this incurable institution established at or near Edenderry, or some part of the district in that vicinity to which you have referred, do you consider it would be better that the Board of Governors that at present fails to secure an attendance from Wexford, would be likely to secure an attendance of Carlow Governors at that distance?—I am satisfied that unpaid Governors will not attend at inconvenience to themselves.

6667. Do you think it likely that such an institution as an asylum for incurables would interest Governors so much as an hospital for the curative treatment of the insane?—I think it would not create the same interest if they deemed the inmates incurable.

6668. Do you think that want of interest would lead to non-attendance?—Yes.

6669. Laying aside for a moment the consideration that additional accommodation may be provided by obtaining possession of some of the workhouses, would you prefer in all cases that these asylums for incurables should be on the same grounds as the existing asylums?—If it was not attended with additional outlay it would be very desirable.

6670. Has the question of closing workhouses, to which you have referred, been seriously considered?—Not in this district, but it has been very seriously considered in the unions of Donaghmore, in the Queen's County, and in Berrisokane.

6671. Has the matter ever been under the consideration of the Poor Law Commissioners?—It has been brought under their notice, but I am not aware that they reported on it. At Donaghmore it was brought under notice from a wish to relieve the union, and to have the paupers transmitted to Berris workhouse, which was the case before the Donaghmore workhouse was opened; however, the Donaghmore Guardians wished to have the control themselves of the paupers.

6672. What is your opinion as to the mode of appointing Governors?—I think it would be well to have them nominated by the local authorities, and approved of by the Lord Lieutenant, and in all cases to have some qualification of taxpayer or ratepayer.

6673. What is your opinion as to the present chargeability of lunatics upon the county at large?—I think the present system ought to be altered.

6674. In what respect?—I think, instead of their being a charge on the county rates they should be a charge upon the several divisions to which they belong, and should be paid for as paupers are in the workhouses.

6675. The advances being made out of the Consolidated Fund for the maintenance of the lunatics in those asylums, how would you provide for the repayment of the advances by the unions?—By the rate levied as at present by the different unions.

6676. Would you contemplate the collection of two separate rates—one for the payment of the Government advances, and one for ordinary Poor Law purposes?—No, one rate to comprise both.

6677. Your answer has reference to the levying and collecting of the rate; but would you advocate the recovery of a debt due to the Government from that rate in some such summary manner as the rate-in-aid was?—The rate-in-aid is a bad precedent I allow.

The government of such institutions.

Governess of work-houseless Asylums.

Appointment of Governors.

Chargeability of
lunatics.

6678. What other effective power do you think should be given?—An Act of Parliament is very omnipotent. There must be a change in the Act regulating the repayment and the appointment.

6679. What is your opinion as to the Inspectors being members of the Boards of Governors?—I am quite satisfied that without the Inspectors we would very often fail in having monthly Boards both here and in Maryborough.

6680. Do you think the appointment, as Governors, of Inspectors that are to examine and inspect the institution in all its details, and call the attention of the Boards of Governors to irregularities, is preferable to the want of a sufficient number of Governors?—I think it is very useful to have the attendance of the Inspectors, and if possible no Board of Governors should be without an Inspector at a monthly meeting.

6681. Would you be content with the attendance of Inspectors in the same manner as Poor Law Inspectors at Boards of Guardians?—I think that would be a very great improvement; they have often to vote where there is very great unpleasantness.

6682. By whom do you consider the superior officers of the asylums should be appointed?—They should be nominated in the respective localities, subject to the approval of the Government or some central authority.

6683. And with respect to the removal of those officers?—They should be removed by the Governors for incapacity or misconduct, subject to such a control as is exercised in the Poor Law office.

6684. Is the situation of this asylum at Carlow favourable for obtaining supplies of the articles required for the use of the establishment?—Yes, we find it very well supplied with the articles required.

6685. What is your opinion of the arrangement by which a control is exercised by the Privy Council over the contracts and arrangements of the Board?—I think it absolutely necessary and desirable.

6686. What advantages have you known yourself to arise from it?—I have known that since the establishment of another asylum, with which I am connected, a different class of contractors have come in altogether. Persons imagine that they do not get fair play when the decision in such matters is left to the local Board.

6687. Do you find that as regards county prisons the contractors are under the impression they do not get fair play from the Boards of Superintendence?—Many of them think that there is favouritism, but I think that in that they are mistaken. People do get into the habit of supporting particular persons, and others do not interfere with them.

6688. Do you think the same feeling with reference to Boards of Governors of Asylums would be equally unfounded?—I am not so sure of that.

6689. Would there be any reason why one Board should act differently from another?—I know they have done so.

6690. Have the Privy Council ever reversed the decision of the Board of Governors with respect to the acceptance of a tender?—I think they might have done so, but I am not quite sure; the date of the transaction is not exactly on my mind. I know contracts have been delayed.

6691. Has any inconvenience arisen from the detention of the contracts in Dublin previously to their approval?—I have never known any.

6692. Is there any thing you would wish to state to the Commissioners with reference to the subject of their inquiry generally?—I would state particularly the necessity of some controlling power to carry out proposed improvements in the asylum. There were suggestions made by the Lord Lieutenant on his visit to the establishment in 1855, and the necessity for the change he proposed has been evident. The medical gentlemen of the establishment have also suggested improvements. The means for giving baths, and for washing are most inefficient. Nothing can be more defective than the chapel accommodation in this asylum. I am aware the Commissioners have the benefit of the bishop's opinions on the subject, and it is not necessary for me to do more than refer to them. These have been agreed to by the Governors, and still no progress is made in carrying them out.

6693. What controlling power would you suggest?—When the Governors agree to do certain things they ought to be able to carry them out in some shape or other. How those things should be done, I am not prepared to say. I would be very sorry to give the power to the Board of Works.

6694. Do you mean such a controlling power as the Poor Law Commissioners exercise? I think it would be absolutely necessary.

Thomas O'Meara, Esq., M.A., sworn and examined.

6695. How long have you been connected with this asylum and in what capacity?—Visiting physician, seven years on the 29th of last September.

6696. Have any particular arrangements been entered into between you and Dr. White as to your respective medical duties in this establishment?—No formal arrangement has been entered into between us. When I became visiting physician, I commenced to act towards Dr. White as if I had met him in private practice going round the wards. The medical treatment of the patients falls to me. Dr. White generally goes round with me whenever I see any necessity to consult him.

6697. Perfect harmony therefore exists in the discharge of those duties which the law imposes upon you, but which by this arrangement you share?—Yes, he participates in them as far; however the duty of attending the patients falls almost exclusively upon me.

6698. But as the existing regulations stand no medical duties are assigned to Dr. White?—Not according to the rules and regulations sanctioned by the Privy Council.

CARLOW.

Charles District
Asylum.Thomas O'Meara, Esq., M.D.Privy Council rules
as the subject;
proposed alteration
is there.

6699. Do you think it would be satisfactory if some distinct duties were prescribed for each?—I do. I think an alteration of the rules essential.

6700. What alteration would you propose?—I made suggestions to the Inspectors-General with regard to alterations in the rules some two or three years ago. I could lay my hand upon a copy of those suggestions. They are rather voluminous; however, I may state briefly that I suggested the resident physician should take a part in the treatment of the patients with the visiting physician of the institution. The rules should be so altered as to give him the status of resident physician.

6701. What would you propose as to the duties and position of the visiting physician?—On the occasion of the former visit of the Commissioners here, I was asked as to the utility of a visiting physician. I drew up a letter with reference to that subject, which I intended to send to the Commissioners, but finding the Commissioners were likely to come down here, I kept it, and I present it to you now. The two questions are stated in it that with regard to the necessity and the utility of the visiting physician, and next the status of the medical man in the institution.

Statement as to the necessity for Visiting Physicians.

"When the members of the Lunatic Asylums Commission visited the Carlow Asylum in the month of November (56), I was requested to state my opinion as to the utility of appointing visiting physicians to the Irish District Asylums. The substance of the observations which I then made, I am anxious to place before the Commissioners in a written form, and therefore beg leave to make the following statement:—

"The experience of several years has made it manifest that the general management of lunatic asylums should be under the control of duly qualified physicians, and the questions for consideration are as to the necessity and advantage of appointing, hereafter, visiting physicians to those institutions, and also what rules shall govern the medical officers in the discharge of their duties to the patients, and in their official relation towards each other.

"If lunatic asylums are to be considered henceforward merely as places of detention for the insane—if the disease be placed beyond the pale of relief from medical treatment, and the patients classed universally as incurable, then, indeed, it may at once be conceded that resident physicians are amply sufficient for the wants of these institutions, and that visiting physicians are totally unnecessary. But as the principal object of the District Asylums of Ireland is the extension of our knowledge of insanity, of the remote and proximate causes of its development, and its co-relation with other diseases and conditions of the constitution, so as to lead inductively to the rational and successful treatment of the disease, and to the means whereby its further increase may be prevented, it will become obvious on due consideration that the services of the visiting physician are essential to the well-being of these institutions, and cannot be dispensed with either on principles of humanity or economy.

"When the managers of the Irish District Asylums were non-medical persons, their duties were found amply sufficient to occupy their entire time. All the duties fulfilled by the former managers now devolve upon the resident physicians. Under the present rules the office of visiting physician is by no means a sinecure. Without going into details, let it be sufficient to state that the duties are both onerous and important; and if they were thrown entirely upon the resident physician, in addition to his duties as superintendent, either the one series or the other must be neglected or imperfectly performed. Moreover, during the temporary absence of the resident physician hereafter, nearly all his duties will necessarily devolve upon the visiting physician.

"Totally precluded as the resident physicians must be from the general practice of their profession, their views of almost the only disease that will come under their consideration must become narrow and contracted, and the medical treatment of insanity will have an inevitable tendency to lapse into a system of indolent routine. This statement will be still further strengthened by a consideration of how frequently insanity is either connected with or dependent upon a generally diseased condition of the constitution, manifesting itself to the physician in general practice, in many other forms and varieties of disease, and combated in these forms by remedies that are subsequently found most useful in the treatment of insanity. The elucidation of this deplorable mistake, by information drawn from sources, apparently so extrinsic, will at once be prevented if we establish another specialty, and restrict the practice of the physician to the narrow limits of a lunatic asylum: so far, an essential barrier will be placed to the advancement of psychological medicine.

"It is unnecessary to remark upon the impolicy of cutting off every physician outside the walls of these establishments from a practical knowledge of insanity. But few years have elapsed, comparatively, since this disease became recognized as belonging exclusively to the domain of medicine, and great indeed have been the improvements in the medical and moral treatment of insanity since the days of Pinel to those of Charlesworth; any step that would convert the disease into a specialty would also tend to withdraw it again from the observation of physicians practising generally, and to re-establish so far as the altered feeling of the public and the profession would permit, the old and exploded condition of affairs.

"There is one duty now fulfilled by the visiting physician which could only be performed by a person unconnected with the general management of the establishment, namely, that of local supervision. Three weekly he reports upon the general condition of the institution. These records are kept for the information of the Governors, and are ready for their inspection at each monthly meeting of the Board.

"The appointment of consulting in lieu of visiting physicians would by no means compensate for the many disadvantages that would arise from such an alteration. If the consulting physician was called to attend at such times as the resident physician might deem his services necessary, it would offer an opportunity for many and obvious abuses, and even if such an officer were appointed by the Executive Government at a fixed salary, many objections would still remain, and several of the foregoing remarks would apply to this arrangement. His opportunities of observing the disease would also be comparatively rare, and his advice when called upon to attend, would consequently be much less valuable than if he were a regular and frequent attendant upon the institution."

6702. The second question proposed in the first part of the document is not referred to, namely, what rules shall govern the medical officers in the discharge of their duties to the patients, and in their official relations towards each other?—That resolves itself in one question, is it necessary that one of them should be a person whose word should be law, in case a difference arose between them. The question has not arisen in practice within my experience here—such a difference as amicable discussion would not remove has not arisen between us; but yet the question remains for solution, and I think it needs an answer. I have thought over it several times, and two plans have occurred to me, one is—that the senior practitioner, in insanity, should be the individual whose direction should be followed in case a difference arose, that is the one whose connection with the lunatic asylum was longest. The other plan was, that the resident physician should have the authority in cases of insanity, and that the visiting physician should exercise a similar power in general disease; but if an irreconcilable difference arose in either case, I would give a right of appeal to the Inspectors-General.

6703. Do you mean a right of appeal on the question of practice?—Yes, that question of practice might involve a principle.

6704. Do you consider that could be practically carried out and the treatment of a case that might be urgent left to abide the result of a correspondence with the Inspectors-General?—I do not mean that a particular case should await the result of a correspondence, but that all individual cases should be dealt with according to the dictum of one or the other, and that if any principle arose, or was involved, that might extend to other cases, a right of appeal should then exist.

6705. How would that appeal to persons not themselves necessarily of the highest medical authority be regarded generally by the profession?—The question itself with regard to difference of opinion would scarcely ever arise; but still the question of principle might arise, and that would require some such decision.

6706. Your proposition is, that it should go by seniority; not of seniority in the profession, but in point of connection with the asylum?—Yes.

6707. Do you think that the existence of such a rule of seniority would prevent, practically, any difference taking place?—Practically, I do not think a difference would take place at all, or very rarely; but yet the question requires solution.

6708. In the case to which you have referred of a similar power being exercised by the visiting physician in general disease, would you consider him to be the senior there, although he might not be such in practice?—Decidedly.

6709. You have stated also that you consider many difficulties would arise if there were a mere consulting physician attending to the asylum along with the resident physician: will you explain more fully what difficulties you contemplate as likely to arise?—The arrangement of having a consulting physician, if appointed with a salary, is not liable to the obvious abuse I referred to, but his opinion would be less valuable as I have stated; and the same objection that exists against confiding the management of the lunatic asylum exclusively to the resident physician would apply, to a certain extent, to confiding it to the resident physician, with a power of calling in a consulting physician occasionally. The objection exists certainly in the latter case to a less extent than in the other.

6710. The objection against confiding the general medical treatment to the resident physician is, that his practice is confined to the mere treatment of insanity. Would that objection at all apply to an arrangement by which the services of a person in general practice would be secured?—It was stated here this morning that the diagnosis of disease with lunatics is very difficult. We are obliged to depend in a great measure on the physical signs of disease more than the symptoms they complain of. They will not complain. Unless a man's ear is educated and in constant and extensive practice, and his hand also educated, he will not have the facility that is absolutely necessary to enable him to detect disease under such unfavourable circumstances. This is a very strong objection to confiding the care of lunatics exclusively to the resident physician. If the lunatics were confined to the care of the resident physician, giving him the power of calling in a consulting physician occasionally, the treatment of the patients would be left in a great measure to the resident physician. The consulting physician would, of course, be called in occasionally when danger would be evident and manifest; but when danger would be evident and manifest would not be the time to call in a consulting physician; it is rather better that he should be called in. The attendance of a visiting physician, constantly going round and examining the patients, is essential for their maintenance in a state of health, and also for the detection of disease.

6711. Do you consider it would be advisable to have an infirmary attached to this institution?—Absolutely necessary. I have reported over and over again as to the necessity of providing an infirmary for this institution.

6712. A case was referred to in the evidence of Dr. White, which was seen by one of the Commissioners this morning: have you any statement you would wish to make with reference to that case?—I feel it hard, of course, to speak harshly of a keeper who is depending upon his situation altogether for his bread, but yet the abuse is so manifest that it requires some notice. I have over and over again found it necessary to report this keeper for the condition of his wards. I have recorded reports which I made respecting him, and which had the effect of causing improvements for a considerable time; and for a long time I have not seen the place so bad as it was to-day. Further on in my book I have statements showing that there was an improvement, but I find he has relapsed again.

6713. Do you consider it proper that instruments of restraint should be left in the custody of the keepers?—I consider it highly improper; and I am aware that Dr. White has repeatedly desired the nurses and keepers to return the instruments of restraint to the office, and not keep them. I have suggested to him myself to caution them, and I have heard him do so.

6714. Have your instructions been attended to in the asylum?—They have not. To some extent, in cases of that kind, I do not confine myself completely to the rules and regulations of the Privy Council. The instruments of restraint, so far as the rules and regulations are concerned, do not come exactly within my province. It is my duty to see that restraint does no injury to the patients.

6715. Are you aware whether this keeper was punished on any of those occasions on which you called attention to his conduct?—He was fined, or rather his premium was stopped by the Board. Those who are recommended by Dr. White for premiums at the end of the year get £1 if they conduct themselves properly. When the time came for giving the premium, Dr. White did not consider that this man was deserving of it, and the Board did not give it to him. I believe these are the facts of the case.

6716. Are you satisfied with the means of occupation and amusement afforded to the patients?—Not at all.

6717. Do you consider that there is a sufficient number of books provided for their use?—They have no books. I would be strongly in favour of a school. I have spoken of it before. I endeavoured to get them to teach each other, or to get the wardens to teach them. I think it would be of great importance and great advantage, in a curative point of view. It would be troublesome and difficult; but still I think it could be carried out, and would not be expensive. I have endeavoured to procure a ball-court for them; however, the alterations which are under consideration prevented the matter being pressed.

6718. Would not the provision of suitable means for the amusement and occupation of the patients materially facilitate their cure?—Yes, much facilitate it; occupation is one of the best curative means we have.

6719. What is your opinion as to the advantage of the ministrations of clergymen for lunatic patients?—I think it is most useful. I have attended here at Divine worship frequently; I observe the patients, and they are most orderly. The system is attended with good effect. If a patient be deprived of the advantage of going to Divine worship, he complains of it. It forms a period in their existence here, and they look forward to it, and are glad of it, and I have never found it do them any injury.

6720. Suppose a case to arise where you might consider it desirable that a patient should not be addressed on the subject of religion, lest it might lead to excitement of mind, what course would you pursue?—I would prevent the communication. The safety of the patient is the first law with me.

6721. Have any cases arisen where you found it necessary to interfere?—None; nor do I think it ever would arise practically at all. As far as my experience enables me to form an opinion, I am sure any suggestion the medical man would give to any of the clergymen visiting here they would attend to most willingly.

6722. What effect do you think would result from giving the patients general access to a place of worship during the day?—I would not wish it. You would have some of the patients constantly in the place of worship if you permitted it.

6723. What is your opinion of the dietary of the institution?—The dietary for insane patients, if we expect to cure them, must be nutritious—rather an expensive dietary. It has been our object since we came here to give them a more nutritious dietary than they had when I became visiting physician. The dietary has been greatly improved since then, and, I think, with great advantage. The Board give a discretionary power with regard to the regulation of diet for those patients for whom we deem an improved diet necessary, with a due regard, of course, to economy on our part. We give an increased dietary to the patients whenever we deem it necessary, and the Board have made no objection.

6724. Do you consider the airing courts of the asylum, as they at present exist, suitable for the inmates?—I do not; they are too good-like.

6725. Does that arise from their being surrounded by buildings?—Yes; buildings and high walls.

6726. Have you seen the new plan which the Governors are disposed to adopt for the extension of the institution?—Yes; I made some suggestions with regard to the execution of this plan. There is a portion I do not entirely approve of, and that is with regard to the return building. Instead of having the return building at the point marked on the plan, I would have a sunk fence, and the place open.

6727. By this plan one of the airing courts would remain the same size as at present?—Yes; but one wall would be thrown down, and a sunk fence substituted, so that the patients in both yards could look out into the grounds. I may remark that I believe, without that return building, you could, on that plan, find accommodation for 200 additional patients.

6728. What is your opinion of an arrangement by which the incurable patients would be transferred to a separate building contiguous to this asylum?—I have thought a good deal about the question, and it is surrounded with a great many difficulties; but, on the whole, I would prefer to have an hospital for incurables, and leave this institution for the cure of insanity—the hospital for incurables to be elsewhere, or connected with the asylum, but still detached from it.

6729. Upon what grounds do you attach importance to the hospital for incurables being detached from the institution?—There would be a great many local difficulties in the way of adding a building for incurables to the present asylum, so far as I know; but if you had sufficient space for the purpose, I do not see any objection to having the two establishments on the same grounds.

6730. Do you think the effect of transferring patients to that institution from a curative hospital would be injurious, presuming the character of the institution to which they were transferred came to the knowledge of the patients?—Some of the patients it would affect very much. A great many incurable patients are affected with imbecility, and they would not take much notice of it. I think it would be desirable on an economical point of view. The dietary for incurables need not be as high as is essential for curables. More attention could, and would, I believe, be bestowed on the medical treatment of insanity, where there was an hospital devoted specially to the cure of the insane, and I think you would have a greater number of cures.

6731. Would you require a case to pass through the curative hospital before being sent to the institution for incurables?—Decidedly not. A great many of our patients come in here in a state of perfect imbecility; such patients might be sent at once to the hospital for incurable cases.

6732. Do you think it would be safe to condemn a case at once as incurable without having had some experience of it?—Any medical man can form an opinion in such a case; and his error, if any, would be very frequently on the side of the patient. He would take in an incurable case to give it a chance, although it was his conviction from the first moment that it was incurable.

6733. Is there any thing in the condition of insane patients which would render their removal to an incurable hospital more afflicting than the removal of a person suffering from any ordinary malady from the hospital where he has been treated to an establishment for incurables?—As a general principle, it would be less afflicting to insane patients to be removed to an incurable hospital than it would be to a patient affected with bodily disease.

6734. You are a Governor of this asylum?—Yes.

6735. Have you any suggestion you would wish to make to the Commissioners?—I have, on matters arising out of the examination here to-day. I wish to warn before the mischief is done, that I think nothing can be worse than the project I have heard proposed, of gathering all classes of the insane in here. As to paupers, properly so called, we have none here, and many incapable to pay would be thrown upon the rates. How are you to check the admissions? Half or one-third of the patients who come in here certified as curable are not so, and many of them, when they come, are, probably, about seventy years of age, and utterly imbecile. You would make a pretty mess of it if you emptied the house by separating Westford, which they have in that county a right to do if they think proper to have an asylum of their own. With respect to enabling persons to come in under the pretence of taking charge of them, partly for the cost of their maintenance, the result would be that you would have a most numerous class of the insane maintained at the public expense, and the institution would cease to be a charitable institution for the public. Probably some people would pay the full cost, and there might be some little difference of treatment, which would cause disorder in the establishment at large; but the treatment should be perfectly uniform. I do not see how you could apportion the payment. You cannot come at the truth with regard to the means of insane persons. It has been suggested here that the lunatics or insane of all classes should be supported by their respective electoral divisions, and not by the counties at large. That would be going from bad to worse, because they have not the machinery in the asylum to ascertain the truth with regard to the localities from which the persons come.

patients.*

Objection to admitting paying patients.

6736. Would not that be obviated if the right of admission was left to the Board of Guardians?—It might be throwing upon their shoulders a load they would not bear. It would appear, from the opinions that have been given here to-day, that all classes of the insane are to be gathered into this asylum—not only the curables, but also the incurables—not merely persons on the verge of pauperism, but also people that are comfortable and snug in the world; and if that is done, 1,000 acres of ground would not do for this asylum. The largest class would be the paying patients. Your 200 patients would soon swell up to 400 or 500. With regard to the Westford case, if they think proper to incur the expense of a new asylum in that county, they have no right to be interfered with.

KILKENNY.

KILKENNY, 18th FEBRUARY, 1857.

Present:—Sir T. N. REDINGTON, Chairman; Dr. ANDREWS, and Mr. BARRY, Secretary.

KILKENNY DISTRICT ASYLUM.

The Hon. Charles B. S. Wandesforde, J.P., D.L., sworn and examined.

6737. I believe you are one of the Board of Governors of this asylum?—Yes.

6738. Have the Board of Governors had under their consideration the kinds of inquiry which have been circulated by the Commissioners?—Yes.

6739. Are there any suggestions they would wish to make with reference to the objects of the inquiry?—Yes.

Suggestions from the Governors with respect to alterations of the law, &c.

6740. Would you be good enough to acquaint the Commissioners with those suggestions?—They propose that the admissions be by relieving officers in conjunction with magistrates, parish ministers, and churchwardens, that the word "dangerous" should be taken out of the form of admission, and that the words "poor persons" should be substituted for the word "paupers." The next suggestion is, that the Governors should have the power of refusing persons sent to the asylum from the gaols, unless their families, if they were able to do so, consented to contribute towards their support in the asylum. The reason for that suggestion is, that we found persons were sent for trifling crimes to gaols, and then transferred, by order of the Lord Lieutenant, to this asylum. A further suggestion is, that believing the present asylum is not sufficiently large, part of the present workhouses should be set apart for the reception of lunatics, not dangerous, to be supported and employed therein, in order that the asylum may be made entirely available for dangerous lunatics.

Proposed removal of cases to workhouses.

6741. Do you mean that the cases to be sent to the workhouses should be incurable cases?—Incurable and harmless cases. Our next suggestion is, that the books and registers should be uniform in all lunatic asylums. That there should be a more strict investigation into the circumstances of the families of patients, in order to compel them, if they were able, to contribute to the support of their relatives in the asylums. This suggestion is made because people have been sent in here whose families could contribute to their support.

6742. You mean that the law should enact some more stringent provisions with regard to these cases?—If there is not a provision on the subject already, I think there ought to be; if there was such a stringent provision, I think you would have fewer lunatics sent in.

Joseph Laker, Esq.,
M.D.

Joseph Laker, Esq., M.D., sworn and examined.

6743. What office do you hold in this asylum?—"Manager" is the strict legal word, and also resident physician.

6744. There is also a visiting physician attached to the establishment?—Yes.

6745. Have you been the manager and resident physician since the opening of the institution?—Yes.

6746. In what year was the asylum opened?—September 1st, 1852.

The medical treatment of the patients;
the Resident
Physician and the Visiting Physician.

6747. Were any special instructions given you on your appointment as to the duties you should perform in your medical capacity?—I do not remember any special instructions; but I was given to understand that I was to act as resident physician as well as manager.

6748. Has any arrangement been made between you and the visiting physician as to the manner in which the treatment of the patients should be conducted?—No.

6749. Practically, how far do you interfere with the medical treatment of the patients?—I generally conduct the treatment.

6750. Do you mean the medical treatment of the patients as regards insanity, or as regards bodily ailments?—Both.

6752. Am I to understand that the visiting physician prescribes for a patient, although you may also have prescribed for him, without consulting you?—I dare say, in some instances, he has done so. We generally consult. If he knew that I had prescribed for a patient, he would not prescribe without consulting with me; but I have known cases in which the visiting physician, not knowing that I had prescribed, did so afterwards himself; and I consider that under the rules he is authorized, strictly speaking, to do so.

6753. When a patient is first received into the establishment, do you consider his case in conjunction with the visiting physician?—I always bring those cases before the visiting physician; he gets the admission paper containing the particulars of each case.

6754. Do you determine then what course is to be pursued in reference to that particular case?—We do not make it an invariable rule to consult formally in that way. When I show him a case, it frequently happens that he may suggest, or I may suggest, the mode of treatment, but we do not make it an uniform rule to consult.

6755. Are we to understand that patients in this establishment may be exposed to be treated under the directions of two medical men at the same time without their consulting each other?—So far as prescriptions go; we write our prescriptions in the one book, and the visiting physi-case would see mine if it was there, or I would see his. So far as the general management of the patients, and with respect to the class a patient will go to, or the general domestic treatment, I generally regulate that myself when the patients come in; and I do not consider it necessary, nor is it my habit to send for the visiting physician to show him a case when it comes; on his first visit after the reception of the patient, I bring the case under his notice, and in the meantime may have adopted the mode of treatment. We may consult together about that case afterwards.

6756. Do you consider that mode of proceeding, on the whole, satisfactory?—I consider the arrangements between the visiting physician and me are very loose and undefined, and only for the good understanding existing between us, might lead to unpleasant variations. Under the Lord Lieutenant's Rules, which are the laws for the asylum, I am, strictly speaking, only the manager, and nothing else; but having been given to understand that along with the duties of that position the medical treatment of the patients is also to be under my charge, I regulate it according to the best of my ability during the absence of the visiting physician. I bring the cases under his notice on his next visit; and if he offers any suggestion or proposes any alteration, we consult together.

6757. Suppose the rules to be changed to suit the altered character of your office, would you see any difficulty in the way of drawing up definite regulations for the conduct of each officer, the resident physician and the visiting physician?—I would not see any difficulty if the principle or line of distinction was laid down.

6758. With which officer would you propose that the responsibility of treating the cases of insanity should rest?—With the resident physician.

6759. How far would you propose that the visiting physician should take part in that treatment?—I think the visiting physician ought to be a consulting physician.

6760. Do you mean a consulting physician to be called in at the option of the resident physician, or one who should be bound also to see each case in the asylum, and attend periodically to advise with the resident physician?—I see no disadvantage in having merely a consulting physician called in in cases of emergency, when the resident physician considered it advisable.

6761. On what ground do you consider it advisable that the resident physician should have the treatment of the cases rather than the visiting physician?—Because he is better acquainted with the cases from his constantly seeing them.

6762. Is it in your opinion of considerable importance in the treatment of insanity that the patient should have the benefit of the physician in constant attendance?—It is.

6763. In the treatment of the bodily ailments of the insane, would not a physician in general practice, have an advantage over the physician whose attention being entirely confined to the asylum, would not be in general practice at the time?—Yes; and those are the cases in which it would be of advantage to the resident physician to have a consulting physician to confer with.

6764. It is not your opinion, therefore, I presume, that the resident physician would enjoy any particular advantage in the treatment of the bodily ailments of the insane above the visiting physician?—Precisely in the same way as in the other; the bodily condition of the patients is constantly under his observation; and so far the resident physician is better qualified than the visiting physician to treat such cases, as they are constantly under his observation.

6765. Would a medical man, accustomed to the treatment of insane patients, have a greater facility in discovering the exact nature of the bodily ailments of a lunatic than a physician in ordinary practice?—He would.

6766. But you would still desire to have the benefit of a consulting physician as regards the bodily ailments of the patients?—I would consider it advantageous that the resident physician should have the power, when he considered it necessary, to call in a consulting physician; beyond that, I do not see in this asylum any advantage from a visiting physician. Not having experience of larger asylums, I do not take upon myself to say whether the altered circumstances would not render the constant attendance of a visiting physician necessary.

6767. Do you consider the consulting physician should be a salaried officer of the establishment?—If the consulting physician were merely to be called in in cases when his attendance was deemed necessary by the resident physician, I do not see any occasion for a fixed salary; he would have only a fee for consultation.

6768. Are there infirmaries attached to this establishment?—Two; one for the males and one for the females.

6769. Are they used as infirmaries?—They are used as such.

6770. What is your opinion as to the necessity or otherwise of having distinct infirmaries in lunatic asylums?—I think it would be well to have distinct infirmaries, more distinct than these here, for the infirmaries here are not distinct.

6771. Is there an apothecary attached to the establishment?—Yes.

6772. Are the medicines compounded in the house?—They are.

6773. The medicines are provided by the Board of Governors?—Yes; from the druggist.

6774. Is the attendance of Governors regular?—It is.

6775. Have any occasions occurred when no Board was held in consequence of a quorum not having assembled?—Yes.

6776. I believe there is the number required to form a quorum?—Three form a quorum for the ordinary meetings, and for a half-yearly meeting, as laid down by the rules, five are necessary to constitute a quorum.

6777. I believe the asylum is merely for the county and the county of the city of Kilkenny?—That is all.

6778. Do you find the attendance more regular on the part of Governors from the city of Kilkenny than on the part of those from the county?—Yes.

6779. Do the Governors appoint a visiting committee to inspect the house?—Yes.

6780. How often do the visiting committee go through the establishment?—The visiting committee have attended nine times since their first appointment, which was, I think, in November, 1855.

6781. Do the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums usually attend the Boards?—They often attend the Boards.

6782. Do they take part in the proceedings of the Board?—Yes.

6783. Do they vote?—They do.

6784. How frequently are they in the habit of inspecting the asylum?—I could not tell exactly. I could tell the number of their visits entered in the visiting book, but they have inspected pretty often, without making any entry, unless it happens to be board day, when their names are entered in the minute book.

6785. That would give a statement of the sum total of the visits they paid; do you mean to say, that on each occasion of visiting here they inspect the whole establishment?—Well, I do not think they on each occasion inspect the whole establishment.

6786. In what manner do the Inspectors bring before the Board of Governors any representations or suggestions they may desire to make?—They attend the Board meetings, and whatever occurs they express their opinion upon it. There have been some few instances in which I have written to them on matters, and they communicated by letter.

6787. When you speak of their making communications to the Board on the occasions of their personally attending, those are, of course, oral communications?—Yes.

6788. Of which there is no record?—There is not. It may have happened that a distinct resolution may have been proposed by an Inspector at a meeting, and, of course, that is entered in the minute book.

6789. Is there a clerk and storekeeper attached to the establishment?—Yes.

6790. Does he reside in the house?—He is non-resident.

6791. Is that by permission of the Board?—They have never made any order upon the matter.

6792. Are you aware, that by the Privy Council regulations he is required to reside in the asylum, unless the Board shall consider otherwise, but in which case they shall enter in the minute book the permission, and the grounds on which it is granted?—I am.

6793. There has been no such record of permission?—No.

6794. By whom are the minutes of the Board kept?—They are written out in rough by me, during the meeting, and are afterwards entered by the clerk. I write them in the minute book, in general, in pencil, and he copies them out.

6795. Are the stores and supplies which are furnished for the use of the establishment received by the storekeeper?—That is the general rule.

6796. What are the exceptions?—There are no exceptions absolutely with regard to any one article, but there are articles which occasionally he may not receive.

6797. Specify the articles to which you refer?—Chafery coal, turf, and straw.

6798. Is the clothing made up in the establishment by the patients?—Not all. The clothing of the male patients—the jackets, waistcoats, and trousers—are made by a tailor, who is paid so much a suit; he comes up to the establishment, and makes them here. The shoes are purchased by contract. The female clothing is all made up in the establishment, and the linen for the men's shirts and sheeting. In fact, all things are made up in the establishment, with the exception of what I have stated—shoes, jackets, vests, and trousers. When I say they are made up in the establishment, I mean they are made by the patients. With reference to the shoes, we have a shoemaker hired by the day, and he has the assistance of patients in the house.

6799. By whom are the servants of the establishment appointed?—By me.

6800. Without any interference by the Board?—I submit the appointments for the approval of the Board, after I have made them, within a certain space of time—from one month to two months.

6801. By whom are they removed?—If I consider they ought to be removed, I report them to the Board, and they are not dismissed unless the Board approve of their dismissal.

6802. Are the servants employed in charge of the patients usually capable of reading and writing?—They are. There was a rule made at the opening of the house, that it should be stated in the advertisement, no party need apply unless he or she could read and write. That rule had reference only to that particular occasion, but, however, it has been acted on ever since, with one exception. There is one woman at present in the house who does not read or write.

6803. How came that exception to be made?—The appointment is not confirmed by the Board yet. I found a difficulty in getting a person who understood the duties of a nurse, for bodily ailments, and who could read or write; this woman is in the position at present, and my mind is not yet made up respecting her. If I could get a woman able to discharge the duties, and read and write, I would not appoint the present woman. Even if I were inclined to appoint her, the Board might not be also inclined.

6804. Are the salaries given sufficient to secure the services of competent persons?—Well, I think some of the salaries are too low; I will omit my own salary. I think the salary of the clerk and storekeeper is too low; it is £60 a year; and I consider the salaries of the servants are low, generally speaking. I think I would find a difficulty in filling up all the places here at the male side, but for pensioners. These persons will take low wages, because they have their pensions in addition; but if I were to seek for servants who had no other means for their support than their payment here, I do not think I could fill up the places with competent persons.

6803. Is there a general registry kept of the persons admitted into the asylum?—Yes.

6806. Is the morning statement book regularly kept?—Yes.

6807. By whom was this form of the daily statement book now before me furnished?—It is the form required by the Act of Parliament, with one or two additions made by myself, copied from other asylums, and from my own notion. All the particulars required by the Act of Parliament are included.

6808. This book appears to be a combination of the medical journal required to be kept by the Act of Parliament, with certain statements required in the ordinary daily statement book?—Yes.

6809. It does not give in detail the nature of the employments at which the patients are engaged?—No.

6810. Are you aware that the ordinary daily statement book in use, and approved several years since, does contain that information?—No. I was never aware that there was any morning statement book approved by authority. There is no form prescribed in the Lord Lieutenant's rules. The employment is stated in detail, on the list which I now exhibit.

6811. When you desire to bring matters under the notice of the Board, in what form do you do so?—I make a monthly report, in conjunction with the visiting physician, and I make a monthly report from myself. The one in conjunction with the visiting physician has reference to medical matters; the one from myself has reference to my duties as manager; besides, I enter in the minute-book any special matters I may desire to bring forward.

6812. What authority do you exercise over the female side of the establishment?—I exercise general authority.

6813. Do you inspect that part of the establishment, as well as the other, regularly?—Yes.

6814. Do the applications for wants from the women pass through you?—They are generally entered on my want book; sometimes the matron's want book is laid separately by me before the Board; it is never brought by any one but me.

6815. Is mechanical restraint much practised in the institution?—Not at all.

6816. Are there the means of applying mechanical restraint?—Yes.

6817. In whose custody are they?—In mine.

6818. Is seclusion practised?—It is, but very rarely.

6819. Are there any padded rooms in the establishment?—No; they have been done away with.

6820. For what reason were they done away with?—They were considered unnecessary.

6821. What course is generally pursued with a violent patient?—Soothing language. I take him away from the rest of the patients out into the exercise yard, and walk him up and down the corridor. I adopt means of that sort, and afterwards a bath is ordered—but very rarely during the actual fit of excitement. It is more generally ordered as a medical means, after the excitement is over.

6822. Is a shower bath ever given without your authority?—No.

6823. Are the wards regularly supplied with baths?—Baths are there, but there is a great want of hot water.

6824. How many baths are there?—There are eight.

6825. Is there no hot water laid on for the use of those baths?—Yes, but the boiler is out of order.

6826. Has that been long the case?—A year and a-half.

6827. Has the matter been brought under the notice of the Board of Governors?—It has.

6828. Have any directions been given to you to provide a proper supply of hot water?—No; it was shortly after the accident occurred to the boiler that the Building Commissioners came, and the Board considered it likely that some general improvement would be made in the means of supplying water, and that if they were to do any thing then it would be probably useless.

6829. When warm water is at present required for baths, how is it supplied?—It is drawn up from the kitchen in buckets. Clean water is boiled every day, for baths and other purposes, in the boiler in the kitchen.

6830. That arrangement of carrying water through the house is found inconvenient?—It is.

6831. Is there a sufficient supply of water from the wells and pumps?—No, not for the purposes of cleanliness; there is for drinking.

6832. Have any measures been taken to increase the supply?—No; I took some measures myself, by altering the level at which the water was delivered, but it is still insufficient.

6833. Has that matter occupied the attention of the Board of Governors?—Frequently.

6834. Have any directions been given about it?—No.

6835. How is the water supplied?—From a spring well on the bank of the river, by a forcing pump. It was originally delivered all at the top of the house, into two large cisterns that held about 2,500 gallons, and was passed from these to the different divisions. I got portions of the water diverted into a tank that is near the kitchen, at a considerably lower level, about from twenty to thirty feet lower; and the consequence was, that the supply of water was very much increased, so far as that portion is concerned. Previously to that, there was often an insufficiency of water for cooking, but since that has been done, there has not been a deficiency.

6836. Am I to understand that the supply of water at present is not adequate for the ordinary purposes of cleanliness in the house?—For ordinary purposes, according to the arrangements laid down for a system of water-closets and other matters, to flush and do all such things, the supply is not sufficient.

6837. Do the patients generally get a bath once a-week or oftener?—They do not.

6838. How frequently?—About once a fortnight, or once in three weeks.

6839. Are there lavatories in each department?—There are.

6840. Is the water laid on?—Yes; sometimes there is a want of water.

6841. Are you satisfied with the arrangements of the lavatories?—No.

6842. In what respects are they defective?—The supply of hot and cold water is insufficient; they are not large enough, and the number of wash-hand basins is not sufficient. I think it would be a better arrangement to have them on one basement story, and to have one common lavatory in place of having eight, as at present. Slops are thrown into them, which, I think, is objectionable.

6843. In what state is the sewerage?—It is good, except that sometimes the pipes immediately in connexion with the water-closets get out of order, but the main sewers are very good.

6844. What means are there of warming the corridors and the cells of the patients?—There are open fire-places in the corridors; some of the associated dormitories have fire-places. Open fire-places are the only means of warming, and they are in the day-rooms, corridors, and in some of the associated dormitories, but there are no means of heating the cells.

6845. Are those fire-places in the outer or inner walls?—In the inner walls, generally, in the day-rooms. About half are in the outer walls, and about half in the inner.

6846. Are fires kept up in those grates during the winter?—Fires are kept up only in the day-rooms.

6847. Do you find that the corridors and cells are cold and uncomfortable in winter?—The cells are cold and damp; the corridors may be a little.

6848. Are the corridors much used by the patients?—Not much.

6849. Are there any benches or chairs to enable them to rest in the corridors?—None.

6850. What furniture is there in the day-rooms?—There are two tables in each day-room, forms, and a few chairs. There are two day-rooms containing a book-case in each.

6851. What bedsteads are generally in use?—Iron.

6852. Are you satisfied with those supplied?—I think there might be a better description of bedsteads. The chief fault I find with them is, that they rust the bed-ticks so much.

6853. What bedding is generally used?—Cocoa-nut fibre bed-ticks, supplied by the Board of Works, and still in use, with the exception of the bed-ticks of dirty patients.

6854. Do you approve of the cocoa-nut fibre beds?—I do not; it gets hard very soon; and if any accident happens to the bed-tick, the whole bed must be re-made, and there is a difficulty in washing and cleaning it.

6855. What arrangements were made for the ventilation of the building, in its construction?—There were two shafts built—one at each end of the house, the male and the female; and then there are horizontal fines run through the walls into those shafts.

6856. Does that system of ventilation work satisfactorily?—I do not think it does; the current is not sufficient; and there is another fault in it, the openings into the horizontal shafts are at the top, and there is no means of introducing a current of air from the bottom to replace the vitiated air that may go up.

6857. Were those deficiencies brought under the consideration of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the building?—Yes.

6858. What arrangements are made for the amusement of the patients?—They have parties, at which they get tea and bread and butter once in every three months, on each side of the house, by which arrangement there is a party once in every six weeks in the house. The last was on the 15th February. Three patients play musical instruments; one plays on the fiddle, two on the flute; and nearly every night, except Saturday night, when there is washing, they play for the men. There is no musician at the female side. Once a-week they get a party without any addition of tea. It takes place after their supper; but on the other nights in the week the fiddler stays with the men, and they have dancing. In addition to that, the men kick football; they have draughts, dumb-bells, and cards.

6859. Are these generally used?—They play draughts and cards very constantly; every night there is draught-playing and card-playing.

6860. Have you found that card-playing has led to excitement and quarrelling amongst them?—I do not think it does.

6861. Are there any books?—A few.

6862. Is there a school in the asylum?—No.

6863. Is there any considerable number of patients incapable of reading and writing?—There is a large number incapable of reading and writing.

6864. What is your opinion as to the propriety or otherwise of having such patients instructed?—I would be very doubtful as to its good results. In a small institution like this it would be exceedingly difficult to carry it out—with our present architectural arrangements, I would say impossible.

6865. Would it not afford additional occupation for the patients?—It would; but I consider the best occupation for lunatics is out-of-door amusement, and a freedom from mental engagement—that is, as far as my own observation goes. In the tables given in the last Report of the Census Commissioners there is a very marked difference shown between the number of the educated and uneducated lunatic classes. It makes me doubt that instruc-gion has not an opposite tendency. Originally I entertained a different view; and when I was appointed here I entered into communication with the Commissioners of National Education. I was anxious to get teachers from the National Board, and applied to them with the object of getting a school here, and I did not succeed in doing so. I should consider very carefully now before I adapted the system.

6866. Are there chaplains attached to the institution?—Yes.

6867. What arrangements are made for the celebration of divine worship; is there a chapel?—There is a chapel.

6868. What proportion of the inmates usually attend divine worship on Sunday?—Between one-third and one half, nearly one half—fifty-one Roman Catholics and seven Protestants—that is, fifty-eight out of 145, and that is about the usual number of patients; and then the attendants go to divine worship.

6869. Do you consider the ministrations of chaplains advantageous or otherwise?—Advantageous, as a general rule.

6870. Have the chaplains an opportunity of communicating with the inmates whenever they require to do so?—Yes.

6871. Supposing you considered that the state of a patient did not make it desirable that any communication would take place with him on religious matters, what course would you pursue?—In such a case I would object to the chaplain seeing him; but the case has not occurred.

6872. Are you satisfied with the general dietary in use in the establishment?—I think it is a fair dietary.

6874. Have potatoes been given as a general article of dietary within the last twelve months?—Yes; we have given them about once a-week within the last two or three months, since the potatoes were dug and brought in. I am afraid we will not be able to continue that allowance. During the same period they have got, once a-week, an allowance of cabbage. These are not in the regular course of diet; they are merely allowed by the Board of Governors in case they are on the grounds of the asylum. They are given at my discretion and that of the visiting physician.

6875. Was there an institution for the reception of the insane in Kilkenny previous to the opening of this asylum?—There was a House of Industry and Correction. It was under the House of Industry Act.

6876. Were any of the patients in it brought here at the opening of this asylum?—There were about forty-seven.

6877. Were these chiefly chronic cases?—All chronic cases. For about two years previous to the opening of this house the admissions into that institution were stopped.

6878. It appears that on the 1st of January last, out of 148 inmates, 126 were supposed to be incurable; how do you account for that large proportion of incurable cases?—I account for it by the number of chronic cases sent into this institution on its opening. There were 119 sent in, and five-sixths of these were chronic.

6879. For what number of patients was this asylum built?—One hundred and fifty is the number it is limited to by the Lord Lieutenant's order.

6880. It appears from a return the Commissioners have received, that there were twenty-one lunatics in the workhouses of Kilkenny, and ten in the gaols on the 1st of January last, making a total of thirty-one cases; there is not accommodation for that additional number in the asylum at present?—The Lord Lieutenant's warrant would not allow it. There are 145 in the house; and under the warrant of his Excellency there are only, therefore, five vacancies; but there is room in the house, under the new arrangement, for that number.

6881. Do you mean by the new arrangement of the wards?—Yes.

6882. Are there, at present, unoccupied apartments that might be appropriated to patients?—The infirmaries might be appropriated to them, and beds might be placed in the upper corridors.

6883. If an infirmary be necessary in an asylum, would it not be objectionable to appropriate it in that way?—I would be for detached infirmaries.

6884. In that case, additional accommodation would be provided, at the cost of an additional building?—Yes, if my view as to the desirability of having detached hospitals was carried out. In the other case, the use of the upper corridors would admit of an additional number of patients being received, without the necessity for an additional building.

6885. Is it your opinion, that these institutions should be asylums for incurable cases, or should be curative hospitals?—I think they ought to be both.

6886. Considering that 126 patients, out of 148 in this asylum on the 1st of January, were incurable, is it not in a very small degree available as a curative hospital?—Yes, in a very small degree.

6887. Have you ever considered the question of attaching to this institution buildings for the reception of incurable lunatics?—I have.

6888. Is your opinion favourable or unfavourable to that?—Unfavourable.

6889. State the grounds of your opinion?—It would add considerably to the expense of the establishment, and to the inconvenience, to have such a building detached, without any corresponding advantage that I can see. You would then have two lunatic asylums, one for incurables, and one for curables, on the same grounds, and there should be an increase in the staff of officers, while the difficulties thrown in the way of the treatment of the patients, would be increased much more considerably than if you were to have lunatics curable and incurable, treated under the same roof in an hospital, rather than in two detached hospitals. I consider it would cost more to maintain 100 lunatics in one of those detached or separate establishments, than if they were included in the one establishment with another class.

6890. Why do you consider it would cost more to maintain them in a detached building, considering them as incurable cases?—I think the number of attendants would require to be increased.

6891. Would they require a greater number of attendants than the same number of patients in the original asylum?—I think so.

6892. Do you think incurable lunatics could be maintained at a lower rate, considering that the dietary for them might not necessarily be so high?—I think that would make very little difference. I think they might get a different dietary, if it was deemed advisable, in the same building, as well as in a distinct building. Then, again, if there was to be a different dietary, there would be, possibly, a necessity for a different kitchen establishment.

6893. That would be a difficulty still, if they were maintained in the same house?—The inconvenience would not be so great. For instance, the carrying food backward and forward to and from a detached building in wet weather, would be a serious inconvenience; in fact, it would be exceedingly objectionable, to carry stimulants and such things through the grounds. It would be virtually giving two distinct establishments to be superintended in place of one. The chief advantage I have heard proposed is on the score of economy in the building, but I do not see how there could be economy, for a building necessary for a class of incurable or harmless lunatics could be erected for the same sum, or perhaps even less, attached to the asylum, so as to form a part of it, than it would cost to erect a building out in the grounds. Additions could be made to this asylum at the same time. Another objection to the detached building would be, that you would find a great deal of difficulty in pointing out where you could erect it, without necessitating an enlargement of the grounds.

6894. That is an objection which pertains to the particular case?—Yes.

6896. Would you give a preference of admission to the pauper patients, over the paying patients in that case?—I do not think that arrangement should be carried out, until there is ample room for the accommodation of every lunatic in the district, who ought to be received, whether the party is able to pay, or not able to pay. I should mention, that my answers to the question respecting the scale of dietary, and an increase of comforts, were a good deal influenced by the view I have just mentioned. If you are to take one of two alternatives, either to support a limited number of lunatics, and treat them on a very high scale, or to provide, what I consider they are fully entitled to, a proper scale of treatment, I think it would be better that all the lunatics in the district, or any of the whole country, should get a fair average treatment, than that a small number should be received and maintained on a very high scale of diet. That is one of the reasons why I said the scale of dietary here is fair, for I think that if you raise the scale of dietary very much, and increase the other comforts, there will be a disinclination to admit patients, on account of the expense, and that disinclination will find a way of working out its object of limiting the number of admissions.

6897. Should not the dietary in all cases be such as is suitable for the cure of lunatics; ought not that to be the principle on which it would be settled?—It may happen that articles of diet which would be considered, in a private case, conducive to cure, are so far above the means of those parties, that they ought not to be supplied, even though they were considered necessary; and that is the principle acted on in the public institutions. It is acted on in the military and in other hospitals. I know that there are exceptional cases in which the physician and Governors of this institution would feel themselves prevented by the means at their disposal from ordering expensive articles of diet, even though they considered them necessary.

6898. You do not mean that matters would be omitted which were essential for the cure?—No, not essential for the cure within the moderate meaning of the word. For instance, the physician may have a desire to try an experiment: he may have read of a cure being effected in a certain way, either in mental or bodily disease; it may be an expensive cure, and he may consider that he is not warranted, in an institution like this, to order what would cost much.

6899. That is a case in which a physician does not feel warranted in trying an experiment; but would he not, in such a case, pursue some treatment tending to the cure of the patient?—Yes.

6900. Do the inmates of the establishment dine in separate apartments, or all together?—The men dine in one room, and the women in another.

6901. Have you found that to answer?—Exceedingly well.

6902. Has it been long in operation?—Over three years.

6903. Do you often find patients decline to go and dine in the common hall?—No; we have only one person that is unwilling at present. There are only four patients in the whole house that do not dine in the common dining-hall, and only one of them from refusal on his own part.

cases received into this asylum?—In cases of parties admitted by the Board we generally do; but in cases of parties sent in from prisons as dangerous lunatics the information is very meagre.

6905. Is the portion of the admission paper headed "queries" in any case furnished for the gaol lunatics?—No; there is another form giving some statistical information sent.

6906. The form to which you have last referred accompanies the committal of the lunatic?—Yes.

6907. Are those committals sent on to the gaol?—Yes; by the direction of the Inspectors they are sent now. Originally, at the opening of this house, they were not.

6908. Are you aware whether any other medical certificate is transmitted with a dangerous lunatic to the gaol, beyond that which is contained in the form exhibited?—There is not. The affidavit in the form states, that a medical man was called in. When I was physician to the gaol, that form which I now exhibit was used.

6909. With reference to ordinary admissions, is there any rule against the admission of idiots or epileptics?—No absolute rule. There is a general understanding that idiots or epileptics shall not be admitted unless there is insanity, and that in a dangerous form, combined with the epilepsy.

6910. Do you find any difficulty in getting patients removed under the obligation signed by the person who enters into the bond?—No, we have not experienced any difficulty. A very large proportion of the parties admitted here are not admitted under that bond. Neither the gaol nor House of Industry Lunatics were admitted on any such bond.

6911. In what way do the Board ascertain to what district a lunatic is to be charged?—The Board have never inquired into it here. I fix the chargeability; that has been the practice here.

6912. How do you ascertain the chargeability?—According to the jurisdiction of the magistrate who signs the certificate, whether he be a city or a county magistrate. The magistrate signs the certificate that the party is a resident in the county or the city as the case may be.

6913. Then it is according to what they certify?—And according also to their jurisdiction, which is, to a certain extent, evidence, for a city magistrate could not act in a county case. The same magistrate signs the certificate and affidavit, and it is by both these the chargeability is settled.

6914. Supposing a lunatic belonging to the county Kilkenny is found in the act of committing a crime, or about to commit a crime, and is liable to be committed under the Dangerous Lunatic Act, in the city of Kilkenny, and that case comes before a city magistrate, on which, the county or the city, would you charge that person?—In case of a direct application being made here for admission, if the certificate was signed by the churchwarden and that the magistrate certified that he belonged to the city, I would charge him to the city.

6915. Although the body of the certificate stated he belonged to the county?—I do not think that case ever arose.

6916. Supposing it did arise as it might?—I would lay the case before the Board.

6917. Has there ever been an investigation as to cases of lunatics in this asylum who, it was supposed, were not properly charged to the county to which they belonged?—There was not by the Governors, but by some parties in the city.

6918. What was the result?—The result was this: It was ascertained there was a woman who belonged to the county, and was charged to the city. She was a dangerous lunatic, sent in from the city gaol by order of the Lord Lieutenant. She is still charged to the city, and I am not aware that there is any remedy for it. Another case was precisely similar. A woman came in from the House of Correction, and was classed as a dangerous lunatic, and the case remained charged to the city until she was discharged.

6919. Have any representations ever been submitted here to the Board of Governors by the executive Government as to the propriety of an addition being made to the number of Governors from the city?—Yes; one was brought before the Board of Governors on the 17th April, 1855. The consideration was postponed from that day. It was a memorial from the city Grand Jury to the Lord Lieutenant, praying him to appoint additional Governors. On the following board day, the 16th May, the memorial was brought before the Board, and this minute was made:—"That the gentlemen mentioned in the memorial are unobjectionable, and, in addition, we beg to name Lord James Butler and James M. Tidmarsh, Esq., our present mayor." It appears from that, the Board of Governors approved of the prayer of the memorial, and recommended two additional names.

6920. Were the four gentlemen named in the memorial afterwards appointed?—The two parties recommended in the minute, Lord James Butler and James M. Tidmarsh, were appointed, but not the persons named in the memorial.

6921. I believe you are the visiting physician of the asylum?—Yes, since it opened.

6922. How far do you take part in the medical treatment of the inmates?—So far as consulting with Dr. Lalor, and agreeing with him as to the treatment of the different cases that come under our notice.

6923. Do you make it a point to consider the case of each patient immediately on its admission?—Yes.

6924. How frequently do you visit the establishment during the week?—At least three times a week, and as often as I am sent for, or as often as I consider there is a case of serious illness requiring my attendance.

6925. Are you generally accompanied by the resident physician in inspecting the inmates?—Always.

6926. It has been stated, by Dr. Lalor, that, at times, you are both in the habit of prescribing for the same patients without consulting together?—That is accidental. A case may occur between the days of my attendance for which Dr. Lalor prescribes, then, when I come, we will speak about the case; or I might come and see the case, and give a prescription—if necessary, the patient would get it immediately, or, if necessary, the case would be dealt with according to Dr. Lalor's opinion.

6927. In all cases would you inquire what treatment had been pursued by Dr. Lalor, previous to giving the prescription?—Yes; in fact, two prescriptions for one patient, from us, is a mere accidental thing.

The proportion of incurable cases.

6928. I suppose you prepared, in conjunction with Dr. Lalor, this return, from which it appears that 120 inmates, out of 148 in the house on the 1st January last, were incurable?—I did not go over the entire, but we spoke together on the subject, and he showed me that return. I think, upon the whole, that it is as nearly accurate as we could estimate.

6929. Do you consider that large proportion of incurable cases is owing to the reason which he has assigned, the number of chronic cases that were received?—Yes.

6930. Is it your opinion that the cases of applicants for admission are usually of considerable standing before the friends apply to have them admitted?—Not invariably, they sometimes are of long standing. Sometimes we get in cases that are quite recent—not more than a few days or a month affected. That is so, I think, generally in cases of dangerous lunacy.

General suitability of the building.

6931. Are you satisfied, generally, that the building is one suited for the purposes for which it was erected?—I think it might be better arranged; but it has answered our purpose up to the present, at least, judging from the proportion of cures and the proportion of deaths. There is a great deficiency in the water-pipe.

The means for medical and moral treatment.

6932. Are you satisfied with the means afforded, generally, for the medical and moral treatment of insanity?—Yes; but, I think, the moral treatment might be more extended. There might be more amusement for the patients in the way of cheap books, a hall-alley for the men, and things of that kind.

The classification of patients.

6933. What classification of patients is made?—The classification we have here has answered very well, but I do not put it up as a model. In fact, there are only two classes here—those that are refractory, and the tranquil. I think there ought to be a third—a class for epileptics; and in case of paying patients being received, I think they ought to be classed together too.

6934. Supposing the class of paying patients received to be those who could merely pay for their actual maintenance and support, would you advise that they should be treated differently from the other patients?—Not unless their previous circumstances in life rendered it necessary to do so. If there is a sufficient number of them they might, of course, be classed separately; but if you got only three, four, or five, as we have now, it is impossible, except by incurring great additional expense, to make a separate class of them.

6935. I understand your view to be, that if a class of paying patients were admitted into this establishment whose social condition differed materially from that of the general class of lunatics received, it would not be advisable to mix them?—I think it would not be advisable to mix them.

6936. Do you consider it would have a disadvantageous effect upon their chance of cure?—It would have a disadvantageous effect upon those persons of a superior position.

Infirmary.

6937. Is it your opinion that infirmary, to be used as such, should be attached to each asylum?—I should say so.

Religious ministrations.

6938. What is your opinion as to the advantage of chaplains being attached to this establishment?—It has not yet come under my notice sufficiently to enable me to form an opinion upon the subject. There are some cases in which I should expect considerable benefit from their ministrations. On the other hand, I think there are cases in which their ministrations are without any result at all. In the case of a patient driven to insanity by misfortune or calamities, or such external influences, and without organic disease, I think their ministrations are likely to be attended with a beneficial effect; but if organic disease existed, I would not expect much benefit from such ministrations. In fact, we have here two or three of the most violent patients, who are religiously disposed, and deeply read in religious matters.

6939. Do you consider there will always be a considerable portion of the inmates who might benefit by religious ministrations?—Yes, a considerable portion, but not the majority; that is in a place where you have so many chronic cases as we have in this hospital. In such a place I do not think you can ever have the majority benefited by religious ministrations; but there will always be a certain proportion benefited.

Question of removing incurable cases to a separate building.

6940. What is your opinion as to the advisability of incurable cases being treated in a separate building, though immediately adjoining the institution?—That involves the expense of an additional building, and the expense of an additional staff. These are very great objections to the arrangement.

6941. Medically, do you see an objection to those lunatics being kept apart, and separate from others?—No, I do not see, medically, any objection to it. I do not see that they are likely to derive any benefit from it. They are generally put with the refractory patients, who are not influenced by their state.

6942. Supposing it to become known to the lunatics, if they were removed to another building, that it was one for the reception of incurable patients, do you consider that knowledge would operate injuriously upon them?—On some it would; for we have some incurable cases here who have still a sufficient amount of intellect to have some sense to a certain extent, and the idea of being shut up as incurable, in a place they were never to leave, would act unfavourably upon them. It would destroy any chance they might otherwise have. Upon the others that would have no effect whatever.

James M. Tidmarsh, Esq., &c., sworn and examined.

6943. You are a Governor of this asylum?—I am.

6944. Are there any suggestions you would wish to make to the Commissioners, or any points you desire to call their attention to?—Yes. The first is the appointment of Governors. My opinion is, that the parties who have to supply the funds for the support of these institutions and their inmates, ought to have a voice in the selection of the Governors. I think that the Grand Jury of the county and of the city, or the Corporation, ought, as in the case of Boards of Superintendence, to have the appointment of a certain number of Governors, to attend here from assizes to assizes, in order to represent the Grand Juries, both of the city and of the county, on the Board.

6945. Do you consider that any proportion of the Governors should still be appointed by the Executive Government?—I should have no objection to that, but they should be in addition to those appointed by the Grand Jury at each assizes, from the panel, to attend to their interests here, and watch over the expenditure of the money which those bodies are exclusively called upon to supply.

6946. What is your opinion as to the propriety of the Inspectors of Asylums being members of the Board?—I do not see any objection to it; so far as I am aware here, concerning the Inspectors, they have always acted very fairly, and afforded valuable information on the subjects on which their advice was required.

6947. Do you consider that their duties should be limited merely to attendance, as in the case of Poor Law Inspectors?—I do not think so. I have seen no ill consequences arise from giving them a voice at the Board. I have not seen them exercise their authority in any way to clash with the interests of the institution or the wishes of the Board. Without intending to disparage the appointment of Governors now existing, I think it right to state that I do not agree with Dr. Laker, that the attendance of Governors was regular. I know that, in more than one case, Dr. Laker was obliged to send for a Governor to make a Board here. The next point I would refer to is the manner in which the funds are raised for the purpose of supporting this institution.

6948. Would you desire any change in the chargeability of the lunatic poor?—I would. I think that in the applications for admission to this institution, the persons designate themselves paupers; and I do not see why there should be a law for levying the funds for the support of the persons admitted as paupers into this institution different from the law which exists in the case of paupers in poorhouses. I think it is unfair to call upon the occupiers in the county and city exclusively to support this institution. I conceive that the landlords should be called on to pay their share for the support of the establishment, in the same manner as they are obliged to do for poor law purposes.

6949. Have not the existing contracts, as regards land, been made with the knowledge that this rate was payable by the occupier?—I must call your attention to the fact that this rate has been only very recently levied off the county and city. It might have been, to some extent, before, but not to the enormous extent that it is at present; and, as far as I see things going on now, the tax will increase very much. Many persons, when talking land, did not calculate on having to pay so large a tax for the support of this institution.

6950. Previously to the erection of this asylum, did not the county and city of Kilkenny belong to the Carlow district?—Yes; but the sum then levied was very inconsiderable.

6951. Was there not a rate also levied for the lunatics in the House of Industry?—Yes.

6952. Then there is an increase, and not a new rate?—Yes, an enormous increase. With respect to the chargeability of criminal lunatics, my impression is that the State ought to support them.

6953. Are not criminal lunatics in the Dundrum Central Asylum maintained by the State?—No, not all. There is a person here charged with a crime for which he would be transported if sane, but he got off on a plea of lunacy, and therefore he is charged upon us, because he did not go through the ordeal of a trial.

6954. Was the lunatic committed for the crime, or as a dangerous lunatic?—He was committed for the crime.

6955. Are you aware that the law provides that such a lunatic may be maintained in the Central Criminal Asylum?—I am not aware that is the case.

6956. Has not this asylum been erected at the cost of the county and the county of the city of Kilkenny?—It has; but I may add, it was erected without ever consulting them as to the payment of the debt incurred by such erection, which I also consider a gross injustice.

6957. You consider that the local ratepayers should have a voice as to the propriety, or otherwise, of the erection of the asylum, and also a control over the building in reference to its construction?—Yes. I think it is wrong that the Government—as very likely they may do in this instance, if gentlemen report the institution is not equal to the wants of the district—that they should direct an additional building to be erected without even consulting the persons who are obliged to supply the money. I consider that an injustice.

James M. Tiddeman,
Esq.

6958. Would you give the Government any power of causing such additional building to be erected in the event of the local authorities refusing to do so, when such building appeared necessary?—I know the constitution of the men who take an active part in public matters in this county and city, and if it was shown to them that such a thing was required where humanity was concerned, I doubt very much that they would refuse to provide what was called for.

6959. Supposing the county of Kilkenny to be impressed with the idea that there was no necessity for an additional building, and the city of Kilkenny to be of a different opinion, how would you decide?—I will not take upon myself to say what should be done then.

6960. Is not that a difficulty that might arise in any district comprising more than one county?—It might; but I think if it is shown that an additional building is required, neither the county nor the city of Kilkenny would refuse to sanction its erection.

6961. Am I to understand you as suggesting that the maintenance of this establishment should be defrayed out of the poor-rate?—Precisely.

6962. That is a rate levied upon the several unions in the county?—Yes, and of the city.

6963. Are the unions all contiguous with the county?—I think there is one which is not contiguous with the boundaries of the county—that is, the union of Callan. I only speak of the principle, and I am not conversant with the details, and therefore cannot go into them.

6964. In case of a union belonging partly to another county and partly to the county Kilkenny, how would you provide for the maintenance of an establishment and for the reception of paupers from a district, the whole of which did not contribute to the maintenance of that house?—If I live in the county Tipperary, and you show me that a lunatic from my quarter of the county is supported here, I will have no objection to contribute to the maintenance of that lunatic. That, I think, could be easily arranged.

6965. You consider such arrangement could be made without doing any injustice?—Not only without doing injustice, but with great advantage.

6966. Are you aware that the funds for the maintenance of this institution are at present advanced from the Consolidated Fund, and repaid by the counties?—Yes.

6967. They are repaid by imperative presentment, I believe?—Yes, at each session.

6968. How would you enable the money to be recovered from the Boards of Guardians in an equally imperative manner?—I cannot exactly answer that, which is also a matter of detail. I merely say the expense ought to be so provided for. With respect to the accommodation in this house, I think that further accommodation could be provided in the building as it is constituted, without putting the county or the city to any further expense. For instance, I have ascertained that there are at present in this institution nearly thirty idiots, or harmless lunatics; and I am of opinion that now that our workhouses are becoming almost empty, a portion of those workhouses might be set apart for the reception of those idiots or harmless lunatics, who could be supported there at half the cost that now falls upon the county and city for them. Their maintenance would also come under what I before alluded to—the poor-rate system. If that were done, you would create vacancies in the house for the thirty-one lunatics in the workhouses and goals. The chances are, by making room for those lunatics who would come here under the charge of the resident manager, that those persons now locked up in the county goal might be cured. At our meeting yesterday we ascertained that there was only one vacancy.

6969. Is it not likely that many of the lunatics to whom you have referred, if removed to the workhouses, would be exposed to annoyances from the other inmates?—I intend that they should be put apart from them. It would be an injustice to the other inmates to mix the two classes together. I would say that a large proportion of accommodation, quite sufficient for this class of harmless lunatics, might be afforded in the workhouses, giving them ample room for exercise; and they could also get a proper dietary there.

6970. How are they attended in the workhouses?—They are mixed up with the other inmates.

6971. Are there no separate lunatic wards?—I believe I am correct in stating there are not, at present. Dr. Cane will give you any information on that subject you may require.

6972. Is it your opinion that a workhouse would be at all a place suitable for the detention of the curable lunatics?—I do not think it is.

6973. Does that opinion extend also to goals?—Certainly.

Robert Cane, Esq.,

Robert Cane, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S.D., sworn and examined.

6974. Are you a member of the Town Council of Kilkenny?—I am an alderman of the Corporation of Kilkenny.

6975. Are you also connected, professionally, with the institutions of the county and city?—I am physician to the county and city prisons, and to the Kilkenny workhouse.

6976. As an alderman of the Town Council of Kilkenny, are there any suggestions you would wish to offer to the Commissioners on this inquiry?—There are. It is the impression of myself and the members of the Corporation, that the citizens of Kilkenny are not sufficiently represented on the Board of Governors of this asylum. We consider that, representing the citizens of Kilkenny as a tax-paying body largely contributing to the support of this institution, we ought to have a larger representation on the Board than the mayor alone, who is entitled to be a member by his office. I think them ought to be one or two members of the Corporation, and also members of the Grand Jury, who have to present for the taxes.

6977. Supposing a representative character to be given, which they do not at present posers, to the Boards of Governors, would you see any objection to the nomination of a fixed number by the Executive Government?—I think the local body would be more competent to do that, they being men having a knowledge of the district, and of matters of taxation, than the Government. The Corporation look with alarm to the contemplated measure of building an addition to this house; and we consider that the number in the asylum might be considerably diminished by transferring from it to the workhouse such cases as are considered incurable and harmless.

4878. Is there an addition to this asylum really in contemplation?—It is spoken of, more I would say by public rumour, rather than because of the deliberations of any body on the subject. In the way I have just suggested the necessity for enlarging this house would be got rid of, and accommodation would be made for the class that are at present allowed to lie in the prisons of the neighbourhood—an exceedingly objectionable arrangement—in consequence of there being a want of accommodation here.

4879. You consider there is a class of lunatics who might, with due regard to humanity, and their chance of cure, be removed to the workhouse?—Not with a view to cure; but, being pronounced to be incurable cases here, and harmless, they could be as well cared in the workhouse as in this asylum; and their removal would create vacancies for a class now neglected from a want of accommodation—the class left lying in the prisons.

4880. Would you consider it right that they should be attended by paid servants in the workhouses, or by the other paupers?—I should say, decidedly by paid servants, and kept apart from the other inmates. I have a great objection to unpaid servants for such people. The other suggestion from the Corporation is, that the tax for the maintenance of this house should be levied after the manner of the poor-rate, as suggested by Mr. Tiddmah, either directly, as a part of the rate, or upon some other principle introduced into the Act of Parliament regulating it in a manner similar to the poor-rate.

4881. Do you consider that, in the event of such an alteration of the law, the lunatic should be charged upon an electoral division or a union?—I consider that he should be charged upon the district from which he came. In many cases the patients sent in here come from other counties. They are committed first, as lunatics, to prison, and are afterwards sent in here by parliamentary order from the Lord Lieutenant. There was a suggestion made by the Hon. Mr. Wandesforde which I consider important and valuable, and I may be allowed to express my opinion with reference to it—that is, that the relieving officers should be parties to signing the certificates for admission into this house. I believe the relieving officer signing the certificate would be attended with this invariably good result: a class of people get in here who are unquestionably, either themselves or their friends, able to pay; and the most perfect and complete check upon that would be the relieving officer, whose position would enable him to discover the means of the parties. I know that persons are frequently sent in from the county prison who could pay.

4882. I presume that a considerable difficulty must arise, particularly if the attendance of Governors here is so small, in obtaining any very accurate information as to what are the means of the relatives or friends of lunatics?—I should say it chiefly rests with the manager of the institution to make the necessary inquiries, and he cannot be always satisfactorily informed. Of course, if a case comes, as the great majority of cases do, direct upon the order of the Lord Lieutenant, the manager has no option but to receive the person.

4883. In the case to which you refer, of a lunatic sent by order of the Lord Lieutenant, the Board have no discretion as to his admission?—None, that I am aware of. There is only one other suggestion I would venture to offer, as physician to the prisons—that really the old mode of committing lunatics ought to be got rid of, that is, committing by two magistrates on a medical certificate. It was never contemplated under the new Act, that should remain in force. The forms appear to me to be precisely the same for the last ten or twelve years. Men are committed in an exceedingly loose manner. The case is brought before the dispensary medical man, or other physician; he sees him casually for a few moments, finds him out of his mind, and gives a certificate. Accordingly the man is taken before the magistrate, and upon a sworn information that the party probably gave a blow of a stone, or otherwise struck somebody, he is committed as a dangerous lunatic. He gets well in a few days after coming to the asylum; while, on the other hand, the really dangerous lunatic is delayed, although if there is to be any hope for his cure, the sooner he is treated the better.

4884. Is it your opinion that it is usual for parties to be accused of being dangerous lunatics with a view to their commitment to prison, in order that they may be the more readily sent to this asylum?—I have no doubt of that being the fact.

4885. Are you satisfied with the state of the law under which districts are created, and asylums erected now, without reference to the local ratepayers?—I am satisfied that, in this case, the asylum was necessary; but I would prefer the local parties having a voice in the arrangements.

4886. From your knowledge of the country generally, and from your experience, are you of opinion that there is an indisposition on the part of the poor generally to send their lunatic friends or relatives to the district lunatic asylum?—Decidedly not; there is the greatest anxiety to get them into it.

4887. Do you think that, from feelings of attachment, and so forth, it is usual for them to detain the lunatic members of their families in their homes, till the cases have ceased to be recent cases, and have become chronic?—I think not; I think there is an early anxiety displayed to have the proper remedies applied.

4888. Supposing paying patients to be admitted into this establishment generally, would you, as a professional man, consider it would be necessary to make any distinction between them and the other patients—that they should be kept apart from or treated with the others?—That should be a question for the manager, having reference to particular cases: I do not think it would be advisable to lay down any general principle. There are cases it might be advantageous to treat with the other patients, and others that it would be well to treat separately. I am of opinion that paying patients ought to be admitted here.

8880. Are you of opinion that there is a considerable class who, though not paupers, yet are not sufficiently affluent to be enabled to support their lunatic relatives in private asylums?—I am quite satisfied there is a very large class who might be able to afford from £20 to £30 a year, and who cannot afford from £80 to £100 a year, which are about the sums charged in the leading private establishments. They could not have the benefit of the same care and treatment they would receive here for less than about £30 or £100 a year in private asylums.

8890. Does the Kilkenny workhouse contain any lunatic wards?—No.

8891. There is no particular part of the building, therefore, appropriated for the reception of the insane?—We have no absolutely mischievous lunatic in the house. We have cases of mental debility connected with epilepsy, and we have idiocy; but those cases are treated in the infirm wards. They are treated as such; and when labouring under bodily disease, become hospital patients.

8893. Do you consider that the workhouse affords the means of treating lunacy in a curative manner?—I should say not, under the present system; and I would only contemplate that it should be made available for the incurable cases—cases of idiocy, that are harmless.

8894. But at present there is nothing in the state of the law which prevents incurable lunatics being detained in workhouses?—Certainly not. In the building of poorhouses there were lunatic wards provided.

8904. In the event of a portion of the workhouse being appropriated for the accommodation of incurable lunatics, do you think that the removal of the incurable cases to such an establishment, from the asylum, would have an injurious effect upon the lunatics?—They are generally cases not likely to be damaged in that way, being hopeless cases, generally of weak intellect, and not capable of appreciating the meaning of such a proceeding. Dr. James, my colleague as physician to the workhouse, quite concurs with me that such cases could be taken care of, in a proper manner, in the workhouse.

8905. Supposing the arrangement to which you refer to be carried out, by which the incurable and harmless lunatics might be removed to the workhouse, would you leave a discretion with the medical officers of the workhouse as to the dietary of those inmates?—Certainly; their dietary and management should be altogether under the control of the physician of the workhouse.

8906. The ordinary dietary of paupers would not, in many cases, be suitable for those persons?—Certainly not.

8907. Are the lunatics detained in gaols usually attended by the prisoners?—Yes.

8908. Is not that objectionable?—Decidedly.

8909. Have you found that it is usually the worst class of prisoners who can be induced to take the charge of lunatics?—Any prisoner the governor appoints for that duty is obliged to do it. There never has been a difficulty in that respect. The ordinary rest of the prisoners is interfered with by such duties.

7000. Is any separate ward appropriated for lunatics?—We have been obliged, in the county prison, to allocate a room for the purpose, in which two or three caretakers are left in charge.

7001. Have any accidents occurred?—None of a very serious character; but I have seen some very ugly cuts and injuries inflicted upon other prisoners, and upon keepers.

7002. Is any mechanical restraint practised in the gaol?—Not generally; but there are some cases in which, owing to a want of proper arrangements, they are obliged to have recourse to it.

7003. Are those means of mechanical restraint in the custody of the governor, or left with the attendants?—They are in custody of the governor, and used only upon his order and that of the physician.

7004. Is mechanical restraint practised in the workhouse?—It is not. If a lunatic appears in the workhouse to be refractory and to require such, he is immediately transmitted to the prison or to the asylum.

William Lanigan, Esq., sworn and examined.

7005. Are you a Governor of the asylum?—An ex-officio Governor for the past year, in right of my office as Mayor; during which time I must say that my experience, while acting as Governor, would go to prove that the attendance of the Governor was any thing at all but satisfactory.

7006. How many usually attend?—I was sent for on two or three occasions, and being compelled to remain at other duties, the two Governors who were here had to leave without doing any business—the Lord Bishop of Ossory and, I think, Mr. Tidmarsh, on one occasion.

7007. Have you generally found more than three attend the Board?—Only on two occasions, when there were five. One occasion was when a notice of motion was given by Mr. Tidmarsh, that the press should be admitted to report the proceedings. On that occasion, unfortunately, three of the Governors voted against two for the exclusion of the press. The ratepayers of Kilkenny are unanimously of opinion that the press ought to be admitted, and that the ratepayers ought to know how their money is disposed of. They also consider that they have an undoubted right to have more than one representative on the Board. I hold in my hand a list of thirty of the Governors for the year ending March, 1880, and there are but four of them resident in the city; and I must say, that were it not for the attendance of some of the four, there would be no Board. On several occasions, Dr. Lalor has been obliged to send round his horse and car, and his man, who is one of the keepers, to try and get Governors for a meeting.

7008. Are no more than four of the Governors connected, by property, with the city of Kilkenny?—Oh, yes, there are; but there are gentlemen on this list who have never entered this room, or been in the asylum.

7009. Would you recommend that non-attendance for one year should disqualify from holding the office the succeeding year?—I would, strongly. I would say that a gentleman, holding correct views, who could not attend, ought to send in his resignation to the Lord Lieutenant. He has no right to hold the place and not discharge the duties.

7010. I believe, practically, there is no limitation of the number of Governors?—I do not know. I am equally ignorant with regard to the chargeability of lunatics. I had to deal with lunatics during my year of office as mayor, and I could not discover the state of the law on the subject. For example, a person, a destitute lunatic, is admitted into the Callan Union Workhouse, which we will take as an illustration; there are parts of that union in the county Tipperary; the person who became lunatic was from one of the electoral divisions in the county Tipperary; but he became lunatic in the Callan Union Workhouse, ergo he was admitted into this asylum.

7011. Would it not have been competent for the Board of Governors of the Kilkenny asylum to reject that case?—I do not consider myself competent to answer that question. I am quite at sea as to what the law is with respect to the chargeability of lunatics.

7012. Are you aware that, in the case referred to, the lunatic was a dangerous lunatic, sent by the Lord Lieutenant?—That may be the case. I would be glad to know if there be any law settling the chargeability of a proper lunatic.

7013. Are you aware that part of the maintenance of the house, and of the lunatics, falls upon the county at large?—I am well aware of that; but I am equally aware that persons who have been sojourning only for a short time within the county, and who, for forty years before resided outside the county, have been admitted into the asylum, and charged upon the county and city of Kilkenny. There are cases I could name whose sojourn was very short within the city boundaries, and who became insane, and receiving the necessary medical certificate, were admitted into the asylum at our charge. This we consider a very great hardship. The county prison has been made use of—lamentable as it may be to make such a statement, but it is, nevertheless, true—by parties well able to maintain their relatives, to get them into this asylum. A father or a brother will get the necessary document signed, and get the person admitted into the county prison as a dangerous lunatic, thereby taking it altogether out of the power of the Governors to require payment from them, or to exercise any control with respect to the admission of the case. Governors here are aware of a case admitted during the past year. It is well known that the father is in affluence—a man with 300 acres of land, and 80 or 120 milch cows. His son was admitted here as a pauper lunatic, through the gate, coming in as a dangerous lunatic. At first he thought to get him admitted by the Governors; but the Governors said not, unless he paid for his support. The parties went outside and consulted, and hesitated, and finally would not accede to the requirement of the Governors. They then took this step, which they knew they could take, of getting the party committed to prison, which they were aware would prevent the Governors exercising any power whatever over the admission. He was committed as a dangerous lunatic, and then sent in here under warrant of the Lord Lieutenant. There are other persons here, certified as being paupers by parties who did not take the necessary amount of care they ought to have taken in making the requisite inquiries. It turns out those parties have some means, either money in bank or some small income; or, if they have it not themselves, their friends have it for them. There was one case lately admitted here, a woman described as a pauper lunatic, and certified as such by one of the churchwardens and a magistrate. I was very much surprised on reading the certificate, knowing the contrary to be the fact. I waited upon both gentlemen, and mentioned that they had subscribed their names to what was not exactly correct; and I believe the Board have since got a bond of indemnity for her maintenance for six years, at £20 a year. She was always a resident of Castlecomer, ten miles from the city of Kilkenny. She came into the city, resided here for a short time, went to Wexford town, resided there for six or seven months, became insane there, was sent here by her friends, who of course thought to get her in as a pauper lunatic, although they held £200 or so of her money.

7014. In what way would you provide for such a case?—I would hesitate to answer that question. I think there would be no difficulty in assimilating the law as to the chargeability of lunatics to that of the poor law.

7015. You are aware, as regards the poor law, that the liability of the parent for the child ceases when the child reaches a certain age?—Yes; great injustice has been done in the way I state. We have complained bitterly, and I think justly that the entire cost of maintaining this institution should fall upon the rated occupiers. A large number of the present inmates of this house were inmates of the workhouse. No year has passed by that two, or probably three, have not been sent here from the Kilkenny workhouse.

Admission of pauper lunatics from the workhouse.

- Witness.
Kilkenny District Asylum.
William Lanyon, Esq.
2016. Does the union of Kilkenny extend beyond the county of the city of Kilkenny?
 —The county of the city is an electoral division, together with a large rural district which runs around it.
2017. In case of lunatics being admitted here from the workhouse, do you know whether any investigation takes place as to their belonging to electoral divisions in the city or county?—No, the question is never raised.
2018. How are they charged?—If they are found to be from the electoral division here, they are charged to the city of Kilkenny; but if they belong to any rural electoral division, they are charged to the county. We have taxation for two asylums upon us at present.
- Appointment of the superior officers.
 2019. With whom do you consider the appointment of the superior officers of the asylum should rest?—I think the governing body in every institution should have it. The important situations under the poor law, under which system rates to a large amount have been levied, those appointments are vested in the Boards of Guardians, and, I should say, the power is not abused. The ex-officio members of the Boards of Guardians are so numerous as to take in a very large number of the gentry, and the elected body are supposed to be persons who can lay claim to some intelligence.
2020. You see no reason why the same principle should not be extended to a lunatic asylum?—I do not. I think it would conduce to a more economical disbursement of the money, and would not be at all likely to lead to the withdrawal of any of the comforts of the inmates of this establishment.
- Sir John Dinwiddie, Bart., &c., &c., sworn and examined.
2021. You are a Governor of this asylum?—I am.
- Appointment and attendance of Governors.
 2022. Do you approve of the manner in which Governors are at present appointed?—I see no objection to it.
2023. Do you find that the attendance of Governors at this Board is usually considerable?—I cannot say very considerable; but I really cannot call to mind any occasion on which I attended that there was not a Board. I think it would be prudent not to continue, as Governors, men who do not attend under any circumstances, and to keep such persons on the list is injurious to the institution.
- Power of Governors as to erection of buildings.
 2024. What is your opinion as to the propriety of giving increased power to the local authorities with reference to the erection of buildings, or the addition of new buildings?—I think it would be very useful to have the Governors consulted, and a great deal of weight attached to their opinion.
2025. You have heard the suggestion made, that the charges of lunatics should be assimilated to that of other paupers?—Yes, I have heard the suggestion, but I think there might be very great difficulty in the way of carrying it out.
- Change of ability of Lunatic Asylums.
 2026. Do you think there is, in principle, any reason for the existing distinction?—I cannot answer that question now, for I have not given it consideration. It is a serious question, and one upon which, without consideration, I would not like to give an opinion.
2027. Do you think there is reason to believe that the complaints are well founded, that persons are improperly admitted into this house, and improperly charged to the county Kilkenny who do not belong to the county?—I am sure my friend, Mr. Lanyon, has correctly stated what he knows upon the subject; but I cannot say, from my own personal knowledge, that such is the case.
- Appointment of superior officers of Asylums.
 2028. What is your opinion as to the propriety of giving the appointment of the superior officers of the establishment to the Board of Governors—such officers as the manager and the visiting physician?—The executive ought to have a very powerful voice in the matter, but, perhaps, not absolute authority.
- The Inspectors as members of the Board.
 2029. Are you in favour of the Inspectors of Asylums being members of the Boards of Governors?—I am. I should like, before I leave, to remark, that I think if this house could be made more of a curative hospital it would be very advantageous, and that, perhaps, idiots, harmless lunatics, or helpless cases might, with great safety to them, be attended by the able medical staff we have in the poorhouse. I think an arrangement of that kind would be very advantageous to all classes. I think they would be well attended to and cared there, while greater scope would be given for the curing of recent cases here.
- Transfer of idiots, &c., to workhouse.
 2030. You are an alderman of the Corporation, and a magistrate of the city of Kilkenny?—Yes.
- Henry Potter, Esq., &c., &c., sworn and examined.
 2031. Do you concur in the opinions which have been expressed as to the propriety of a more effective representation of the ratepayers upon the Board of Governors?—Yes; I do not consider there is at all a sufficient representation of the city upon the Board, considering the amount of taxes we have to pay.
2032. What alteration would you suggest?—I think the Corporation, and also the Grand Jury, ought to have the power of electing a certain number of Governors. On looking at the list of Governors I do not think there are more than three or four belonging to the city who are ever likely to attend.
- Persons charged on the city who do not belong to it; the poor law principle of charging.
 2033. Do you concur in the opinion that there is any undue pressure on the city in consequence of persons being charged upon it for their maintenance who do not belong to the city?—From what I have heard here, I believe there are several cases charged to Kilkenny who are not entitled to be so charged. I think the charge for the maintenance of the house and the lunatics should be made upon the principle of the poor-rate without any reference at all to the Poor Law Boards of Guardians. I think that the person paying the rate should have the power of deducting from the landlord the same proportion be is authorized to deduct of the poor-rate. I think the Governors ought to have the power of electing all the officers, and I think no body can be better qualified to do so than the Governors.

7034. Have you found no evil results to occur from such a power existing with the Guardians?—No; on the contrary, the best results. I think, also, with regard to the expenditure of money here, that the Board of Governors should give the fullest information, and very detailed accounts and statements of expenditure to the Grand Jury.

7035. What accounts are now furnished?—I am not aware. I know that the accounts which are furnished are not, in my opinion, sufficiently detailed.

Rev. Jesse Graves sworn and examined.

7036. You are the chaplain of the Established Church in this asylum?—Yes.

7037. Have you held that office for any length of time?—I was appointed when the institution was first opened.

7038. Are you satisfied with the arrangements made for the celebration of divine worship in the establishment?—Perfectly so.

7039. What proportion of the number of inmates of the Established Church attend divine worship?—Seven attend. There are four or five refractory patients who do not attend. Seven is the average number.

7040. Do you find them orderly on those occasions?—In general.

7041. Do you think that those who do attend are capable of benefiting by their attendance?—I think it only benefits them as a curative means, in general, by inducing them to exercise self-control for the time that they are attending on divine worship.

7042. Have you free access to the inmates who belong to the Established Church?—Yes.

7043. Do you consider that your ministrations are beneficial to them?—In the manner that I have mentioned I think they are; and I have known one instance, where an inmate patient, a female, became, so far as I could discover, perfectly sane about a week before her death. A few days before, she was insane to such a degree that she considered this to be the Protestant inquisition, and Dr. Lator to be the head inquisitor.

7044. Are prayer-books, Bibles, and other religious books, provided for the use of the members of your persuasion?—Yes.

7045. Do you consider that those inmates who attend divine service would regard it as a serious deprivation to be prevented from doing so?—The great majority of them would. Some are idiots, who do not know where they are going; excepting that even with the idiots I have found, that if they were refractory, speaking to them at the time that they were worshipping God made them quiet; they seemed to exercise a species of self-control.

7046. Is it your practice to preach to them?—I sometimes lecture, and sometimes do not. Although I do lecture, in general, to them, I do not think it is of much use.

7047. I presume considerable discretion would be required on the part of a clergyman addressing an audience of that kind?—Yes; I may say the principle I adopt in speaking to them as if they were sane. I cannot in any other way address them.

7048. Are the inmates who are members of the Established Church capable of reading?—Yes.

7049. What is your opinion as to the advantage of instruction being given in the asylum by means of a school?—I do not feel myself competent to answer that question.

The Rev. Edward Larkin sworn and examined.

7050. How long have you held the office of Roman Catholic chaplain to this asylum?—Three years in March next.

7051. Are you able to state what proportion of the inmates of your persuasion attend divine worship?—About fifty or sixty, altogether, out, I think, of 110.

7052. Do you think the whole of the number who attend are capable of benefiting by the instruction you give?—I think not.

7053. What proportion do you think do?—I divide them into classes. Some of them are utterly mad, and I think those incapable of profiting by any office I can extend to them. Some of them mad in some one respect, and perfectly sane in others. Some of these are very well instructed in their religion, and capable of profiting by the offices I render them in the way of the celebration of the Holy Sacrifice, and the administration of the sacraments, and also the instruction I give them. Some of them are convalescent, recovered from fits of madness, and those are perfectly competent to profit by my ministrations. There are two cases I have met—one of them a female, and the other a male. The female was a long time in the Carlow Asylum, and showed no signs of improvement whatsoever while there. She was here for four or five years, and spoke but very little to any person. About a day or two before her death I was called to attend her, and she was very much disinclined to speak to me at first. She was weak, and her mind was very weak; however, I read to her the prayers of the church, and I found, before I left her, that she was in a way to profit by my ministrations; at least I was satisfied she was so. I thought there was a great improvement in her mind; and, I believe, it is known to every physician, that with persons labouring under affections of the mind, it often happens they recover the perfect use of their reason before death. The other case was that of a man, who was very bad for some time here, and shortly before death he recovered the perfect use of his senses, and was able to profit by my ministrations. Other clergymen sometimes come here to attend the sick, and, probably, if I could come oftener, I would be able to mention similar cases.

7054. Are the patients orderly and quiet during the celebration of divine service?—Always; except once or twice, persons subject to epilepsy were seized with fits.

7055. Are you in the habit of preaching to them?—I do not think it prudent to preach to them. Sometimes, on a few occasions, I give them a few words of instruction. I think any improvement that can be effected in that way would be accomplished by forming them into classes, and getting persons to teach them their prayers and catechism. Some of them are puffed up by a feeling of pride, and might take views, sometimes, different from the preaching, if they were instructed publicly. I think they could be managed better in classes. Some of them are quite capable of profiting by instruction.

7056. Are you in the habit of attending the inmates of your persuasion on various occasions during the week?—I do not attend, unless called for, except on Sundays. Sometimes I might walk through the asylum, but very seldom, to see how things were going on. Whenever I was wanted, Dr. Lalor, or the matron, sent for me.

7057. With the exception of coming on Sundays to celebrate divine service, and attending when called upon, no further attendance is given?—No further attendance.

7058. Are you satisfied with the arrangements made for divine service?—Well, I never made any complaint of them, but I would much prefer having a separate place for myself, and another for Mr. Graves. Some of the Catholic patients object to the place now used because of another service being performed there.

7059. How do the patients know the service of another church is performed there?—Some of them see the clergyman going there. Some of the Catholic patients, to my knowledge, are very much displeased on that account, and so much so, that they told me they would never attend. Of course that is a feeling that was never shared in by myself, although I would much prefer having a separate place of worship.

7060. Is not the arrangement in the workhouse and in the gaols similar to the arrangement existing here?—I never inquired; it may be for aught I know on the subject.

MARYBOROUGH, 20TH FEBRUARY, 1867.

Present:—Sir T. N. BRIDGTON, Chairman; Dr. ANDREWS, Dr. CORRIGAN, and Mr. BARRY, Secretary.

MARYBOROUGH DISTRICT ASYLUM.

Thomas Crosse Barton, Esq., M.D., affirms and is examined.

Thomas Crosse Barton, Esq., M.D.

1061. What appointment do you hold in the Maryborough District Lunatic Asylum?—
Manager.

1062. Are you a member of the medical profession?—I am.

1063. How long have you held your appointment?—Since the 1st October, 1856.

1064. There is also a visiting physician attached to the institution?—Yes.

1065. How far do you take part in the medical treatment of the patients?—Only in those cases which I consider necessary—on an emergency.

1066. With that exception, does the whole medical treatment of the patients, both as regards insanity and bodily infirmity, rest with the visiting physician?—Altogether.

1067. Do you attend the meetings of the Board of Governors?—I do.

1068. By whom are the minutes of the proceedings taken?—By myself.

1069. Is the attendance of Governors usually sufficient to form a quorum?—It is usually sufficient.

1070. Has any occasion occurred on which there has been no Board in consequence of the insufficient attendance of Governors?—I think I might say not for the last two years.

1071. How frequently are the meetings held?—Monthly.

1072. In case there should be no attendance at the ordinary monthly meeting, is there no meeting of the Board held till the ensuing month?—It is customary, when there has been no meeting, to summon the Board for that day month, or the Wednesday upon which the meeting day would fall; that rule is not without an exception.

1073. Is the attendance chiefly on the part of Governors from the vicinity of Maryborough, or from the other parts of the district?—We have an attendance of Governors from very remote parts of the district.

1074. What counties are comprised in the district?—The King's County and the Queen's County, at present.

1075. Did the district formerly comprise a larger area?—It comprised the counties of Westmeath and Longford.

1076. When were they detached?—About September, 1856, when the Mullingar Asylum was opened.

1077. Do the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums attend the Board?—They do.

1078. Do they take part in the proceedings of the Board like other members?—They took part in the proceedings of the Board the same as other members till within the last few meetings.

1079. What difference has there been in the mode of proceeding at the last few meetings?—They have not voted as Governors; they used to vote, but do not now.

1080. What other medical officers are attached to the institution besides the visiting physician?—The apothecary.

1081. Are the medicines compounded in the asylum?—On the premises.

1082. Is the Daily Statement Book regularly kept as required?—It is.

1083. What is the present number of inmates in the establishment?—One hundred and fifty-four.

1084. Of that number what proportion are considered to be incurable?—The supposed curables, on the 1st February, were seventy-seven; exactly one half.

1085. Is there a clerk and storekeeper attached to the establishment?—There is.

1086. Does he live on the premises?—No.

1087. Has permission to reside off the premises been given him by the Board?—It has.

1088. By minute, or how?—Not by minute; I am aware it has been assented to.

1089. By whom are the servants of the establishment appointed?—They are appointed by me, subject to the approval of the Board.

1090. What are the qualifications required in the way of general intelligence and education?—I may say they should read and write, and they are persons of character.

1091. Have any been appointed during your experience who cannot read and write?—Yes.

1092. Do you consider the number sufficient for the proper attendance of the patients?—I do.

1093. By whom are they dismissed?—By me, or by the Board. I generally bring the case under the notice of the Board, and the Board sanctions my act or the reverse.

1094. Have the Board had occasion to superannuate any of their officers under the recent Act?—It was decided on the last Board day, but not finally, to superannuate the matron. The amount of superannuation allowance has not been settled.

1095. What quantity of land is attached to the asylum?—In or about fourteen Irish acres within the walls.

1096. How many of the inmates were employed on the land according to the last statement in the Daily Statement Book?—Twenty-four.

1097. Is that about the usual number so employed?—I think it is under the mark.

- HARRISON. 7098. What proportion of the 164 inmates are males?—We have eighty-eight males, and fifty-six females.
- Humphreys District Asylum. 7099. Is the asylum capable of accommodating a larger number than are at present in it?—I do not think it is.
- Thomas Crooke Barrow, Esq., M.D. 7100. Have the Board been obliged to refuse applicants from want of accommodation?—Not since the transmission of patients to Mullingar.
7101. Have any applications been made from the Boards of Guardians recently for accommodation?—There have.
7102. Have the Board been able to comply with them?—The Board found it necessary to refuse two from Mountmellick, because there was an informality in the forms.
7103. I believe the Abbeylick Union is in the Queen's County?—Yes.
7104. From a return the Commissioners have received, it appears there are eighteen lunatics in the Abbeylick Workhouse?—Yes.
7105. Has any application been made for the admission of those lunatics into the asylum?—One within the last few days; no other that I am aware of.
- Question of enlarging the building. 7106. Have the Governors ever had occasion to consider the propriety, or otherwise, of enlarging the building?—It never came officially before them to the best of my knowledge.
7107. In what state is the ventilation of the building?—I should say defective.
- Means of ventilation insufficient. 7108. Have any artificial arrangements been made for ventilating the house?—There have.
7109. Of what nature?—Apertures in the cells at the time of building—openings in the doors.
- Arrangements for heating. 7110. Are there any ventilating shafts, or any means of extracting the foul air?—No.
7111. What are the arrangements for warming the house?—The fire-places.
7112. In the corridors?—All through the house.
7113. Are those fire-places in the corridors used throughout the winter?—They are.
7114. Are there any fire-places in any of the associated dormitories?—There are.
7115. Are they ever used?—Constantly.
7116. Are there any complaints of the house not being sufficiently warm?—It has been the general feeling of the physician and myself that the house has not been sufficiently warm in very cold weather.
7117. Have any improved means of warming the corridors or the house come under the consideration of the Governors?—I omitted to state that there are in the corridors metal vessels attached to come of the fire-places which heat the sick rooms.
- Lavatories, supply of hot and cold water. 7118. Is the establishment lit with gas?—No.
7119. Are these lavatories in the wards?—There are not.
7120. Where are the patients washed?—In some of the divisions they are washed in the day rooms; in others they are washed in lavatories.
7121. Where are those lavatories to which you now refer?—One in number three, and one in number one room, male division.
- Abolition of the patients. 7122. Are they in a ward, or separate from it?—They are in a cell which was formerly a sleeping apartment, or one of the same size as the sleeping apartments.
7123. Is there a supply of hot and cold water for those divisions?—There is a supply of cold water in one, and a supply of hot and cold water in another.
- Baths. 7124. Are the patients regularly bathed at stated periods?—They are not.
7125. How many baths are there in the house?—Two fixed baths and three tin movable baths.
7126. Is there a sufficient supply of hot and cold water for those fixed baths?—The supply of water is at times not sufficient; it generally is sufficient; there are periods when it is deficient.
7127. Are the patients in the several wards washed each day?—Their faces and hands are washed every day—at least that is the rule.
7128. Is the rule practically carried out?—I will not say it is always practically done; it cannot always be carried out.
7129. What insuperable difficulty is there in the way of having those things carried out?—It is an unintentional omission, whenever it occurs.
- No water-closets. 7130. Are there any water-closets in the wards?—None.
7131. Are there none throughout the building?—There is one belonging to my private apartments.
- The sewerage. 7132. Are there night-chairs in use?—Only in parts of the establishment.
7133. Are there privies in the airing courts?—There are.
7134. How is the sewerage of the establishment?—Well, I cannot say it is good; it is constantly going out of order.
7135. Is there any efficient means of flushing the sewers?—None whatever.
7136. How is the soil removed from the privies?—By buckets.
7137. Are the patients employed at that work?—They are.
7138. Is it carried directly out from the yard through any part of the house?—It is carried through a part of the house, but merely a cross passage.
7139. How frequently is that operation performed?—About every three weeks.
7140. Has it been under the consideration of the Governors to make a new arrangement about the privies?—With reference to the privies it has.
7141. What steps have been taken?—A resolution was passed by the Board to the effect that Dr. Jacob and myself should claim the assistance of a professional gentleman to examine the house and see if any arrangement could be made with the view of serving the institution in that respect.

7142. Are there any infirmaries attached to the institution?—No.

7143. Where are the patients treated who are subject to bodily infirmities?—In their separate apartments.

7144. What is your opinion of that arrangement?—It is a decidedly bad arrangement.

7145. Was any portion of the building at any time used as an infirmary?—I believe not. I believe there was a portion of the building that was intended as an infirmary, but I am not aware it was ever used for that purpose.

7146. When patients are suffering from illness, which requires they should be kept in a warm temperature, what means have you of giving them that accommodation in the ordinary cells?—There are metal plates or boxes attached to the backs of the fire-places, each of which warms two cells.

7147. That accommodation so afforded is naturally limited?—Yes, it is limited.

7148. How are the patients who may be so treated in their separate cells attended to?—As the case may be, by the keeper or the nurse of their respective divisions.

7149. Must they not be necessarily left more without attendance than if they were in an infirmary where a nurse would constantly be present?—Unavoidably they must be without attendance more than if they were in a place where a person would have nothing else to attend to.

7150. Are iron bedsteads generally used?—Altogether.

7151. How do you find them to answer?—I think they are bad; they are dear and cumbersome.

7152. What bedsteads would you prefer?—Light wooden bedsteads in cases where they could be made available.

7153. Have you known the patients on any occasion show a tendency to break the iron bedsteads?—Yes.

7154. Has any danger resulted from that?—Very great danger.

7155. Have any accidents occurred?—Fortunately no accidents attended with loss of life, have occurred, but we were very nearly suffering from a man, who broke forcibly through two doors, armed with an iron bar.

7156. Have you thought it necessary to take any steps to prevent a recurrence of the accident?—Increased vigilance.

7157. Does this tendency to break the bedsteads arise from the frail nature of the studs?—The bedstead which this man broke up was one apparently as strong as any of the rest. Of course there must have been some flaw in it which it was not easy to detect.

7158. What bedding is generally used?—Ticking filled with straw; a pair of blankets; a counterpane, and a pair of sheets; a pillow, pillow cover, bolster, and bolster case.

7159. Are cocoa fibres used?—We use them in one division.

7160. How do you find them to answer?—Very badly; they retain a bad smell, and become packed.

7161. What furniture is there in the day rooms?—A table, forms, one press, and chairs.

7162. Are there any chairs with backs for delicate patients?—There is one generally in each day room, not always. We find it difficult to keep them from being broken.

7163. Are there any chairs in the corridors?—Not in the corridors.

7164. Where do the patients dine?—In the day rooms.

7165. Are they supplied with plates and porringers?—They are supplied with porringers, spoons, and some of them with plates.

7166. Is the use of plates general?—I cannot say it is general.

7167. When the Commissioners visited the asylum it appeared that no salt was furnished to the male patients—how do you account for that?—Through the neglect of the attendants, for they were supplied with salt.

7168. They said they had not it?—The patients generally do not like their meat, or soup, or their food, by any means as much flavoured with salt as it is customary to take it. I have often proposed salt with soup and they complained against it, and even with potatoes they have not made a general practice of using it. They are supplied with saltcellars.

7169. How are the patients employed within doors?—Cleaning the houses, tailoring, and shoemaking.

7170. Is all the clothing required for the establishment made up in the house?—Every thing, with the exception of Scotch caps for the men.

7171. Is the whole of the female clothing made up in the house?—The whole of the female clothing, with the exception of sheets and handkerchiefs.

7172. Are the shoes all made in the house?—They are all made in the house.

7173. What amusements are provided for the patients?—They have walking exercise. The men amuse themselves with ball playing in the yard.

7174. Is there a regular ball alley?—There is not.

7175. How do they play ball?—Against the gable end of the house; it is not a very good ball alley.

7176. Are there any books provided for the patients?—None, except prayer books.

7177. Are there any amusing games?—They have permission to engage in any games that can be formed without any danger to themselves; but in the crowded state of our airing yards it is not easy to amuse one part without the rest getting mixed up in it.

7178. Are drafts and backgammon, or any games of that kind, introduced?—No.

7179. Is there any school for the instruction of the more ignorant patients?—There is not.

- MARRAGE. 7180. What proportion of the inmates is there unable to read and write?—A very large proportion.
- Maryborough District Asylum. 7181. Has it ever been under the consideration of the Governors to establish a school for their instruction?—I am not aware that it has.
- Thomas Greave Barrow, Esq., M.D. 7182. Are there chaplains attached to the institution?—There is the Protestant chaplain and the Roman Catholic chaplain.
- School Instruction. The Chaplains. 7183. Are there any inmates of other persuasions besides those of the Established Church and the Roman Catholic Church?—I think not; I am almost sure there are not.
- Celebration of Divine Service. 7184. Where is divine service performed?—For the females, in the day room of the convalescent female division, and for the males, in the day room of number two division of males.
7185. There is therefore no separate place of worship specially devoted for that purpose?—There is no separate place of worship.
7186. Are the chaplains in the habit of visiting the members of their respective persuasions in the house during the week?—They are.
- Benefit of having Chaplains connected with the Asylum. 7187. What is your opinion as to the propriety of chaplains being attached to the institution?—It is a very great benefit.
7188. If you considered that the communication of a chaplain with a member of his flock, an inmate of this establishment, was not suitable for the then state of mind of the inmate, what course would you pursue?—Such a case has never happened; I certainly would defer to the opinion of the chaplain.
- Privy Council regulation respecting Chaplains; its observance. 7189. Are you aware the Privy Council regulations state that the chaplains should be afforded every facility of admission, "in order to enable them to officiate according to their respective creeds, and to afford religious instruction and consolation to all patients, except such as shall be declared by the physician to be unfit and incapable of understanding the nature of the service, and of appreciating the effects of religion?"—Yes.
7190. If the physician considered that communication by the chaplain with a certain individual was not advisable, would you feel it your duty to communicate that fact to the chaplain?—I would feel it my duty to communicate to the chaplain that I considered the patient in such a state of mind. I am wrong in stating the case has not occurred; because some time ago the Roman Catholic clergyman came here to attend a man, and the man was so violent, that Dr. Jacob and I, in consultation, thought it advisable he should not go near the patient.
- Proportion of inmates who attend divine worship. 7191. Would you require the direction of the visiting physician to be carried out?—The visiting physician, I think, generally speaking, leaves that to the chaplain; if the visiting physician made the exception I would see it carried out.
7192. State what proportion of the inmates usually attend divine worship?—A very large proportion; from seventy to seventy-five, attend the Catholic chaplain; and about twenty or twenty-five, as the case may be, attend the Protestant clergyman. In fact, nearly all the Protestant patients attend, and the great majority of the Roman Catholic patients; they being more numerous, there are more bad cases that cannot attend.
- Restraint; seclusion. 7193. Is restraint at all practised in the asylum?—There is not the smallest approximation to mechanical restraint.
7194. Is seclusion practised?—Yes, we confine patients to their sleeping apartments.
- Mute and epileptic inmates. 7195. Have you any padded rooms?—We have no room thoroughly padded; we have padded doors in cells.
7196. Are idiots and epileptics admitted into the asylum?—They are.
- Removal of patients from the Asylum. 7197. Will you furnish us with a copy of the form of admission?—I will. [Same is produced.]
7198. Have you experienced any difficulty in getting patients removed under the engagements contained in the admission paper?—Sometimes there has been difficulty, when the friends, from being poor, have been unable to remove them to a distance.
- Admission of patients. 7199. In those cases have the patients been retained in the asylum?—No, we send them home in charge of keepers.
7200. Are the admissions all made by the Board of Governors?—Generally they are made by the Board of Governors; but the physician has permission, by a special Act of Parliament, to admit a case which he considers urgent, and he refers it to the next meeting of the Governors for their sanction.
- No paying patients admitted. 7201. Such cases are, however, the exception?—They are the exception.
7202. Are there any paying patients?—None, except pensioners.
- Communications from the Manager to the Board. 7203. Is it contrary to the practice of the Board to admit paying patients, or is it merely accidental that there are none in the house?—It is contrary to the practice of the Board.
7204. When you desire to make any communication to the Board of Governors, with reference to matters connected with the asylum, what course do you pursue?—I state it to them.
7205. Orally or in writing?—If it be a matter of importance that requires a note to be taken of it, I make a memorandum of it in a book, which I lay before the Governors.
- Visits of the Inspectors. 7206. How frequently do the Inspectors visit the asylum?—They have been in the habit of visiting it frequently; there is no specified time for doing so.
7207. How often in the year?—I should think there is hardly a month that we have not an Inspector here.
7208. Are their visits paid without notice?—Yes; I frequently receive communications from their clerks stating that they will attend on such a Board day: at least, I have on two or three occasions.

7209. They do visit during the year without notice?—Decidedly.
 7210. Without notice on days that are not Board days?—Decidedly.
 7211. Are there any special bye-laws or regulations for the government of the asylum, made by the Governors themselves, beyond those approved by the Privy Council?—A great number.

7212. Are they collected in one volume?—There is an abstract made of them in a book which I shall produce. [Same is produced.] That is an abstract of the bye-laws which refer generally to the institution. There are many special rules for special occasions which are not in that.

7213. One of the resolutions here is, that no spirits shall be issued to the inmates of the asylum except for medical purposes: was it the practice for any one, except the medical person, to order the issue of spirits in the asylum?—Well, there have been instances in which I have given a patient a glass of whiskey if he were wet or very much fatigued.

7214. Without communicating with the visiting physician?—Yes. If a man whom I was in the habit of taking out with me was wet or fatigued, I would give him a glass of whiskey, and I was in the habit of giving patients a small quantity of whiskey when they were employed in cleaning out the pond, or when they were washing the bodies of deceased patients, which was practised in the institution up to a late period.

7215. Are criminal lunatics removed without delay to the asylum?—We have not any criminal lunatics at present, nor have we had one since the opening of the Mullingar Asylum.

7216. Do you find any difficulty in getting dangerous lunatics removed who come from the gaols?—We have not had any difficulty that I recollect at present in removing any dangerous lunatic that came from the gaol, when it was deemed fit or expedient that he should be removed.

7217. Has any visiting committee been appointed by the Board of Governors to inspect the house?—No.

7218. Do the Governors themselves inspect the house?—They do.

7219. Between Board days or at the time of meeting?—They have not inspected the house lately between Board days; that is to say, more than one Governor.

John Jacob, Esq., M.A., sworn and examined.

7220. I believe you are visiting physician to the Maryborough Asylum?—Yes.

7221. Do you hold any other official appointments connected with the public institutions of the county?—Yes; I am surgeon to the county infirmary; and, in connexion with that office, I am medical attendant to the county gaol, and I am also medical attendant of the Maryborough dispensary district.

7222. How long have you held the office of visiting physician to the Maryborough Asylum?—Since it was opened.

7223. Have you the sole direction of the medical treatment of the inmates of the asylum?—I have, except when Dr. Burton finds it necessary to prescribe in my absence.

7224. Do you consider the responsibility of the treatment of the patients rests upon yourself?—I do, that is qualified, to a certain extent, by the facilities at my disposal.

7225. So far as the means afforded you extend, you consider that you alone have sole responsibility of the medical treatment of the patients?—I consider the responsibility rests upon me. I hold myself responsible for it.

7226. Does the observation you have made as to the facilities afforded you, or otherwise, refer to any deficiencies in the asylum?—If I considered that my control was more direct and complete, I would, in many particulars, adopt another course from what has been my practice; but my control has not been at any period direct. My wishes have, to a certain extent, been carried out through the intervention of other parties; such, for instance, as the orders of the Board, and the co-operation of those resident within the walls.

7227. In what respect would you desire your control to be more complete as regards the treatment?—With respect to ventilation my control has not been complete—with respect to warming my control has not been complete—with respect to the regulation of the patients' mode of getting their food my control has not been complete—with respect to their recreations and amusements I have not considered my control by any means sufficiently complete to empower or enable me to carry into effect what, according to my views, I would deem desirable.

7228. Do you consider the ventilation of the establishment to be imperfect?—I think the existing structural arrangements are, in a great measure, sufficient, if they could be taken full advantage of. I am of course aware that, by different structural arrangements, the ventilation might be a great deal better.

7229. Have you ever suggested to the Board of Governors the carrying out of those improvements in ventilation, which, if your control was complete, you would be prepared to make?—As a general rule, I would say that, during the whole course of my service, the Board of Governors have afforded every reasonable facility that I could, under the circumstances, expect, towards carrying my views into effect. At the same time, I am under the impression that the Board of Governors themselves felt restricted in some degree by the habits and circumstances of the country, and particularly as regards the expenditure of money.

7230. Do you consider that the Board have been influenced in not carrying out all that you could desire with regard to ventilation, by reference to the impoverished state of the rate-payers?—Not with respect to ventilation. I do not in any degree consider that the Board interpose any obstacle with respect to ventilation. I think that the deficiencies, with respect to ventilation, were in no manner connected with the Board. I have not proposed to the Board that any additional means for ventilation should be adopted, but I may explain myself more precisely by stating that I have had different views and opinions from Dr. Burton on the subject of ventilation. I am favourable to having the windows open for the purpose of ventilation; and I have reason to believe that, in damp weather, Dr. Burton has been of an opposite opinion. His orders have been generally that the windows should be kept shut at such times, when I thought it was desirable they should be kept open; and on that matter I never raised any difficulty, nor did I bring the subject before the Board; but as I am questioned with respect to ventilation, I think it right to explain myself.

7231. With regard to the warming of the asylum, have you made any proposition for more effectually carrying out that object?—When I considered that the medical responsibility was more directly upon me than it is at present, I repeatedly brought the subject under the notice of the Board, in annual reports and otherwise, and it has been repeatedly discussed. But to come more directly to that point, I may state that, as regards the warming of the institution, it has not, in my opinion, been sufficiently practised, nor has it been practised, in my opinion, to the extent that the means at our disposal might permit, because the annual expenditure for fuel has been very considerable, but I have observed that there has been an undue degree of economy relative to the warming of the apartments occupied by patients, which I did not approve of, and an economy that I am not prepared to say was carried out in other departments. That is exactly what I think.

7232. Is it not of material importance that proper warmth should be maintained in an establishment of this kind?—It is of the utmost consequence; and I do think that the deficient warming of the institution has been a very serious disadvantage.

7233. You have referred to the manner in which the food is served to the patients—what alteration would you consider it advisable to make if you had that complete control which you state you have not?—During the whole course of my experience in this institution, I consider that the food has been served with a very unjustifiable degree of carelessness—food of every description. The steatobut for breakfast is not served with that degree of neatness that would be cheerful and comforting to the patients, and which could be accomplished without any increase of expense; so also at dinner, there has been a habit, not recently merely, but it has long been the habit of throwing out a quantity of potatoes on the table, and leaving the patients to supply themselves from the common heap. It is quite true that practice has been in accordance, in a great measure, with the habits of the peasantry in their own houses, but it is for many obvious reasons highly inapplicable and unsuitable in such an establishment as this. Even as relates to the simple just division of the supply of food, I think it is inapplicable.

7234. I understand from your answer that you do not consider the habits of the peasantry in their cabins should at all regulate the course of proceeding for an institution of this kind?—So I think. Public institutions of this kind should be instrumental in the improvement of their habits on their return home.

7235. Are you satisfied with the dietary given to them?—I should say so, on the whole. Considering the habits of the peasantry, I think it would be inexpedient and imprudent to establish any very unusual contrast in the food supplied. At the same time I am quite of opinion that the dietary should be decidedly better than they have been habituated to at home.

7236. You have alluded to the amusements and entertainments of the patients, and stated they had not been all you would wish?—I think that, under a well regulated system of attendance, and strict supervision and obedience on the part of the attendants, that a great deal more might be done, as is done, and as is provided, elsewhere, for patients. Some of them amuse themselves with music. I do believe that that existed formerly to a greater extent than at present. I have not found that the attendants have been ready to adopt my suggestions and directions on these particular points; and when I make this statement, I think it right to observe that I am fully aware of the responsibility I fix upon myself as to whether I did or did not call the attention of the Board of Governors to many points. I have done so; and I repeat that, as a general rule, the Board of Governors have been extremely attentive to the suggestions I have made, and desired to co-operate with me; at the same time that, on the Board, and within this room, I have encountered most serious and embarrassing difficulties.

7237. In one of your previous answers you referred to a period when you considered your responsibility more complete as regarded this establishment than it is at present—to what do you refer as having altered your responsibility?—To the circumstance of a member of the medical profession being placed in charge of the institution as chief resident officer, and the circumstance of oral statements having been made to me that my position was, to a certain extent, altered by that fact. Also, in consequence of the officer, Dr. Burton, to whom I allude, having informed me that the Inspectors had stated to him that he was to undertake a considerable portion of medical duties, and especially, and particularly, to the circumstance of a member of the Board of Governors, more recently appointed, having taken a very strong position in respect to this matter—having spoken forcibly in this room to me—to the effect, that a resident medical gentleman having come into the institution, I was not to interfere in matters of this kind; and I have a distinct recollection that, on one occasion, when my monthly report was read, which it was my practice previous to the appointment of that gentleman as resident officer to send in, that the member of the Board to whom I have referred, expressed very strong dissatisfaction at my interfering, or making any written report on the state of the asylum, according to the legal heading of the printed book, furnished under special provisions of the Act of Parliament. I recollect, on that particular occasion, stating that I would continue to write these reports till I should receive written instructions to the contrary. And on that occasion, I remember that the member of the Board to whom I allude, stated, if I persisted in doing so, he would bring my conduct under the notice of the highest authority in the country. I have a distinct recollection of his words. I have to observe that it was my practice, from the time of my appointment to the period to which I allude, to report in writing to the Board on the general condition of the asylum, and facts and circumstances that I deemed should be brought under the notice of the Board, and more recently I have given up that practice in consequence. My monthly report now consists in a report of the state of the health of the patients, and it generally concludes by my stating that I abstained from reporting on the condition of the asylum. And I may observe, in my justification, that this is in consequence, as several Governors here present can testify, of my having been several times placed in a very embarrassing position.

1232. You have referred to certain oral statements made to you—were they made by persons in official positions?—Yes. They were made, I think I am justified in saying, by both inspectors, certainly by one repeatedly, who advised me to modify my course of official conduct very considerably, in consequence of the change of arrangements. I being aware that no alteration had taken place in the laws that govern this institution, and that no specific provision was made for the guidance of two medical officers relatively in the institution, I endeavoured as far as possible to steer a middle course—to treat the resident medical officer with all the deference I deemed due to him as a member of my own profession; and at the same time to endeavour, as far as possible, not to abstain from the performance of those duties which I had previously exercised.

1233. Was any official communication made to you with reference to your duties on the occasion of a member of the medical profession being appointed civil manager?—None whatever; and I repeatedly stated that I considered it a great injustice to me not to give me written instructions. I repeatedly stated that, whatever order might be made by any competent authority, I would implicitly obey, if I should remain in connexion with the institution.

1240. Practically, in the mere medical treatment of the patients, considering that Dr. Burton only prescribes for cases of urgency in your absence, is there any clashing of duty between you?—Well, there is a divided medical authority. Dr. Burton is, in a great measure, recognised in the establishment as the doctor, and he may give directions—such, for instance, as regards ventilation, to which I attach a vast amount of importance. He may give directions with reference to that exactly at variance with mine. As relates to the mere administration of medicine, whatever orders Dr. Burton gives are obeyed; and whenever I am made acquainted with any order given by Dr. Burton, and any questions asked of me, my answer invariably is—"whatever order Dr. Burton has given, you obey it."

1241. I presume that is open to the qualification of your considering it a proper prescription?—I quite understand the question. I could not feel justified, when a competent board of examiners have pronounced Dr. Burton a fit and proper judge as to what is to be ordered in medical cases—I say I could not feel in any degree justified in preventing his orders being carried into effect. And again, it is quite as probable that Dr. Burton's opinions may differ from mine, and he does not interfere with my orders.

1242. Might not a patient requiring medical aid be exposed, under those circumstances, to a variety of treatment?—Clearly not. The previous answer was intended to explain that, if Dr. Burton prescribes for a patient in case of emergency in my absence, my general rule is, to leave that patient under his treatment till the conclusion of the case. Occasionally Dr. Burton states to me, "I would wish you would take charge of that case, quite as much as if I had not prescribed for it;" so that under those circumstances no clashing can occur.

1243. In no case does the responsibility as regards those cases seem to be transferred to Dr. Burton?—That is the fact.

1244. Previous to the appointment of Dr. Burton, the manager of the institution was not a professional man?—He was not a professional man.

1245. In cases of emergency, who then prescribed for the patients?—I am not aware of any emergency having arisen, because, as a general rule, I had qualified medical assistants residing with me, who would be quite available to prescribe for patients; and at that period of time the resident manager summoned me on all occasions when it was necessary.

1246. Being yourself in general practice in the country, might it not occur that your services would not be immediately available on such an occasion?—Clearly and manifestly so. As I mentioned to you, as a general rule, I have had a qualified professional assistant, and that arrangement did exist more completely and perfectly, previous to the appointment of Dr. Burton. The apothecary of the institution attended on all occasions when I was not to be found.

1247. The apothecary does not reside upon the premises either?—The apothecary does not reside upon the premises.

1248. What is your opinion as to the propriety generally, without reference to the asylum at Maryborough, of the person in complete charge and control of such an institution as this, being a member of the medical profession?—I can only give a qualified answer to that question, and my answer is this—that if he were a business-like man, disposed to devote his time and energy to the duties of his office, and that he should consider the emoluments of the office sufficient for his remuneration, I do think it is pretty obvious that his presence would be beneficial, provided that at the same time, not merely as regards disease generally, but as regards the treatment of insanity also, there should be medical aid available—that medical aid being habituated to the daily active practice of the profession, and deriving the advantages and benefits of a general experience from continued active daily practice. That would be manifestly beneficial as regards disease, not merely as regards disease generally, but beneficial also as regards insanity in its different variations. The experience acquired in the treatment of disease generally would be beneficial for the asylum; and it would be a benefit also to society and the public, on the other hand, to have a person so experienced and exercised in the treatment of insanity giving his services to the public generally. But especially and particularly I would consider it all-important—such is my own individual opinion—as regards the well-being, and security, and safety of the inmates of the institution, and to its general proper management—that a person holding a certain position in the opinion of the public, and having a general character throughout the district—that that person's co-operation, and supervision, and vigilance should be available, not merely for strict medical purposes, but, in my perhaps add, for the purpose of inspection also.

7249. Having stated that it is your practice, where the manager, Dr. Burton, who is a medical man, takes up a case, not to interfere with him, on the ground that he also passed as a competent member of the medical profession, does not that practice rather clash with the opinion you have expressed upon the necessity of additional medical advice being given?—I would say not, because the practice is to a very small extent indeed. Dr. Burton leaves the general direction and management, as to prescribing for the patients, in my hands; and it is only in case of what he deems a temporary emergency that he usually prescribes; and I have taken the course that I have explained, because I have deemed it due to him as a professional man to abstain from interfering with him.

7250. I understood you to state that you allow Dr. Burton's treatment of a case to extend beyond the mere temporary emergency, he having once begun to treat it, you allowed him to continue to the close?—That has been my practice, with the exceptions, and those exceptions have been frequent, that I specified, when Dr. Burton mentions to me, "I merely prescribed for that case in your absence; I wish you to take it up and deal with it as if I had not prescribed for it."

7251. If you considered it due to Dr. Burton, as a medical man, to allow him to continue the treatment of a case he had once begun, might not the resident physician of the establishment, under the arrangement you have suggested, equally feel in all cases, that, because of his medical status, he should not be interfered with by a physician merely attending from time to time?—That would be a matter for the arrangement of those whose duty it is to provide for the regulation and government of this institution. It would be for the proper authorities to direct with whom that responsibility should rest; and it would be for those authorities to say whether it was more fit and proper, or otherwise, that a gentleman resident in the institution, with the experience of the sick amongst 180 persons, should be the person to treat the sick of that number. That is what should decide the matter, and not mere surmise. I think I may go so far as to say that I complain that this has been left as an unsettled question.

Question of defining the duties and responsibility of each.

*Reason for having a Visiting Physician
as well as a medical Manager.*

7252. I gather it is your opinion that, in any alteration of the law which would provide that the person in charge of this institution should be a medical man, there should be also a provision made for having an attending or visiting physician?—That is my opinion, and I wish to explain further that I think the resident house-surgeon of an ordinary hospital might, with very much more justice than a resident manager of an asylum, state that he considered he should have the prescribing for and the regulation of the treatment of, all the cases in the house, and that the visiting physician and surgeon should have nothing to do with them; for this reason, if we have an institution with 160 persons all sick, the resident medical officer, the house-surgeon, would be expected to have a great deal more professional experience than a resident medical officer in an institution comprising 200 or 250 persons suffering from insanity alone, a large proportion of those cases being incurable and not under direct medical treatment. His experience would be very small indeed; and if you have a medical officer who has resided in an institution ten, or fifteen, or twenty years, and during that time his experience has been confined to the sick amongst a limited number of persons in the asylum, the case will be much stronger, as to the necessity for a visiting physician.

*Effect of such an arrangement as regards
the patients.*

7253. Do you, or do you not, consider it would be more advantageous to the patients in a lunatic asylum, to be treated by a medical man who would be constantly watching their case and resident in the establishment, having no other duties to occupy him, than that they should be treated by a medical man who visited merely three times in the week?—It is my belief, and my acquaintance with lunatic asylums is not very limited, that that close watching of the treatment of cases does not exist by any means as a general practice. I will even go so far as to express the opinion that it does not exist to any considerable extent at all; and I may state further to you that I do not, so far as my own opinion goes, consider insanity one of those diseases that is very much benefited by close and continual observation of symptoms and the results of treatment. It is quite a different thing in cases of inflammation, in which close observation at short intervals of time is of importance; but even in the most acute and recent forms of insanity, I apprehend, it will not be found that changes of treatment are made at short intervals of time; therefore I do think that as, in the ordinary treatment of diseases, visiting patients at periods regulated by the circumstances of the case is advantageous, so, I think, in the treatment of insanity that arrangement would be even more advisable. For instance, take the case of any gentleman here present, if ill, he would be visited, say by me, at stated periods, and prescribed for, and the treatment carried out at intervals. The result of my answer is, that I do not think constant observation of very great importance in such cases.

7254. With whom would you leave the responsibility of deciding, if there was any difference of opinion as to the treatment to be pursued; whether with the visiting physician or the resident physician?—It is natural to suppose I should say with the visiting physician, because I think he should be the chief medical officer. I think the resident medical officer should hold a position more analogous to that of house-surgeon in an hospital, if it would be deemed expedient to have a resident medical officer, who would be chiefly hemedical for the immediate treatment of accidents or cases of emergency.

7255. You have stated that you do not consider constant attendance upon a case of insanity a desirable practice, and that it is therefore unnecessary?—I might, perhaps, go so far as to say so much. I do not think it very desirable for a person who directs the medical treatment of insanity to be much the same as a medical nurse-tender. I think he should visit at short intervals, in acute cases, especially when any special remedies were being administered; then it would be his duty, and it has been my practice, to observe closely and at short intervals of time.

7256. Although there might not be any necessity to see every case daily, would you not consider that the medical manager of a lunatic asylum would find an ample number of cases to occupy his attention each day and throughout the day?—Well, I do not believe such to be the fact, and I am convinced it is not a general practice. I am not alluding to any particular institution, but I am satisfied such is not the practice in this country, and I believe it is not the practice in the sister country.

7257. Whom would you intrust with that absolute control which you consider essential in the case we have been discussing, where there should be a resident medical manager and also a visiting physician?—I think it should rest with the visiting physician, he being the chief medical officer. When he considered it necessary to give decisive orders, I think, as a rule of service, those orders should be obeyed, and I think the resident medical officer ought not to be in a position to raise difficulties with respect to such orders of the visiting physician.

7258. What classification of the inmates is made in this asylum?—They are classified, for record, according to the different forms of the disease—mania, monomania, melancholia, dementia, epilepsy, and idiosyncrasy. That is the classification for record. The classification in the wards is tranquil and moderately tranquil, a little less tranquil than the moderately tranquil, and the refractory. The refractory division is subdivided at the female side by the occupation of an upper day-room by an average of three families of very disorderly habits.

7259. Has the general bodily health of the inmates of the asylum been good?—I would say that I think it has been under the average. I think there has been a tendency to disease, the result of debility of constitution, such, for instance, as scrofula and consumption. I think the imperfect heating of the establishment tends to that. Previous to the raising of the funnel of the steam engine, the imperfect withdrawal of the smoke was, I think, very injurious; and I had very paramount proof of it at the period of the death of the late manager, who suffered from extreme difficulty of breathing, and in the evening, especially, his distress was extreme. At that time the chimney was some fourteen or fifteen feet lower than at present, and a large proportion of the soot blew into the day-rooms and dormitories. There is more or less coldness in the rooms, which impairs the health of the patients; and on the whole I think a more generous dietary would be medically advantageous to them. With respect to any deficiency in that way, it is right and proper I should state that I feel fully authorized by the rules to order whatever I think necessary, but at the same time, there is a certain amount of control exercised over persons by public opinion, with respect to expenditure; and the outcry for extra articles of diet has been more than once a matter of inquiry by the Board of Governors here.

7260. If you considered the ordinary dietary of the house led to this increase of disease, would you not feel it to be your duty to recommend an improved dietary?—I would, and I did so; and the dietary has been increased from time to time, and it has been increased under considerable difficulties; and various improvements that were effected, I have a clear recollection, were carried under a considerable amount of opposition from one or more members of the Board of Governors. I recollect when buttermilk was issued here as an article of diet, that Hugh Morgan Tufts, then member for Westmeath, came from his own residence at Mullingar, and vigorously opposed the substitution of sweet milk for the buttermilk, and expressed very strong opinions that the patients on the whole were rather too well fed. I wish to impress upon you, as a practical matter of fact, that the extreme difficulty of the officers is, their having to contend against what may be the opinion of one or more members of the Board.

7261. Are you satisfied with the ordinary dietary as it at present stands?—I think I should say so. If I could feel that I was altogether unrestrained, I might order a larger supply of extras for patients who need them; but the fact is, I felt a difficulty with respect to having a large amount for extra diet appearing on the records of the institution. Of course you are aware that there is the greatest possible difference between the dietaries of the Irish institutions and those of the English asylums. I conclude that the subject was carefully considered by the proper authorities, because those dietaries have been all subjected to a certain amount of correction by central authorities. I may state to you, that the original dietary of this institution was established at the suggestion of the manager of the institution, who brought the dietary from the House of Industry in Dublin; and it is perhaps not out of place for me to state that, at the time of my appointment to the situation I held, I did regard, with such very strong disapprobation, a great number of the arrangements which existed, that I made inquiries, by permission of the Government, given through the Under Secretary, with respect to the practice of different institutions in England, Ireland, and Scotland, and I placed the result before the Governors here, in the form of a pamphlet, suggesting a great many rules for the guidance of this institution, which were adopted by the Governors. It is right I should state, that the two Inspectors then strongly opposed the adoption of those rules, and that it was with considerable difficulty the majority of the Board sanctioned them, in opposition to the active resistance of the two then Inspectors. At that period of time I proposed a code of rules which, perhaps it is not indecent for me to state, has been the foundation of the existing rules. Those rules were strongly opposed by the then Inspectors, but were adopted by the Board of this institution; and it is perhaps not out of place I should state that, in the observations I then addressed to the Governors, and published, the first proposal was made for the appointment of chaplains to asylums generally; and this is the first provincial asylum in which chaplains were appointed.

7262. At the period to which you refer, who were the Inspectors of Asylums?—Major Woodward, and Major Palmer, neither of them medical men.

7263. If you considered extra dietary to be necessary for the proper treatment of the patients, would you not feel it your duty to place the patients upon that extra dietary without reference to what might be the views of particular Governors?—I am afraid I have not sufficient moral courage to do that. I would not feel exactly justified in taking a course that might bear the character of extravagance. I may state that, at the present moment, there is a very large proportion of persons on extra diet on the female side. In one division on that side there are seven, in another there are eight or nine, in another six, and so on. I would say that, on the female side, there are probably about twenty-eight or so on extra diet.

7264. It is stated there is no infirmary attached to the institution; what is your opinion of the advantage, or otherwise, of an infirmary?—I think, as a general rule, it would be beneficial, and that it is the more necessary in proportion to the increased size of an establishment. Practically, the disadvantage has not been observed here to such an extent as at first sight might be supposed. All the sick are placed in sleeping rooms and convalescent divisions, under the care of persons more habituated to attendance upon the sick than those in the divisions in which they might take ill. I consider infirmaries advantageous for hospital treatment, but there are not more than perhaps six persons in the institution requiring such treatment.

7265. Supposing an epidemic to break out in the establishment, what arrangements would you make to meet it?—During the whole course of my service here, no such necessity has arisen. We had two epidemics of cholera in this district. We have also had influenza from time to time, which did not render isolation necessary. I do not remember a single case of scarlet fever or ordinary typhus fever; there has been no case of small-pox. In fact the difficulty from the want of an infirmary during so long a period has not been so great as might be expected.

7266. If any one of those diseases arose, how would you meet it?—Why, the most obvious course would be to set apart one division for those affected, which would probably be the convalescent division where the sick are at present.

7267. An infirmary would be of advantage in that event?—I think it would be desirable; but at the same time, in this institution, with the number in it, I do not think the necessity has been so very strong as might be supposed.

7268. Are you satisfied with the arrangements for the washing and bathing of the patients?—They are altogether defective and incomplete, and I think the attendants are not sufficiently attentive in that respect. It is right you should be aware that, under an order of the Board, Mr. Wilkinson, the architect, is about submitting a plan for lavatories and baths, and water-closets also.

7269. It has been stated that there are no paying patients, beyond a few pensioners, in the establishment; what is your opinion as to the propriety of admitting persons into this institution who, although not paupers, yet would be unable to defray the full expense of their maintenance in an asylum?—It is an extremely difficult question. Persons so circumstanced labour under great disadvantages at present, and are very imperfectly provided for. If it were contemplated to receive them into the District Lunatic Asylum, it is probable that certain alterations in the system ought to be made; but even if they should not be made, I think it probable that, practically, they would be made, and that persons so circumstanced would be put into better positions in the asylums than the other patients. But I do think it is a most serious existing defect, that provision is not made for the due care of persons of limited means when suffering from insanity. Nothing can be more objectionable than the prevailing practice in this county; when persons are seized with insanity, instead of trouble being taken to have them removed into an asylum, which should be accomplished within a period of two or three weeks at the farthest, they will be kept at home, and then measures will be taken to have them finally committed to prison.

7270. Do you mean that that ever occurs amongst persons who would be enabled to pay a portion of the maintenance of the patients?—Yes, in those cases it does occur, but it is a much larger proportion amongst the poorer classes.

7271. Suppose that persons of the class to whom you refer should be admitted into the District Asylum upon paying a portion of their maintenance, do you consider that any difference of treatment regarding them should be sanctioned?—As I have already said, it is a very difficult question. I think the establishment of a difference in the treatment would, in a great measure, interfere perhaps with the persons to whom the institution more properly belongs; I think they might be interfered with, and their legitimate accommodasion and advantages might be sacrificed for the benefit of the others. It is a matter that should be approached with a considerable degree of caution, and with great attention to the regulation of the details. I should state that in this institution—I have not actual evidence of it—but I have every reason to believe that there are several persons here who would be disposed to pay a small sum annually towards their maintenance. Some of those persons receive the ordinary treatment of the patients generally, and others are allowed some little articles of luxury, by their friends leaving money in the hands of the conductors of the institution, which I never approved of by any means. As a general rule, I would much prefer having the patients take the course of the institution generally, rather than that any of the officers should receive money, either for the purpose, or under the pretext, of supplying them with luxuries.

1272. From your knowledge of the country generally, having considerable practice, is it your opinion that there is a large class who, being above the rank of paupers, are yet unable to provide for their insane relatives in private asylums?—I have no reason to think there is a large class in this country; the class intermediate between the class of gentlemen farmers and small farmers is not so numerous, or the number of cases so great as might be expected.

1273. I believe that, in all cases of admission by application to the asylum, it is required that the form now before me shall be filled up?—As a general rule, I do not think that admission forms satisfactory. I originally framed it, and the late manager made some alterations, and these are printed without any reference to me as to any improvement that might be made. That form has deteriorated in successive editions instead of improving.

1274. Do you mean that matters previously included are not now contained therein?—No; but additions have been made, and alterations in the position of queries were made by the late manager. In the affidavits there is a passage to the effect that the applicant has not been here an idiot. If I had had an opportunity of proposing corrections in subsequent editions, I should have objected to that as being altogether at variance with the existing law, and the orders of the Privy Council.

1275. Do you find, generally speaking, that when the applicants answer those queries in a proper manner they afford information which is desirable to have?—No doubt at all about it, they do not. It is the duty of the certifying physicians to fill up queries; and it is a fact that I can generally form an opinion of the culture of a man, by the degree of industry bestowed upon the replies to the queries.

1276. In the cases of patients arriving here from the workhouses, are those queries generally filled up?—They are not; and, as a general rule, the applications from workhouses are usually more informal than applications from private or other sources. That is, perhaps, unavoidable, in consequence of relatives not being available to supply information. Thus, as relates to cases from gaols, there is no information whatever.

1277. Do you consider that a defect?—A very serious defect. The replies to those queries are of importance for regulating the opinion to be expressed by me to the Board, to guide them in coming to a decision as to whether the patient should be admitted or not.

1278. What is your opinion as to the propriety of any class of lunatics being detained in workhouses?—My opinion is against it. I think persons of unsound mind had better be collected in an institution devoted to that purpose exclusively, for it is obviously objectionable, in every sense of the word, to have them in workhouses. Under a very perfect special system, asylums for idiots alone, as apart from lunatics, might be desirable, and under a very perfect system, asylums for patients unlikely to recover might be perhaps desirable; but as to workhouses, they are manifestly and palpably objectionable for the reception of such persons.

1279. Do you think that any class of insane patients, who are harmless, might be left in workhouses with advantage?—There might, perhaps, be a few, but I think it is an extremely doubtful matter. My opinion of workhouses and their inmates generally is, that they are, morally speaking, extremely unsound and corrupt; and therefore persons suffering from any degree of infirmity of mind, who might be unable vigorously to protect their own interests, would be very likely to suffer in them.

1280. In the workhouses with which you are acquainted, what special arrangements are made for lunatics?—I have very little acquaintance with the practice in workhouses, not that I have not been interested in the subject. You must excuse me for again entering into some details. When the workhouse for this union was being erected, I was elected a member of the Board of Guardians; and in that capacity, in conjunction with others, it was my duty to pay attention with respect to the arrangements for the selection of a site. I did take an active part with others, supposing that the arrangement made was very objectionable. The result was, at least I thought so, regarding it as cause and effect, that I received a communication from the Under Secretary, simply and precisely stating, that if I should continue to serve as a member of the Board of Guardians, the Lord Lieutenant would send a medical officer to take charge of this institution. I stated that fact in evidence before a Committee of the House of Commons. Of course, I resigned my situation as a member of the Board of Guardians, and at no subsequent period did I offer myself as a candidate for election; and I have ever had a feeling that, when entering the workhouse, I was in some degree to be regarded as an intruder.

1281. It appears from the Daily Statement Book that, out of 154 inmates of this institution, seventy-seven are deemed to be incurable—supposing a pressure upon the Board of Governors, for additional admissions, to increase, have you ever considered whether any arrangement could be made for disposing of these incurable cases?—The accommodation was increased from 104 to 200. I, of course, did consider that question when the institution became full, and before the asylum was built at Mullingar, and it was very much discussed by the Board of Governors; the opinion that it would be well to raise side wings was, I think, generally arrived at, and it was not contemplated to make any specific proposition to transfer the incurables to another institution.

1282. What is your opinion, generally, as to the propriety or advisability of incurable cases being accommodated in a distinct and separate asylum?—I am not prepared to express any opinion upon the subject in any very decided tone; at the same time, I incline to the opinion that you should have them all together, and for this especial reason, that many patients supposed to be incurable often recover after a considerable lapse of time. The division of patients into curable and incurable is not easy; and I may now state that the forms of returns sent by the Commissioners to this institution to be filled up, differ from the forms in the Morning Statement Book, the form in the book being a division of the patients into "supposed" curable and "supposed" incurable. The Commissioners' query is "probably" curable, and "probably" incurable. The consequence is, the numbers in the returns differ from the numbers stated in the Morning Statement Book, for those in the book embrace a larger number of persons that have a reasonable chance of recovering.

1283. You feel a difficulty, therefore, in coming to a final determination as to a case being absolutely incurable?—Quite so; in many cases Dr. Burton and I were at a loss which we should mark curable and which incurable.

1284. Supposing, from the pressure of applications for admission to an asylum, it became necessary to erect additional buildings, would you see any objection to the class of supposed incurable lunatics being removed to another building on the premises, where they would still be under the supervision of the medical officer?—The conclusion that was arrived at, when the subject was under consideration here before, was, that, even with the extent of ground we have, a separate building would probably be desirable, and it is what I would deem desirable.

1285. Was it considered that any additional economy would result from that arrangement, as compared with adding generally to the asylum?—It was never in any degree made clear to me that there would, nor do I believe that any economy would exist, either in the clothing, dietary, or supervision.

1286. Are those supposed incurable cases generally cases that are not on extra diet?—I think that the incurables are, generally speaking, more generally on extra diet than the curables. The incurables are more broken down and shattered, and are cases of larger standing; so I would state from my general recollection of the cases; I do not think that a cheaper description of diet would be appropriate for incurable cases more than for curable cases. During the active stages of the diseases, of course, less stimulating food would be given than when the health might be impaired by long-existing disease.

1287. In case of an additional building for these incurable cases being on the same ground as the existing asylum, would not an economy result as regards the superior officers?—Clearly; the same staff of superior officers would manage the entire.

1288. Any difficulty that would exist in determining who were curable and who were incurable, would equally exist with reference to those who were to go to the additional building that might be erected on the grounds?—Quite so; but practically I do not see that the subdivision of patients into curable and incurable is substantially important; for instance, going through this institution, you will find in every division curables and incurables—at least, in divisions where most curables are found, you will also find incurables, in consequence of their habits being orderly and harmless.

1289. From your knowledge of the country generally, do you think there is any reluctance on the part of the poorer classes to send their lunatic relatives to asylums?—I do not, by any means. I think there is on the part of the upper classes, who have more a feeling of pride about it.

1290. Do you consider any additional legislation necessary, with reference to the cases of lunatics who may be detained by their friends—persons who have not either been made lunatics by Commission of Chancery, or are under the inspection of the Inspectors of Asylums?—I think it would be extremely difficult to reach those cases; I do not think they are many in number. There is, within a short distance of this town, a young lady in an unhappy state of insanity. The means of the family are very small, and I think this institution is open to that young lady. I am sure she would be much better circumstanced here than at home, and yet they will not remove her to this place, and they cannot pay for her in a private asylum. I believe the truth is that they are too proud to place her in this establishment.

1291. Do you see any difficulty in providing, by legislative enactment, for the proper treatment of such cases?—I do, because of the difficulty of entering a private family and a private house to investigate, under the control and power of the law, as to the existing arrangements in that family with reference to persons suffering more or less under bodily or mental disease.

1292. How far do you consider the helpless condition of such members of society would justify any interference by the legislature on their behalf?—So far as I have an opportunity of forming an opinion, the necessity is not sufficient to call for legislative interference, particularly as the powers of the Inspectors, under the Private Lunatic Asylums Act, go far towards reaching those cases.

1293. You are aware of the limited powers of the Inspectors as regards individual cases?—I am aware they are limited as to entering a house where a member of a family is supposed to be insane, and even supposed not to be well treated; I am aware there is a difficulty with respect to that, that in fact they are prevented from going in, but they are not prevented from visiting patients where payment is made.

7294. Or, I believe, licensed houses, with two or more inmates?—It is their duty to inspect them, and in case of one, by private arrangement with the Chancellor. Those are also under the control of the Inspectors.

7295. I believe you are, yourself, licensed for two establishments for the reception of the insane in the vicinity of this town?—Yes.

7296. How long have you had those institutions?—I would say, since 1842.

7297. Have you a separate licence for each house?—Yes; one establishment is for males, and the other for females.

7298. Do you experience any difficulty in obtaining the licence, or is the matter discussed at Quarter Sessions, or is the licence given as a matter of form?—I have never heard any discussion. I have no reason to think it is given as a matter of form. I rather think it is very much granted on my character, and, I presume, on the reports of the Inspectors.

7299. When the certificate was originally granted, I believe a plan of the premises was submitted to the magistrates?—It was. I submit it every time I apply for a renewal of my licence.

7300. What is your opinion as to the provisions of the law with reference to the licensing of private asylums?—I think the law extremely defective, crude, and ill-constructed. I think, without going further than the forms in the schedule of the records to be kept, they are so unmeaning that the most casual observer must see their imperfections. I think it probable I have a copy of the Act in the room. I keep at present a book or a weekly record of the state of the institution, which gives no correct idea of what the state of the establishment is; for instance, as I recollect, there is required the number of probably curable men and the names of the probably curable women. I put the figures in one column for the curable men, and I put a string of names for curable women. The whole thing appears to have been constructed in the most extraordinary way. If the names are necessary in one case, it would seem to me that they are necessary in the other—that is, the names of the probably incurable. If it is not out of place, I may remark here, that I have the strongest possible objection to raise against that Act, as being altogether most unreasonable, intolerant, and intolerable. Excuse me for again giving you a fact. I have been absent for five days in England; during my absence a young lady was received into my asylum; a copy of the certificate was not sent to the office of the Inspectors within forty-eight hours, as required by law. My failing to do that constitutes my having been guilty of a misdemeanour, and I believe the punishment for a misdemeanour is two years' imprisonment. If, from any cause, I should fail to send forward a copy of the document within forty-eight hours, I am guilty of a misdemeanour. If I should fail to enter the particulars in the register within five days, I am guilty of a misdemeanour. If, under any circumstances of emergency, a patient should be brought, in the utmost state of excitement, to the gate of my establishment, and that I should receive that person under any emergency without a medical certificate, I would be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour. If, upon the Inspectors visiting the institution, I should fail to produce the books and lay them on the table, I am subject to a penalty of £20. Now, those penal clauses do appear to me to be altogether of a most extreme and most unjustifiable character, and strongly calculated to deter respectable men from engaging in the performance of this duty, which is of great importance to the public. It may be said to me—"It is true, you may be imprisoned for two years, but you know you will not." It is right I should mention that on a recent occasion I received a letter from the Inspectors, on the subject of my having taken in more patients than the number contained in my licence, which circumstance I had reported to the Inspectors. The matter was brought under the notice of the law authorities, and the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General gave an opinion in writing that, though I had been guilty of a breach of the law, they thought I should not be prosecuted, but that I should be seriously admonished. I did write, in reply to that, a very earnest remonstrance, that I was not satisfied to have my name stand on record as a person guilty of offence against the law, and as one who deserved a serious admonition, given from the Lord Lieutenant, or the Attorney-General, or the Solicitor-General. I mention those facts, in the hope that I may possibly direct some degree of attention to the necessity that there is for an alteration of the law.

7301. In the case to which you have referred, I understand that you received patients beyond the number which the law authorised you to receive?—Yes, which I fully accounted for in this way: In the first place, I took two licences for one general institution for the treatment of male and female patients; to render my arrangements for their treatment more complete, I have separate buildings and separate premises. In reason and justice, I think I should be permitted to have one general licence, that licence covering the number that I should receive. In neither institution did I receive, on any occasion, I may say, up to the number for which I had full and ample accommodation. I have always had accommodation to spare, and in the ladies' establishment I never received the full number for which I had taken out licence; and, as a general rule, not having applicants for the number for which I took licence, I did not take, separately, a licence for the large number in the male asylum, but I put one against the other; and during the period of my having the licence, the number of patients increased, and I then determined the next time that I should take out a licence for an increased number.

7302. I believe the law requires there should be a licence for each house?—Certainly; it requires more than that; it requires and provides that the patients shall be in separate buildings; and it is another imperfection of the law, that if on the same premises—if, for instance, this institution were a private asylum, the law, as I read it, if rigidly enforced, would require a licence for the building at the east, and another for the building at the west end of the premises.

7303. Without going into the question of law, which provides that detached buildings shall be considered part of the licensed house, is it not a principle of the law, that the magistrates, in giving a licence for certain buildings, shall consider those buildings suitable for the accommodation of the number of persons named in the licence?—Yes.

7304. It would not, therefore, be in the spirit of the Act, that a person taking out two licences for two houses separate and apart, should be enabled to put a larger number into one house than the licence permitted?—Provided the licence was taken out for the maximum number that could be accommodated, he should not; for instance, if the house could accommodate twenty patients, and the proprietor considered he was not likely to have more than eight or nine, it would be very unreasonable that he should take out a licence for twenty; and equally unreasonable, if he took out a licence for nine that he could not take in the tenth patient, and that was my case.

7305. In the case you have put, the magistrates, acting under the law, determine that the house shall be licensed for nine patients?—I determine that, because I ask for no more; but if I asked to have a licence for sixteen patients, they would, on inquiry, and on investigation, and on examination of the plan, grant my application; but I did not ask for such a licence. Again, when an application for the renewal of a licence would take place, they would and should have the report of the Inspectors before them; and if the Inspectors reported the building was insufficient for the number, the magistrates would limit the number.

7306. Without entering into the question what the magistrates might or would have done, which we are not competent here to determine, is it not the case that the licence was given, in the instance to which you refer, for nine male patients?—Yes.

7307. Is it not equally the case that, on the occasion of the Commissioners' visit, there were thirteen male patients in that asylum?—Yes.

7308. Was not that an infringement of the law?—Yes.

7309. How do you consider the law could be enforced, if its infringement was not attended with some penalty?—I think a perfect check exists in the power of the magistrates to withhold the renewal of the licence.

7310. That check would not be enforced or applied for probably eleven months after the infringement of the law had taken place?—And at the end of the eleven months, the withholding of the licence, and depriving the man of a large amount of capital, would be a punishment more than sufficient, and would fall in due time.

7311. In enforcing the provisions of the law intended to prevent private licensed houses being unduly crowded, the safety of the inmates is to be considered as well as the punishment of the parties infringing the law?—Clearly.

7312. How would the safety of the inmates' health be provided for by the punishment of an individual in the course of eleven months' time?—If I am not in error with respect to the law, I think the Chancellor is empowered to withdraw licences at any time; and if the Inspector, on visiting the asylum, found twenty patients crowded in an asylum fit only for twelve; and if the Inspector would say to the proprietor—"You have here more than you can accommodate, you must send some of them away;" if he did that, and if the proprietor did not comply with his wish, the Inspector would only have to apply to the Chancellor, and he would withdraw the licence.

7313. Do you consider the other penalties, except that power of withdrawing the licence, which it would be at the option of the Chancellor to exercise, should be entirely removed?—I believe it would be amply sufficient, and I really am convinced that it is altogether unjustifiable to render a man liable to two years' imprisonment for such an act as that.

7314. The penalty of a misdemeanour is not necessarily two years' imprisonment?—It is possibly the punishment.

7315. With regard to the books to which you have referred, and for the non-production of which when called for, it is stated the Act imposes a penalty of £20—I believe the Act requires those books to be kept in the house?—Certainly.

7316. Where do you keep the books of the private establishment?—I keep the books, generally speaking, in my own house. In consequence of the fact that I had two separate establishments, I did consider that one set of books would be complete and sufficient for the purposes of the double establishment; so it was recognised in practice by the Inspectors, from the period of the opening of the establishment in 1842 to the present time; but when I received from the office of the Inspectors an expression of the Lord Lieutenant's disapprobation, with the opinion of the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General that I was guilty of an offence, because I had a number of patients greater than I had taken out licence for, I then deemed it was high time for me to guard against the possibility of punishment for misdemeanour, and I placed books in each house.

7317. I believe the law contemplated there being books in each house?—I am not aware, nor had I any reason to be aware of it, because we have always been working with one set of books for the whole establishment.

7318. How far is your private residence, where those books were kept, from the asylum?—I would say an English mile.

7319. What amount is payable for the licence?—Ten shillings for each patient; a minimum sum of five pounds, and ten shillings for each patient, per annum.

7320. What is your opinion as to the powers given by the Act of the 5th and 6th Vic. cap. 123, to the Inspectors over licensed houses?—I never considered them in any degree objectionable, and I have always considered them sufficient. I think there could be no reasonable objection raised to the powers of the Inspectors. The most stringent is the power given them to come and inspect at night, in case of sworn information, stating a belief in the existence of any abuse. I believe that is a justifiable power under such circumstances; and I am quite under the impression that the powers of the Inspectors are amply sufficient; but I do think the whole tone of the law extremely degrading to respectable proprietors, if they are honest men, and as members of a liberal profession.

7321. How frequently do the Inspectors usually visit the houses for which you are licensed?—As a general rule, the Inspectors visit them when they visit this asylum. I say as a general rule, but they do not do so always. I think they have often visited them when they have not visited here. Sometimes their visits have been more frequent than at other times; and I think that perhaps within the last two years—I will not bind myself to the accuracy of the figures—Dr. Nugent may have visited two or three times in the course of each year. I think Dr. White visited more frequently.

7322. Are they in the habit of making record in the Inspectors' Visiting Book of their visits?—Occasionally, but not always; they have frequently visited without making a record.

7323. Do they always record their half-yearly visits?—I am not prepared to say that they make visits regularly every half-year; I rather think their practice is to visit within the half-year. I am not aware of any distinction between the visits at one period and another.

7324. Is there any thing respecting the law with reference to private lunatic asylums to which you would wish to call the attention of the Commissioners?—I am not prepared to say, at the present time, that there is; but I do most strongly object, and I would hope there is not a possibility of an Act passing the Legislature, containing clauses of a penal character such as now exist. I would object most strongly to them. I do not propose to make any farther observations at the present time. I do not say that I am fully prepared on the subject.

7325. Is there any other matter connected with the general object of our inquiry to which you would wish to direct our attention?—No, I do not think there is. In fact, it is principally with respect to the Private Asylums Act I wished to direct attention. The other matters in my evidence were stated by me in reply to the questions put to me.

7326. I believe the attending physician is, in your opinion, better qualified than the resident to treat the ordinary cases of disease to be found in the asylum?—That is my opinion.

7327. I believe you have also stated that, in some cases which were first seen and treated by Dr. Burton, that you left them in his charge to the close?—That I have done.

7328. And you stated that you did that in accordance with what you considered to be professional etiquette?—Precisely.

7329. Do you think it right, in the treatment of a patient, to make professional etiquette a primary consideration, if you considered the attending physician better qualified than the other to deal with the case?—No case arose involving that question. No case arose that brought home to me the obligation or necessity to say to Dr. Burton,—"I take that case out of your hands, because I do not think you are treating it properly."

7330. How would you act if such a case did arise?—Of course I would act according to what I considered to be my duty to the patient. If I saw evil or mischief resulting to a patient, I would say to Dr. Burton,—"I take a very strong view of this case, different from yours," and I think it is probable, in that event, that Dr. Burton would conform to my opinion.

The Rev. Thomas Harpur, Rector of Maryborough, sworn and examined.

Rev. Thos. Harpur.

7331. I believe you are a member of the Board of Governors of this asylum?—I am.

7332. Have you been so for many years?—Yes, I was one of the original Governors.

7333. Have you been a constant attendant at the Board?—Indeed, more so, perhaps, than any other, from my living so convenient to the asylum.

7334. Have you found the attendance of Governors, generally, numerous?—Indeed, I would say pretty fair. The record of the meetings will tell you.

7335. What is your opinion as to the manner in which the Governors are appointed, namely, by the Executive Government?—I should suppose it is as good an arrangement as any other that could be suggested.

7336. Are the Grand Jurors in the habit of appointing any committee to visit the establishment?—Oh yes; every session there is a committee appointed by the Grand Jury to visit. The same members visit this asylum, and the goal, and the infirmary; all of which are supported, in a great degree, by the county, and they enter reports in the books according to what they find to be the case.

7337. Do the Governors appoint any visiting committee to visit the house between the monthly meetings, to see that their orders are carried out?—No.

7338. Any inspection or visitation of the asylum, therefore, between the monthly meetings, by the members of the Board, is optional?—Yes.

7339. When matters arise which call for investigation, is it the practice of the Board to investigate such matters themselves, or to refer them to the Inspectors of Asylums to investigate?—Indeed, I think, in the first instance, they investigate them themselves. I do not recollect their having officially investigated.

7340. Are the Inspectors in the habit of attending the Board?—Yes.

7341. What is your opinion, as to the propriety, or otherwise, of the Inspectors being members of the Board?—I will say for one that it is an advantage, for their experience and their knowledge in these matters are useful to the Governors. They give us valuable hints.

7342. Do you consider it desirable that they should have the power of voting like other members of the Board?—I should say so; I do not see why they should not.

7343. You do not consider it necessary, therefore, that their position at the Board should be rendered similar to that of Poor Law Inspectors at Boards of Guardians?—No; I would consider it better they should have a vote.

7344. What is your opinion as to the propriety of the charge for the maintenance of the inmates being transferred from the county rate to the poor rate?—I should prefer it standing just as it is at present. I do not find that there has been any objection raised. I know, that with the view of satisfying the county, statements of the expenditure were furnished to the Grand Jury, which is done every year.

7345. Do the Grand Jury of the King's County send a committee here, or any person on their part, to examine the asylum?—No.

7346. Do the King's County members of the Board attend here frequently?—I am sorry to say that, generally speaking, they do not; for a length of time they did not attend, but we have got a member who does.

7347. During the time that you have been a Governor, you have had experience of a non-professional manager of the asylum, and also of the arrangement under which the manager is a medical man?—Yes.

7348. What is your opinion of the advantage, or otherwise, of the manager of the institution being a medical man?—There is a great deal to be said on both sides. I heard my friend, Dr. Jacob, give his testimony, and I think there is a great deal of reason in it. If a medical gentleman is appointed resident manager or physician, his private practice is altogether stopped; and therefore, I think his services as a medical man are greatly diminished in value; but him he ever so well qualified coming in, their value is diminished by his being put out of practice, except such practice as he finds here; but at the same time, there will be cases of emergency, which it would be well to have a medical man on the spot to treat.

7349. It has been stated that the Board have had under their consideration certain improvements in the building?—Yes, we are anxious to have lavatories; these originally made in the house were found out at all to answer the purpose. We got Mr. Wilkinson, the architect, down, and he has furnished us with plans for lavatories. I would very much doubt myself, with respect to water-closets, whether they would answer for such an institution as this. We have water-closets in the infirmary, and the patients there require a certain degree of intelligence to make use of them. If we are to have water-closets, there should be great care taken as to the description of persons allowed to make use of them.

7350. You have heard the evidence given with reference to the want of warmth in the building—what are the views of the Governors on the point?—The building was worse off in that respect for a long time than it is at present. It certainly is a source of anxiety to the Governors to endeavour to restrict the enormous expense. We find there is an enormous deal of fuel consumed in the house; and yet, with all that, the long corridors here are very often colder than they ought to be.

7351. What is the fuel generally used?—Coal.

7352. The consumption of coal appears to be between four and five tons a-week on an average?—Yes, something about that.

7353. With regard to the supply of water, and its distribution through the house, does that occupy the attention of the Board?—We have two sources of supply of water, one of soft water, sent up by an engine through the house, and there is a pump outside.

7354. Have the Board ever had under their consideration the propriety of having a school established in the institution?—No, the Inspectors never suggested or hinted at that.

7355. Do you think the appointment of chaplains has worked beneficially?—I should say so. I am the Protestant chaplain, and I am of opinion that it is an exceedingly humane and proper arrangement. Some of the inmates take a lively interest in the service, and even the worst of them probably are, at times, seemingly gratified by it. Patients in a state of excitement are not allowed to attend.

7356. Are bibles and books provided for the use of the members of your church in the house?—Yes, we give prayer-books to such of the inmates as want them, and there are bibles also in the establishment for them.

David Thompson, Esq., J.P., sworn and examined.

7357. Are you a member of the Board of Governors of this asylum?—I am.

7358. Resident in the King's County?—Yes.

7359. Have you, since your appointment, attended frequently at the Board?—Yes.

7360. What is your opinion as to the manner in which the Governors are appointed—do you consider the appointment should rest with the Government?—Well, I cannot say that I see any objection to it. I think the arrangement works well.

7361. Do you think that any direct representation of the Grand Jurors, in the different counties, should exist upon the Board of Governors?—I think it desirable.

7362. What is your opinion as to the Inspectors being ex-officio members of the Board of Governors?—It would have occurred to me, that probably they could act more efficiently in the character of Inspectors, in a position somewhat resembling that of the poor law inspectors.

7363. I believe the tenders which are received by this Board, for the supply of provisions and so on, are usually submitted to the Privy Council before they are passed?—I believe so.

7364. Has any delay or inconvenience arisen from that proceeding?—Not that I am aware of.

7365. With respect to the admission of patients, do you find that the Board have sufficient means of determining upon the propriety, or otherwise, of admitting a case, from the documents before them?—I think so, I do not remember any difficulty arising.

7366. Are the Board generally satisfied with the affidavits as to pauperism that accompany the applications for admission—or do they make particular inquiries as to the circumstances of the parties?—I think the Board generally follows the form which is filled up and laid before them; but I believe the justices who receive the affidavit, and sign the documents, make very sufficient and full inquiry before they do so.

7367. It has been suggested to the Commissioners, in other places, that the investigation of the cases for admission should rest with the Board of Guardians in the first instance—what is your opinion as to that?—I think the present system is unobjectionable in that respect. I do not know that the Board of Guardians would be the best qualified body to decide upon the subject.

7368. Is it your opinion that the charge for the maintenance of a lunatic pauper should remain a charge upon the county rate, which is paid entirely by the occupier, or be transferred to the poor rate, and be made a charge accordingly upon both owner and occupier?—I should think it the better plan to have it charged upon both owner and occupier.

7369. You are aware that the advances for the maintenance of the asylum are made from the Consolidated Fund—what summary power would you give the Government of recovering those advances from the Boards of Guardians?—I am not prepared to answer that question.

7370. Do you think the appointment of the superior officers of the asylum, such as the attending physician and the resident manager, should be made by the Board or by the Executive Government?—I think the Board should have a voice in it.

7371. Do you mean that they should appoint, subject to the approval of the Lord Lieutenant?—Yes.

7372. Would you give the power of dismissal entirely to the Board, or would you allow the Lord Lieutenant equally the power of dismissal?—Yes, equally.

7373. It has been stated, that although the general rule is, that the servants should be qualified by a certain amount of education, being able to read and write, yet that servants have been admitted of late here who have not been able to read or write—can you explain that?—I cannot.

7374. Do you consider it desirable that persons in charge of the insane should be persons possessed of a certain amount of education?—Yes.

7375. Have you reason to believe that the asylum, from its present size, is quite adequate for the wants of the district?—I should think it was. I do not profess to be able to form a very sound opinion on the subject.

7376. Have the Board had many applications recently which they have been obliged to reject in consequence of not having accommodation?—I believe not.

7377. Are the accounts of the asylum examined half-yearly by the Board of Governors?—They are examined every month by the Board.

7378. Is that monthly statement transmitted to the Commissioners of Asylums?—I believe so.

The Rev. John Tidd Moore, sworn and examined.

7379. Have you been long a member of the Board of Governors of this asylum?—I think about fifteen years.

7380. Is there any alteration you would wish to suggest as to the manner in which the Board of Governors are constituted?—I think that the Lord Lieutenant should have the appointments, and that the Grand Jurors should also appoint.

7381. What is your opinion of an arrangement by which the Lord Lieutenant should have the power of appointing a limited number, and that a limited number should also be appointed by each Grand Jury?—I think it would be a very good plan. I think is very desirable that the Grand Jurors should appoint some of the Governors.

7382. With respect to the chargeability of the inmates, do you consider it should be left as at present upon the county rate, or be transferred to the poor rate?—I think it ought to be transferred to the poor rate.

7383. Would you, in that case, propose that the repayments should be made direct by the Board of Guardians to the Government, or through the county?—I think the Guardians should lodge the money in bank to the credit of the asylum, and let the Government recover it in their own way afterwards.

7384. Is there any proceeding by which Government can recover moneys from Boards of Guardians, in the same manner as they do now from counties, by imperative presentment?—I cannot say.

7385. Do you consider, the money being advanced by the Government, that the law should provide, if a change was made, a similarly efficient mode of recovering it back?—Yes.

7386. With regard to the superior officers of the institution—for instance, the resident manager and visiting physician—is it your opinion those appointments should continue to be made by the Executive Government, or that they should be made by the Board of Governors?—I think they ought to be made by the local Board, subject to the approval of the Lord Lieutenant.

7387. Would you give the Lord Lieutenant the power of dismissal?—Certainly.

7388. What is your opinion as to the present state of the law with reference to the erection of new buildings and the enlargement of asylums—do you consider the local Governors should be given more authority than they at present possess in such matters?

—I think it would be very desirable if they had more authority. At one time here we wished to enlarge this building; and if there was an enlargement I think the local Board should have the power of doing it.

1388. With regard to the plans for an enlargement of the building, or for the erection of new buildings, would you consider it advisable that any power should be given to a central authority to examine those plans, and refuse assent if necessary?—Decidedly; I would not leave it altogether in the hands of the Board.

1389. Do you consider the attendance of the Inspectors, as ex-officio members of the Board of Governors, desirable, or otherwise?—I think it any thing but desirable.

1391. Do you think it inconsistent with their position as Inspectors of the institution of which they thereby become Governors?—I think it inconsistent in that respect, and inconvenient also in others.

1392. It appears the Inspectors were, till recently, in the habit of voting and taking an equally active part with other members in the transactions of the Board?—Yes.

1393. Has that, in your mind, been attended with inconvenience?—I think it has. The Inspectors did not vote often, but I have seen great inconveniences when they did.

1394. When the Inspectors may have had occasion to investigate matters connected with the asylum, have they done so of their own authority or at the request of the Board?—I think they generally have been requested by letters from the Board to attend about such and such matters.

1395. Do they usually attend the Board when the result of their investigation is brought forward?—I think there was one occasion they did not, but generally they do.

1396. Do they take part in the discussions which arise upon their reports?—Yes.

1397. Are the communications of the Inspectors with the Governors usually made on the occasion of their visits to the Board, or are they entered in the Report Books?—A letter is generally sent down to the office, and shown to us after. Sometimes there are verbal communications made, but I think not often.

1398. Of course, no trace would remain upon the minutes of proceedings of any suggestion verbally made which might not have been adopted?—There might, but I am not aware.

1399. Have you had occasion to observe the operation of the Act under which dangerous lunatics are committed to prison; and, if so, is it your opinion that that Act has been fairly carried out, or that parties have been sent to prison who in reality were not dangerous to the community, and who were sent with the view of their being transferred to the asylum?—I think, in one case that occurred. I saw it threatened here, that if a patient was not admitted the parties would go through the regular course of committing to gaol, and that he would then be sent here by the Lord Lieutenant. There is a book here showing the numbers sent in by the orders of the Government, and the numbers admitted by order of the Governors.

1400. Is there any suggestion you would wish to make to us?—I think, with respect to inspection, it would be very desirable to have local inspectors to superintend every thing. I also think it very desirable, with regard to Dr. Burton's management, that the accounts would be taken out of his hands altogether. I know the difficulty attending the accounts, and I see the extreme difficulty Dr. Burton has in attending to them; and I do not think it is within his province to be so exact and so particular, and give up so much time as he does to the accounts.

1401. Do you consider the local inspector should be a paid officer?—I think it would be very desirable.

1402. I believe, at the time the regulations were made which imposed the duty on the manager of the asylum of overlooking the accounts, it was not contemplated that the manager should be a professional person?—No, the manager then was a non-professional person.

Robert Cassidy, Esq., J.P., sworn and examined.

1403. You are a Governor of the Marlborough Asylum?—Yes, for several years.

1404. What is your opinion as to the propriety of admitting paying patients into this asylum?—I am confident it would be a blessing to the community at large.

1405. What class of paying patients would you admit—those able to pay the full cost of their maintenance, or those only able to pay a part?—It would be difficult to define the difference between the two classes.

1406. Would you allow any person to be admitted as a paying patient, who was unable to pay the whole cost of his maintenance?—That is, I think, one of the reasons why the Board of Guardians should select the patients for admission to an asylum like this. They will more thoroughly investigate the case, and there are means of inquiry open to them, better than can be arrived at by means of admission papers.

1407. Am I to understand that you would admit a class of patients, not paupers, and leave it to the Board of Guardians to determine whether they could pay, in each case, the whole or only portion of their maintenance?—Yes, such cases as would be recommended by the Board of Guardians.

1408. Is that upon the ground, that although not destitute paupers, or even paupers in the ordinary sense of the word, yet, that the parties are not able to provide for their lunatic relatives in a private asylum?—Yes; and because they are too conscientious to swear that they are paupers.

1409. Are you aware that in the relief to be given under the provisions of the law to any class, some test is required as to the poverty of the individual seeking relief, for the protection of the ratepayers?—Yes, I am aware of that.

7410. What test would you propose with regard to paying patients?—The means of the respective parties, respectable persons would not like to send their friends amongst absolute paupers.

7411. That would be more in the nature of a discretion on the part of the relatives of those admitted, and would not be a test provided by law?—I know of no test that could be applied with respect to a man's property or means, except repute. If you could propose better I would adopt it.

7412. Would you not establish a test of some kind with reference to the means and condition in life of a lunatic or his relatives, which would afford a protection to the ratepayers generally?—Not because I would depend upon it as a protection.

7413. Do you think there would be no risk in persons coming into the asylum, under this denomination of paying patients, whose friends would be enabled to pay for them in a private asylum?—The people liable to pay the rates would soon discover such cases.

7414. Do you think the vigilance of the ratepayers is necessarily so great in such matters that there would be no chance of fraud or deception being practised?—There might be a chance of fraud, but it would be a very remote one.

7415. Would you consider a person a proper object for admission as a paying patient, whose friends, offering to pay a small sum, denied their liability for the maintenance of the party, as not being in the relation of parent or husband of the applicant?—I think you should allow that, because a person could not be compelled, except by good feeling, to support a relative, in any case, except that of a child or wife. A brother is not bound to support a brother, but, at the same time, I think there would be few who, if able, would refuse to support a lunatic brother, to a certain extent.

7416. The question is, whether the parties would not seek to throw off, on the general ratepayers, that portion of the burden, which, although not legally theirs, it might be considered they ought to bear?—I think, in this country, the arrangements I propose might be safely made.

7417. Would you be surprised to hear, that in an institution to which paying patients are admitted, at a rate calculated merely to defray their maintenance, members of families of the aristocracy have been admitted?—I would be surprised to hear that.

7418. Would there not be also a risk of the same proceeding taking place in the District Asylums?—Publicity, I think, would be the best guard against that, and the immediate discharge of the patient from the asylum, when it was discovered.

7419. From your experience as a grand juror and magistrate, are you satisfied that publicity affords sufficient protection against what is ordinarily called "jobbing"?—I think it would, as regards the families of lunatics who would be admitted to this asylum.

7420. Then, to a certain extent, you consider that the protection would be a reluctance, on the part of persons of respectability, to send their relatives to what might be considered, in some degree, a pauper asylum?—I think so.

7421. Supposing these cases admitted into the asylum, is it your opinion, the terms of their admission should be that, as regards diet and accommodation, they should be on an equality with the other inmates?—There should not be the slightest difference, nor would I admit one of the paying class of patients, while a single one of the paupers, for whom the institution was established, required a place.

7422. In the event of its being found, that a paying patient admitted into the asylum in the manner that you propose, was possessed of property, or that persons of good means, out of doors, were liable for his maintenance, I presume you would give a remedy to the Board of Guardians to enable them to recover the cost of the maintenance?—Precisely as in the case under the poor law.

7423. Considering, that under the poor law, the responsibility for the maintenance of a pauper does not extend beyond that of parent for children up to the age of sixteen, and of the husband for the maintenance of the wife, would you add provision for making the relatives of a lunatic enter into a bond for the payment of the cost?—The friends should be bound to pay, if they were able.

7424. Are you satisfied with the manner in which the proceedings of the Board of Governors are conducted?—I am not.

7425. Do you think that matters brought under their notice have received that full investigation which they deserved?—I do not.

7426. Upon what do you found that opinion?—Upon a report made of what occurred in this house—a report made by the matron against the conduct of the resident physician. It was considered so important that the Board of Governors requested the Lord Lieutenant to appoint a committee to investigate the matter; and further, that it was necessary to hear sworn testimony. The Board of Governors did not find themselves authorized to administer an oath, and therefore they made the requisition for the appointment of a commission by the Lord Lieutenant, as had been done in Carlisle some time before. The Inspectors-General arrived here for the purpose; and from some cause, not known to me, and I believe not very fully explained to others, the matron withdrew her charge. Her daughter came from Edinburgh to give her testimony on the occasion; she apprized the Inspectors-General she was in the house, but there was no investigation, as I have stated, and the matter has made, or caused, a very unpleasant feeling out of doors, and certainly not a very satisfactory one within the Board-room.

7427. You state that this investigation was called for by the Board?—Yes, to be held by persons who could administer oaths.

7428. Was the final result of that investigation, whatever it was, ever communicated to the Board?—Nothing more than you see on the minutes, that the matron was not in a condition to prove her charges.

7429. Do you refer to the report of the Inspectors?—I do. It is as follows:—

"May 22nd, 1856.

"The Inspectors, Dr. White and Dr. Nugent, attended this day, by order of his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, to inquire into a certain statement made against Dr. Burton, the resident physician, by Mrs. Abbott, the matron. The Rev. Mr. Moore attended. The Inspectors were about to open the proceedings when, in consequence of a casual remark made by Dr. Nugent to Mr. Moore, the latter gentleman, referring to the latter of Mrs. Abbott, suggested that the matter might be arranged without entering into an examination, as Mrs. Abbott felt that all the rumours were founded on hearsay."

"Mrs. Abbott was requested to attend before Mr. Moore and the Inspectors, when, on full consideration, she handed in the letter herewith appended. [The original written by Mr. Moore, and brought up to Dublin by the Inspectors, with other documents.]"

"Mrs. Abbott begs of the Inspectors to be permitted to withdraw the statement made against the character of Dr. Burton, the resident physician, and which was read before the Governors of the asylum, inasmuch as she regrets having done so—induced to do so by reports which cannot be substantiated; and she further begs to say that, personally, she never saw any thing whatever improper on the part of Dr. Burton, during his residence as physician to the asylum, and regrets the anxiety she must have caused him."

"The Inspectors, in conclusion, have great pleasure in expressing their conviction that the affair has now terminated in a manner the most satisfactory to all parties, and creditable to the conduct of the matron."

"JOHN NUGENT."

7430. It appears from the minutes that these proceedings were considered by the Board of Governors on the 18th June, 1856?—Yes.

7431. What took place on that occasion?—This resolution was proposed:—"Resolved, that we have read the report of the Inspectors-General, dated 22nd May, and the letter of the Under Secretary acknowledging that report; that Mrs. Abbott having withdrawn statements made, and having witnesses in attendance to support the statements made by the matron, we deem the course adopted by the Inspectors-General most unsatisfactory, and not calculated to satisfy the Governors of this asylum, that a full and searching inquiry has been made into the truth of Mrs. Abbott's statements, by the examination of witnesses in attendance, such as we deem necessary to sustain the character of a public institution, such as the District Lunatic Asylum of Maryborough." An amendment to that resolution, and to the following effect was proposed and carried:—"That the Inspectors having ordered, at a certain period of the investigation, that the matter ought to be referred to the Lord Lieutenant, and such having been done by the unanimous consent of the Board; and the Inspectors having adjudicated thereon, this Board feels that Mr. Cassidy's resolution is unnecessary."

7432. Can you give the letter of the Under Secretary referred to in the first resolution proposed?—Yes, it is as follows:—

"Dublin Castle, 24th May, 1856.

"Sir,—I am directed by the Lord Lieutenant to acquaint you that it is satisfactory to his Excellency to find that the statements made by Mrs. Abbott have been entirely withdrawn, and that your character and fitness for the responsible office which you hold, remain therefore fully unimpaired. His Excellency trusts that Mrs. Abbott, on her part, will be in future more guarded in her statements; reflecting that to disturb the harmony of a public establishment is to impair its well-working, and must render her liable to the penalty of doing so."

"I am further to request that you will lay this communication before the Governors of the Maryborough Asylum, in reference to their resolution of the 7th April."

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"THOS. A. LARSON.

"Thos. C. Burton, Esq., Manager District Lunatic Asylum, Maryborough."

7433. Was any further proceeding taken in the business by the Board subsequent to the 18th June, 1856?—Yes. On the 8th October, 1856, the following resolution was proposed by me, seconded by Mr. Price:—"That it is expedient to examine Mrs. Abbott as to the causes which induced her to withhold her proof in support of the statements made by her to the Inspectors-General, respecting irregularities in the management of the asylum." Upon which it was proposed by the Rev. J. T. Moore, seconded by Mr. Thompson, "that the amendment passed, on the 18th June, to Mr. Cassidy's motion of the same day, apply to this present motion." This amendment was carried.

7434. Did that close the proceedings?—That closed the proceedings. The institution has all the unpleasantness of those unproved and not investigated charges over it.

7435. The propriety, however, of proceeding further in the matter has been twice considered by the Board of Governors, and their judgment was, that it did not require any further action on their part?—That the Lord Lieutenant had decided it without inquiry.

7436. Are not the words of Mr. Moore's amendment, that they consider your resolution unnecessary?—Yes; and my opinion is, that the charges have never yet been investigated.

7437. On the first occasion on which this resolution was considered, there would appear to have been five members present at the Board, and on the last occasion, seven, exclusive of the Inspector, Dr. White?—Yes.

1438. Has the question of providing chapel accommodation been under the consideration of the Board of Governors?—Frequently.

1439. Have any steps been taken to provide a suitable place for the celebration of Divine service?—No steps have been taken to provide a suitable place. It is the opinion of every Catholic clergyman that I have spoken to, that a chapel ought to be fitted up as chapels are, with an altar, crucifix, and other requisites.

1440. You speak now of the fitting up of a chapel to be devoted entirely to Catholic worship?—Yes; there is nothing of the kind here.

1441. Is there a chapel in any place so set apart for the exclusive celebration of Divine worship?—There is no chapel.

1442. Has that matter ever been brought before the members of the Board?—Not by resolution.

1443. In what way has it been brought under their notice?—It has been spoken of very often, and suggested as a most useful step, for the ease of the minds of the patients. Our bishop, Dr. Walsh, is very much alive to it; Dr. Taylor, &c., is very much alive to it, and other clergymen who have communicated with me on the subject.

Mullingar District
Asylum.
Joseph Ferguson,
Esq., M.D.

7444. Are you the visiting physician of this asylum?—I am.

7445. How long have you held that appointment?—Since May, 1852.

7446. Was that the period at which the asylum was opened?—No; the asylum was not opened for two years after. The contract for finishing the asylum provided, I think, that it was to be completed in the August following, and the appointments were made in anticipation; but the asylum was not finished for a couple of years after.

7447. I believe the manager of this asylum is a medical gentleman?—He is.

The medical duties
in the Asylum; the Manager and the Visiting Physician.

7448. On the occasion of your appointment was any particular arrangement made for the distribution of your respective duties?—No, nothing more than is laid down by the orders of the Privy Council.

7449. The Privy Council rules were framed with the view to the manager exercising merely a surveillance?—I do not know what the intention may have been, but I have no doubt that would be the effect.

The Privy Council rules on the subject.

7450. The Privy Council rules do not impose any medical duties upon the manager?—I do not believe they do.

7451. Practically, what arrangement has been made between the resident physician and manager, and yourself, as to the treatment of the patients?—I undertake the general medical treatment, and the direction of the moral management. Altogether, it is conducted upon a system of consultation. There is perfect harmony and agreement between the manager and myself. We co-operate together, which, I think, is essential for the well-being of any public institution.

The responsibility of
ment.

7452. Do you consider the responsibility of the treatment of the patients to rest with yourself?—Yes.

7453. Suppose that harmony which you speak of, not to exist, do you see that any serious inconvenience might arise from two medical gentlemen being attached to an institution of the kind without their respective duties being defined?—Why, if the manager is to look strictly to the management of the institution, no serious difficulty can arise medically.

Medical men as Managers of Asylums.

7454. Are you in favour of the managers of asylums being medical men?—Decidedly. There is so much of medical treatment involved in the moral treatment of the patients, that I consider it impossible the manager can be a non-professional man, and carry out the moral management of lunatics with that efficiency and success that are necessary.

7455. There is an apothecary, I believe, attached to the institution?—Yes.

7456. Are the medicines made up in the house, or furnished by him from the town?—They are made up in the house.

Medicine; no infirmary; the sick patients; where treated.

7457. Are there infirmaries attached to the asylum?—We have no infirmary attached; it was proposed in the original contract, but owing to some new arrangement of the Board of Works, it was not built; however, we have not suffered any material inconvenience yet from the want of an infirmary, as the house is not full.

7458. Where are the sick patients treated at present?—Ordinary cases of illness we do not remove; but when there is serious illness, or epidemic, or contagion, or that the patients would disturb others, we remove such cases to the wings.

7459. Are the wings reserved for such cases?—I might say they are; occasionally we put a person into one of them, that might be a little refractory.

7460. Does the accommodation, then, consist of separate cells, or is there a dormitory?—Separate cells, and a day-room.

Question of infirmary
accommodation.

7461. What is your opinion as to the advantage, or otherwise, of treating patients in an infirmary, instead of treating them in their separate cells?—I think that simple complaints, such as confined bowels or headache, or whatever a simple dose of medicine would remove, can hardly be classed as cases requiring to be removed to an hospital.

7462. In the case of a patient confined to his bed from illness, do you consider a separate cell a suitable place for him?—Yes; those in the wings are very comfortable.

7463. Is there a fire-place in any of those cells?—No, nor in the corridor. They are very deficient in that respect, but in others they are suitable.

7464. Do you think patients in their separate cells receive the same care from nurses as they would receive in associated dormitories?—I think not.

7465. In the event of epidemic disease breaking out, what arrangements would be made for the treatment of the patients affected?—We should only set apart those wings for them; and I would advocate strongly the putting up of fire-places immediately in the wings. That is under the consideration of the Board of Works, and is to be done immediately, I believe.

7466. Are the patients of dirty habits kept in that part of the building?—At times they are, when we have no sickness.

Amusement and occupation of the patients.

7467. Are you satisfied with the arrangements for the amusement and occupation of the patients?—Not altogether. I am a great advocate for amusements, and particularly amusements connected with music; as yet we have only been able to carry out to a certain extent what we hope shortly to perfect. I think amusements most essential in the treatment of patients, we wish to have a system of reading and amusement, and the matter is under the consideration of the Board.

7468. Is there any library for the use of the patients?—No.

7469. Is there any school instruction for those who may require it?—No.

7470. What classification is established in the house?—The classification is curable and incurable, violent and tranquil.

7471. Are the curable kept separate from the incurable?—As far as we can accomplish they are, but we cannot always do it.

7472. Are the arrangements for the supply of water to the baths satisfactory?—No; great fault is found with the machinery.

7473. In what respect is it defective?—It frequently gets out of order.

7474. Does it admit of a supply of hot water?—No; the machinery is altogether defective.

7475. Was the machinery constructed with a view to a supply of hot water throughout the house?—It was.

7476. Is the ventilation of the building satisfactory?—No; the ventilation has, I think, been very imperfect.

7477. Are artificial means provided for extracting the foul air?—No.

7478. Are the apartments reported to you to be objectionable in that respect?—I think so. In the morning, when the cells are first opened, the effluvia is excessively offensive.

7479. Are the associated dormitories used to any great extent?—Yes; and I find them very useful.

7480. Do you find that a considerable class of patients can, with safety, be located in these dormitories?—Decidedly.

7481. Is the sewerage of the house defective?—No; but it might be improved.

7482. Have these matters, the imperfect supply of water, and the ventilation, and the sewerage, occupied the attention of the Board of Governors?—Yes, for some time; and there is, I believe, an estimate obtained of the cost of putting these matters to rights.

7483. What means are there of warming the corridors and cells?—There are fire-places in the corridors, but they are in the outer walls, consequently, much of the heat is lost, and the corridors are very cold. We have no artificial means of heating the cells or dormitories, only the day-rooms and corridors.

7484. Are you satisfied with the dietary provided for the patients?—Yes; I am an advocate for feeding the lunatic well, and the Governors, at my request, gave some extra allowance in the way of beef-heads for soup, which I find most advantageous. They are very cheap, and give a great deal of nutriment to the soup. I attribute a good deal of the wholesome condition of the inmates to our dietary.

7485. Is restraint much practised in the asylum?—My rule is not to adopt any restraint at all, but cases will occasionally occur for which it is essential. The rule of the house, however, is to have no restraint.

7486. Is seclusion at all practised?—The rule is to have no seclusion, but at times it is necessary; very seldom, however.

7488. Do the patients exercise in the grounds?—Yes, the men work a good deal; they cultivate the land.

7489. I believe chaplains are attached to this institution?—Yes.

7490. What is your opinion as to the advantage, or otherwise, of chaplains being attached to such an institution?—I think the benefit arising from the attendance of chaplains is very great; very many lunatics do not pay my attention, whilst others do. The moral effect arising from clergymen being attached to an institution of this kind and extent is, I think, essential.

7491. Referring to the opinion expressed by you, that the civil manager of this institution should be at all times a medical man, I wish to ask you, do you consider the attendance of a visiting physician requisite?—I think it essential. I think no individual manager, even supposing he is a medical man, can by possibility carry out the details of the medical management of a lunatic asylum without the co-operation or consultation of a second physician.

7492. Do you find that there is a great want of information regarding the previous history of cases sent to the asylum?—Yes; we are very deficient in that respect. Generally, I think, there is a great want of that information.

7493. Are the patients admitted by the Board or by you?—They are admitted by the Board. Others are admitted upon the Lord Lieutenant's warrant, and occasionally some are admitted by me. It is a power I am very slow, indeed, to exercise.

7494. What information do you receive with regard to the cases that come from the gaols?—Even less than we receive with those that come before the Board. One of the objections to the admission from gaols is, that, in fact, we get no information at all with them.

7495. Are there many paying patients in the house?—I think there are three.

7496. What is your opinion as to the propriety of paying patients being received into such an institution?—I think you must admit them; I do not see any actual positive objection to their reception, though it might be better to have the institution without them.

7497. I presume the paying patients now in the asylum are persons unable to pay the entire cost of their maintenance in private asylums?—Yes.

7498. Do you consider that any distinction should be made in the treatment of paying patients and of the ordinary pauper patients?—I do not. I think if a separate asylum could be established for these paying patients it would be far better. I do not see how that could be done.

7499. I believe this asylum is at present far from being full?—It could hold 100 more.

7500. It appears from a return the Commissioners have received, that, out of 186 patients in the house on the first of January, 165 were probably incurable?—Yes.

7501. Supposing the accommodation of the asylum to be exhausted, have you ever turned your attention to the consideration of the propriety, or otherwise, of removing the incurable patients to a separate establishment?—I do not think it would be prudent. A very remarkable thing, I observe, in reference to lunatics, is, that many come in who are considered curable, and by association with some of the lunatics, from having been very intemperate and dissatisfied with their new place, they soon become quite contented and happy; they more generally take up and associate with incurables than those that might be considered curable; and I would be disposed to mix them together. There are many incurables very interesting characters, showing a great deal of good temper and good nature; and I observe that many who come into the asylum take up with them, and they are very much the means of inducing the dissatisfied or violent persons to become calm and settled.

7502. I understand you to state that, as far as possible, you would classify the patients as curable and incurable?—Yes, to a certain extent.

7503. Does not that interfere with the arrangement you speak of?—Yes, there are certain incurables that it is always desirable to separate from the others; idiots, and epileptics, and violent cases, with whom you should not let curable cases at all associate.

7504. Do you think incurable patients, maintained in a separate establishment, could be supported at a lower cost than in this institution?—I do not think, in justice to them, they should, because a lunatic, whether curable or incurable, requires a better system of living than ordinary patients.

7505. If the building was on the same premises, the medical staff of the institution, and the other superior officers, would be available for both?—Yes.

7506. If it was at a distance that would not be the case?—It would not.

7507. Are the airing courts, for the patients to exercise in, spacious?—Yes. The aspect, however, is to the north, and the patients are exposed to cold.

7508. Patients using those airing courts, therefore, enjoy very little sunshine in the winter months?—Very little. In fact they are almost useless in the winter months.

7509. What is your opinion as to the operation of the Dangerous Lunatic Act—do you think cases are sent in here as dangerous that are not really so?—I think so. Great objections were entertained against sending them to gaol, and I hold strong objections to the practice myself, but cases will occur with respect to which you have no other way of placing them in safety.

7510. Have you known cases of dangerous lunatics, transferred from the gaol to the asylum, who were of the class above paupers?—Yes; there was a case in this house that shows the necessity of a gaol for such parties, notwithstanding the objection against sending lunatics to them. A man, the son of a shopkeeper in Mullingar, applied to the Board for admission, and the Board did not consider him a fit case to receive, on the ground that his father was able to pay for him. He was rejected and allowed to wander about the streets. Being a dangerous lunatic, he threatened to injure many persons in the town to whom he had a dislike. The father would not pay for him; and the result was, that an affidavit was sworn, stating that he was a dangerous lunatic. Upon this he was put into gaol, and from the gaol he came here.

7511. Do you consider that any power should be given, enabling the Governors to recover from families, if they were able to pay it, the expense of maintaining a relative who was a dangerous lunatic?—Yes; I think the law, generally, on the subject, is somewhat defective.

7512. What was the age of the lunatic whose case you have just referred to?—I cannot tell exactly; but I rather think he is about twenty-one.

7513. In that case the liability, such as is provided under the Poor Law Act, would not attach to the father?—Just so, and that was the difficulty of the case.

7514. Are there any further remarks that you would wish to make to the Commissioners?—With regard to paying patients, who can pay only a portion of the cost of their maintenance, I think the State ought to contribute any deficiency there might be, rather than throw it upon the cess-payers. I think it is a hardship to persons able and willing to pay a portion of the cost of their maintenance, that a place is not provided for their reception. Suppose, for instance, the cost for maintaining a patient was £15 a-year, and that the friends of the lunatic were able to pay £10, in that case, I think, the State ought to pay the difference rather than the cess-payers, who should be made liable for paupers. The lunatics are an interesting class, and, for the State, very many considerations are involved with respect to them. There is crime, poverty, and the extension of the disease, if they are allowed to go at large; to guard against which there exists a great necessity for taking immediate measures to remove them to a proper institution.

7515. Is not the inability of a family to defray the entire cost of a lunatic's maintenance in the case you have put, a degree of poverty, though not complete destitution?—Clearly.

7516. On what principle do you consider that, where the poverty is only one of a degree, the State should pay a part of the cost, while the rate-payers should pay the whole cost of the maintenance of absolute paupers?—I think a pauper lunatic is a person who should be taken more immediately under the charge of the district. The disease is probably on the increase in this country; and in fifty years, if a check is not put to it, there is no saying what extent of lunacy there may be. To prevent that extension the State are bound to contribute towards the removal of the disease.

1517. Are we to understand you as suggesting that the State should provide for the maintenance of dangerous lunatics?—I think it should pay a certain portion of the charge, not for dangerous lunatics more than any other class, on the principle of guarding against the spread of lunacy.

1518. As a great social evil?—Yes, as a great social evil.

1519. Are we to understand it to be your opinion that if the State did not provide for the care of lunatics, there would be danger of them being left at large by their friends, to the injury of society?—I think if the State took more interest in the matter than it has done, there would be arrangements made for securing greater supervision. The law, with regard to liability, would be changed; and the duty of obtaining the money from persons liable to pay for the maintenance of lunatics in asylums, would be taken out of the hands of the Governors and placed in the hands of officials, who would exercise a more effective means for the purpose.

1520. From your knowledge of the country, do you think there is at present a considerable number of lunatics amongst the lower classes, who are not cared for as they should be, and who might be provided for if the State came forward to assist?—I think that there is a vast increase of lunacy. A great deal of intermarriage is going on with a description of persons, which, perhaps, would render greater watchfulness, on the part of the authorities, necessary.

1521. Do you think the system of intermarriage with relatives is more frequent than it was formerly?—I think it is.

Henry Berkeley, Esq., M.A., sworn and examined.

1522. Are you the manager of this asylum?—Yes.

1523. You are a member of the medical profession?—Yes.

1524. At the period of your appointment, were any particular instructions given you with reference to the duties you would have to perform in this asylum?—No.

1525. You have, therefore, for guidance, merely those directions which the Privy Council rules give?—Nothing more.

1526. I believe the duties prescribed by the Privy Council regulations are mainly of a civil character?—Mainly.

1527. How far do you take part, professionally, in the medical charge of the lunatics?—In the absence of Dr. Ferguson, whenever there is any occasion for my attendance, I always give it, and, almost in every case, I feel it my duty, in paying my ordinary visits to the wards, to see how matters are going on, and I attend to the patients just as if, in point of fact, I was appointed for that particular purpose. Being a medical man, I consider it my duty to assist and co-operate with Dr. Ferguson as much as I can; and I always do as much as I can to oblige him and serve the lunatics, and he sanctions what I do.

1528. Do you consult together respecting the cases that come into the asylum?—Not upon all occasions. We have not found it necessary with respect to ordinary cases; but when a case of any difficulty comes under my own observation, I call his attention to it.

1529. When cases are first admitted, do you both consult together respecting them?—We do not; for he is very often absent when cases are admitted. His visits are every second day. I think that his average attendance since the opening of the house has been about four visits a week; however he is necessarily often absent when patients come in. Two or three cases of difficulty arose here with regard to the claim of the parties upon the asylum, and upon those occasions I spoke to him and consulted with him about them.

1530. Has the number of applications to the Board for admission been very considerable of late?—The number of applications, I think, has been on the increase latterly.

1531. Have there been many applications from Boards of Guardians for the admission of patients?—There have been some cases sent from the Board of Guardians within the last three or four months. From time to time cases have been sent from Boards of Guardians; indeed some cases have come that I do not think should have been sent to us. There is a case, or perhaps two, of epilepsy in the house, sent from union workhouses. I called Dr. Corrigan's attention to the case of a boy who appears to be perfectly sound in mind; he gets periodical attacks of epilepsy. That boy was sent in here by his friends.

1532. Did not certificates of insanity accompany the boy on admission?—Oh, yes; they always have certificates. You will find in every case, no matter of what description, they require to send in, they contrive to get certificates. The certificate is considered a matter of course in the country—a kind of routine duty. [Witness exhibits the certificate in the case just referred to.]

1533. I observe the certificate states, that he is now, and has been in a state of insanity for several years?—Yes; but he has exhibited no symptoms of insanity since he came into the asylum. He has had two or three attacks of epilepsy.

1534. By whom is the engagement for the removal of a patient signed, in the case of a workhouse lunatic?—If the patient has no friends, which in general is the case, it is signed by the master of the workhouse.

1535. Do you experience any difficulty in getting patients removed from the asylum, under the engagements so given?—We have never made applications to workhouses to have patients returned.

1536. From returns which the Commissioners have received, there appear to be upwards of 100 lunatics and imbeciles in the various workhouses of this district, what number of applications have you had within the last three months from the workhouses for the admission of patients?—I could not exactly state the number we have had within that time; there have not been many, probably about eight.

7537. Has the question of the removal of a pauper lunatic who was sent from the Grand ward workhouse been ever under the consideration of the Board?—It has not come before the Board.
7538. From returns you have furnished to the Commissioners, it appears that forty-five inmates of the asylum, out of 186, are dangerous lunatics, who have been received from gaols?—Yes.
7539. Is the number of cases received in that way large?—Yes.
7540. Do you receive any information with these lunatics as to the previous history of the cases?—Very little. There is no regular history given. The prominent symptoms may be stated in the warrant. We felt very much that deficiency of information at the opening of the asylum.
7541. Is there any other form required to be filled up in the case of an application, beyond what you have shown us?—None other.
- The admission form.
 7542. This form now before us does not contain the list of queries relative to a case usual in other asylums?—That form, I think, or a form very like it, was adopted at the Richmond Asylum. I believe it is as good a form as you could have. No doubt answers would be given to all these queries you refer to.
7543. Do you experience any difficulty in getting dangerous lunatics removed when they may recover, or are fit to leave the asylum?—No difficulty whatever in getting them removed. Dangerous lunatics can be removed on medical certificate; and in every instance where we had to discharge them their friends called for them.
- Paying patients.
 7544. Are there many paying patients in the house?—Two; indeed there was a third admitted as a paying patient, but the money has not been paid by her family.
7545. Are there many cases of application for the admission of paying patients?—Not many latterly.
7546. Are there many applications for the reduction of the sum to be paid after the cases are admitted?—Only one application; and in that case the sum was reduced by the Board from £25 to £15.
7547. Is the Board generally in favour of the admission of paying patients?—I cannot exactly say. There was a difference of opinion on the subject. On the day the matter was mooted the Board were not unanimous in the desire to have them admitted at all. Indeed, as far as I could perceive, the feeling was against their admission.
7548. Do you consider it desirable provision should be made from the public rates where the patients are not able to pay the full amount of the cost of their maintenance?—Certainly; I think there ought to be a provision made for such cases.
7549. Do the Board scrutinize the various cases of application with a view to ascertain whether the parties are paupers or not?—I always require every inquiry to be made. It is my duty, and that of Dr. Ferguson, to make those inquiries.
- Sources of information respecting such cases.
 7550. Considering the distance of some portions of the district from the Asylum, do you find that you are unable to make those inquiries with success?—We cannot make them with success, or in a manner satisfactory to ourselves. We usually rely upon the integrity of the party connected with or promoting the application for admission; for instance, a magistrate in the neighbourhood: we consider a magistrate, whoever he may be, is a man having an interest in the place, and that he affords a great guarantee against any unfair person being sent.
7551. You attach more credit, therefore, to the certificate of poverty than you do to the certificate of insanity?—Certainly, I cannot help acknowledging that.
- Proportion of patients from the counties of the district.
 7552. Do you find that the proportion of patients in the asylum, from the county Westmeath, in which the asylum is situated, is greater than it ought to be with respect to the other counties?—Indeed, I do not think it is. The number is larger, no doubt, from this county than from the other.
7553. From the return you have furnished to the Commissioners there appear to be eighty-six from Westmeath, and sixty-five from Meath—do you consider that a fair proportion?—I think so.
7554. Do you find that applications are more frequent from the vicinity of the asylum than from places at a distance, or otherwise?—I find they are more frequent from the neighbourhood of the asylum.
- Attendance of Governors.
 7555. Is the attendance of Governors usually large enough to enable a Board to be held?—Why, we have had a great many disappointments since the opening of the house, and we have sometimes had a great deal of difficulty in getting a sufficient number to constitute a legal meeting. I was often thinking, myself, it would be very desirable if two gentlemen were legally empowered to hold a meeting.
7556. Do you find the attendance of Governors from Westmeath is larger than that of Governors from the other parts of the district?—Certainly. Only for the Westmeath gentlemen we would be very badly off for attendance on the Board.
- Attendance of the Inspectors at the Board.
 7557. Do the Inspectors attend the Board?—Very often.
- Inspection of the Asylum by the Governors.
 7558. Do they take part in the proceedings?—They do. I never saw any thing like a regular division at the Board. They are, generally speaking, most unanimous in what they do; there may be one gentleman dissenting, but they have never had occasion, I believe, to divide the Board, except once, and that was, I believe, as to the admission of the present.
7559. Have the Governors appointed a Visiting Committee to visit the institution?—No.

1560. Do the Governors, themselves, frequently visit the establishment?—Sometimes they come to visit the establishment—not on Board days; and on Board days they sometimes visit the house, not very often.

1561. Do they go through the several wards and inspect the patients?—No. There were one or two occasions on which, I think, Lord Vaux, and Sir Richard Lovings, and the Bishop, went regularly through the wards. The Inspectors used to come here, and generally go through the house, prior to the meeting. The Board took for granted the house was in a proper state, the Inspectors having gone through it, and their report being before the Board. That would account for the Board, themselves, not visiting.

1562. Do the Inspectors frequently visit the asylum on other occasions besides Board days?—Very often.

1563. Are you generally informed of their approaching visits to the asylum?—Generally, but not regularly.

1564. By whom are the minutes of the proceedings of the Board kept?—By me. I am answerable for them.

1565. In what book do the Inspectors enter their reports?—They generally make their reports on sheets of paper, and they are put upon the general sheet of proceedings of the Board, which is sent up to the Board.

1566. Are the reports of the Inspectors invariably entered in that sheet?—Whenever they make them they are.

1567. Whenever matters come before the Board which require investigation, is there an investigation usually held by the Board themselves, or do they request the Inspectors to investigate?—I do not think any thing came before the Board, requiring investigation, except one matter, about the matron, and that had been previously investigated by the Inspectors. Whenever the Inspectors come into the house they always inquire whether there has been any thing worth bringing under the notice of the Board; and, whenever they found any thing occurred, but which was not of any great importance, they arranged the matter themselves. They would give me directions with regard to omissions on the part of the servants.

1568. In the case to which you have referred—the investigation respecting the matron—was the proceeding subsequently submitted to the Board?—Yes; there was a report drawn up by the Inspector, evidence was taken, and a regular court of inquiry was held by him. He has authority, I believe, to examine upon oath. That was laid before the Board, the report was read, and they adjourned upon it.

1569. Were the Inspectors present on the occasion of the Board receiving that report?—One of them was.

1570. Did that Inspector take part in the proceedings?—Yes, he did.

1571. Were the Board unanimous in the decision arrived at?—Yes, they were unanimous. The Inspector examined witnesses, and scrutinized the matter as closely as he could.

1572. I believe the tendons which are made for the supply of provisions, and other articles for the asylum are transmitted to the Privy Council?—Yes.

1573. Has any delay or inconvenience arisen from that arrangement?—Not in this asylum. We have always found that they do those things in proper time, and never disappoint.

1574. Are all the articles required for the asylum supplied by contract?—They are.

1575. Do you think it advisable that the articles should be supplied by contract?—From my experience, I conceive the best thing that could be done would be to purchase nothing by contract except the food, that is to say, bread, meat, and some other provisions; let as to articles of clothing, I think it would be a great deal better if the manager was allowed to purchase them in the best manner he could, satisfying the Board with respect to the purchases, by producing the receipts of the parties from whom the purchases were made. By that arrangement I think an immense saving could be effected in large establishments like this.

1576. With regard to the chargeability of various inmates who are received—how do you regulate the chargeability of cases coming from the union workhouse?—If a lunatic became insane in the workhouse, we would conceive it right to charge that lunatic upon the county in which the workhouse is situate. If the party was insane prior to entering the workhouse, we would charge that party on the district from which he came. For instance, if a Longford or a Westmeath case went insane into a workhouse in another county, we would fix the chargeability upon the county in which the insanity first occurred. We have a case of the kind at this very moment. Only yesterday, I received a letter from the master of a workhouse, from whom I had made inquiry, by direction of the Board, to know when a party became insane; he said she was insane when she entered the workhouse. She came from Westmeath to the workhouse, and we charge her to Westmeath.

1577. How is the chargeability of dangerous lunatics settled?—They are charged upon the county where the lunacy occurs.

1578. So that a dangerous lunatic coming from Longford would be charged to Longford?—We generally charge the county where the case comes from, the county from whose goal the party was sent. We look to the Lord Lieutenant's warrant to ascertain that.

1579. With reference to the credit to be given for the moneys paid by paying patients—is that credit for the whole establishment, or to the particular county from which the patients came?—We lodge it to the credit of the Governors of the asylum, and it goes into the funds of the asylum, and we never deal with it otherwise.

1580. With regard to paying patients—do you consider the sum to be paid should be a fixed sum, or should be left to the discretion of the Governors?—My opinion is, that you should either have patients paying the full amount for their support and maintenance in the asylum, or nothing at all. I would have nothing between the two, for if the sum varied it would decidedly lead to an abuse. I consider it would be more advantageous to the establishment to have a fixed sum sufficient to cover the expense of the patients, and to admit none as paying patients but those able to pay that fixed sum.

7581. I understand you to suggest that a sum equal to the cost to the asylum of the maintenance of a patient should be required in the case of a paying patient?—Exactly.

7582. And no larger sum?—And no larger sum.

7583. Do I understand your objection to charge a less sum than the actual cost of maintenance to be, that those who would be enabled to pay the full cost of maintenance would endeavour to get their relatives admitted for the lesser sum?—Exactly.

7584. Are the cases of restraint regularly entered in the Daily Statement Book?—Regularly. It is a strange thing that, for the last two months, we had not a single case of restraint.

7585. Is seclusion at all practised?—Very rarely.

7586. What has led to the padded rooms being given up?—Because they were torn, and they were not repaired, and we are obliged to do the best we can without them; and it requires a great deal of labour on the part of the servants to keep the refractory patients quiet.

7587. Have you ever brought under the notice of the Governors the propriety of repairing the padded rooms?—Yes; and there is an estimate provided for having various things done to the asylum, and I think the repairing of the padded rooms is included in that estimate.

7588. As restraint is occasionally practised in the asylum, I presume there are mechanical means for the purpose?—Yes.

7589. In whose custody are they kept?—In my custody, and in Dr. Ferguson's.

7590. They cannot be used without your authority?—So.

7591. In what book do you enter those matters which you desire to bring under the consideration of the Board?—I have no particular book. I enter them on a sheet, which is laid before the Board for their consideration.

7592. Are those separate sheets, on which you enter those communications you desire to make to the Board, duly recorded and preserved?—Yes.

7593. Has the Board of Governors had occasion to carry into effect the provisions of the recent Act for the superannuation of officers?—No.

7594. Is there a clerk and store-keeper attached to the establishment?—Yes.

7595. Does he reside on the premises?—Yes, he does. The late clerk and store-keeper resigned the place two months ago. There is a clerk doing the duty; and the Board made an appointment, pro tem., till a regular appointment is made.

7596. With whom does the appointment of the inferior officers rest?—The Board never interfered with me in making those appointments.

7597. With whom does the removal of the inferior officers rest?—I can suspend or dismiss with the sanction of the Board.

7598. Does any rule exist requiring that persons applying for the appointments of attendants or servants shall be capable of reading or writing, or is there any other test of intelligence?—Yes; the Inspectors are always anxious that persons of that class should be employed, and, as far as I could, I have done so; but, at the opening of the asylum, I was obliged, in one or two instances, to vary the rule. The servants were very excellent servants, though they could not read and write. The majority of the servants do read and write.

7599. Do you find that there is a sufficient quantity of land attached to the establishment for the employment of inmates?—Yes; I think we have had employment enough for them up to the present. We had a great number of patients very much broken down, and who were brought here in a dilapidated state. We have very few able-bodied men able to work—about twenty-four or twenty-five. We work them outside and employ the others in keeping the house clean.

7600. You have heard the evidence given with respect to the defective ventilation—is your concurrence to that evidence?—I fully concur in every word said on the subject.

7601. And likewise with regard to the warming of the asylum?—Yes.

7602. How is the establishment lighted?—With kelp oil.

7603. What sort of bedsteads are generally in use in the house?—Iron bedsteads.

7604. Have you reason to be satisfied with the quality of the articles supplied?—They are not good; they are certainly objectionable.

7605. Have they been broken by the patients?—In some instances.

7606. Have any accidents resulted?—No, except that I got a blow myself from a patient, and was for some time laid up.

7607. What proportion of the inmates are in the habit of attending divine worship?—About ninety-five Roman Catholics, and I should say about seven or eight Protestants.

7608. Are they usually orderly and well behaved?—Very; it is a very extraordinary fact that they are better behaved on those occasions than at other times; they feel a kind of control over them while they are in the chapel. It is really interesting to see the control they exercise over themselves during that period.

7609. Have the chaplains access to any of the inmates they may desire to see?—Always.

7610. Supposing there was a patient in such a state of health that either you or Dr. Ferguson was of opinion that conversation with him on religious matters would not be advisable, what course would you adopt?—I would consider it my duty to inform the clergyman that it would not be advisable for him to communicate with the patient, indeed, the clergymen, from being in the habit of seeing the patients frequently, would form an opinion themselves as to whether they should visit or not. They are very cautious.

7611. Is there much employment for the female inmates?—We have a great deal of employment for them. The supply of clothing was very short, and we have had them making up clothing.

7612. Is all the clothing required for the establishment made up in the house?—All the clothing for the establishment is made up in the house.

7613. For the males as well as the females?—Yes, except shoes, which are made outside. I was obliged, on two or three occasions, to buy stockings for them, and, at one time, some ready-made shirts.

7614. Are many men employed at tailoring?—There is only one man competent to work, and he is very useful.

7615. Does that one man make up all the clothing for the male inmates?—I have two men from the town, whom I employ at so much a-week, in the house. The other man assists.

7616. Then I understand your answer to the question, whether all the clothing was made up in the house, did not refer to its being made up by the inmates?—No. There is one tailor in the asylum able to work, and he is always working.

7617. I believe there is a basement story in this building?—Yes.

7618. What use is made of that?—It was originally intended that it should be a coal depot, and for keeping farming utensils, and another part was intended for workshops. At the eastern side there is a large room intended as a workshop for shoemaking. I do not know exactly what they were intended for originally, but I know that one was pointed out particularly as a shoemaker's shop.

The basement story.

7619. How are they at present occupied?—There is one of them used for drying clothes, wet sheets, and blankets, that are washed. We keep a large fire in the place to dry those things. There is a good deal of timber, and one thing or another, about the house, which are in the other small rooms.

7620. Is there any number of patients employed on the basement story?—Yes, there are two or three, making mats occasionally.

7621. Is it, in your opinion, sufficiently dry to be so occupied?—Certainly.

7622. Are there lavatories in each of the divisions?—Yes.

7623. Are there baths in each of the divisions?—There are. In number three, the eastern corridor, we have a shower bath and a plunge bath. We should have one in each corridor. It is very inconvenient to take No. 1 patients, to whom we might want to give a shower bath, and have to bring them the whole extent of the house.

Lavatories and baths.

7624. Do the inmates get a bath at regular periods?—They are washed. Some are obliged to get baths every morning, according to circumstances. Some are dirtier than others.

Alutions of the patients.

7625. Have the inmates their hands and faces washed every day?—Yes, and their feet and bodies washed on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

7626. There are water-closets in each division?—Yes.

7627. Are they in working order?—Yes. We do our best to keep them in working order.

The water-closets; the coverings.

7628. Is the sewerage of the establishment, in your opinion, effective?—I do not think, as far as I could perceive, there is any defect in it. There are cess-pools at the extreme end of the house, and they were never emptied since the opening of the establishment. The fill is perfect from the main. There are several small drains from the water-closets, and when the water-closets get out of order they are obliged to open those places to see the cause of the stoppage. The pipes are too small, but so far as the construction of the large drain is concerned I look upon it to be perfect.

7629. Practically, has any inconvenience been experienced arising from the sewerage since the house was opened?—There has. There is a bad smell often discovered in the house when the wind is from the east. The main drain, no doubt, takes away every thing from the house.

The means of venting.

7630. Are fires kept up in the corridors throughout the winter?—Yes.

7631. These fire-places are stated to be in the outer walls—would they heat the corridors sufficiently?—Not in very cold weather.

7632. You do not consider the house sufficiently heated in winter?—There is no adequate provision made for heating it in winter, and we are obliged to put double suits of blankets on.

7633. Are there any thermometers in use in the house to ascertain the temperature?—No.

7634. From returns the Commissioners have received, it appears that upwards of 297 tons of coal, and 260 boxes of turf were used in the asylum in 1856?—Yes.

Consumption of fuel.

7635. Do you still consider that during the winter portion of the year the house was not sufficiently heated?—I do think we should have had a little more firing. This season, I think, the amount of fuel consumed will be a good deal more. I have not been sparing of it as I was before. After the opening of the asylum the Governors were objecting to the expense, which led to my curbing the supply of fuel.

Want of an infirmary.

7636. It has been stated that there is no infirmary in the asylum?—There is not.

7637. Do you consider there is a necessity for an infirmary?—No establishment with over 100 patients, I think, should be without one. It is one of our greatest wants.

7638. Is the house damp?—It is very damp. There is a very great objection to be made to the flagging of the house generally. It is of some hard kind of flint-stone, and

- the wet remains very long upon it. The state of the passages upon a very wet day is very bad. The flagging ought to be removed for it renders the houses very unwholesome.
7639. Is the supply of cold water sufficient?—It is quite sufficient.
7640. How is it worked up?—By the patients.
7641. Is there a supply of hot water available for the house?—It is available at times, after a great deal of difficulty. There is a delay of four hours before water can be procured for a warm bath. I had a correspondence with the Board of Works on the subject. It requires 4 cwt. of coals to heat the boiler. The boiler apparatus for heating is on the top corridor of the house, and a supply of hot water is not always available for the purpose of warm baths on the lower floor, as by the time the water comes down it is tepid.
7642. What furniture is there in the day rooms?—There are forms in the day rooms, and dining tables.
7643. Are there any chairs with backs?—There are a few that we give to epileptic and weak patients.
7644. I believe there is a chapel set apart for divine worship?—Yes.
- The chapel.
 7645. Is the service of both churches, Protestant and Catholic, celebrated in that chapel?—It has been so till very lately. The Rev. Mr. Hopkins, the Protestant chaplain, got cold in the chapel, and he requested that I would make provision for him in some other place more comfortable, and so I did. I put him into a room with a fire; but it is understood both services are to be performed in the chapel.

BELFAST LUNATIC ASYLUM.

Robert SKIRROW, Esq., M.D., sworn and examined.

By Your District
Clerk,
Robert Stewart,
Esq., M.D.

1646. What appointment do you hold in the Belfast District Lunatic Asylum?—Resident Physician.

1647. How long have you held that appointment?—My appointment took place in the year 1835.

1648. Were you previously connected in any way with the institution?—Not in any way.

1649. What counties are attached to the Belfast District Asylum?—The counties of Down and Antrim, and the county of the town of Carrickfergus.

Counties in the district.

1650. What medical officers are attached to the institution?—The visiting physician Dr. Henry McCormac, and the visiting surgeon Dr. James Moore.

Medical officers.

1651. I believe the appointment which you yourself hold is that which is known in the regulations as manager?—That was the original appointment.

1652. Do you attend the meetings of the Board, and take minutes of their proceedings?—Regularly.

The minutes and correspondence of the Board.

1653. Is the correspondence of the Board carried on by you under their direction?—By me, under their direction.

1654. How often do the Board meet for the transaction of business?—There are regular meetings on the first Monday of each month.

1655. Is there usually a sufficient number of members present to constitute a quorum?—Always. Three constitute a quorum. The average attendance is seven or eight; the Board is very well attended.

Attendance of Governors at the Board meetings.

1656. Has the attendance been equally good from the county of Down as from the county of Antrim?—In proportion, I think it is. There is a larger number of members from the county of Antrim than from the county of Down; and I suppose one reason for the attendance of members from the county of Antrim is, that they reside near to the institution.

1657. Are both counties fairly represented throughout the year at the Board?—I rather think Down is not so fairly represented as Antrim is, and I will explain that by stating that the number of Governors from Down is not so large.

1658. Do you keep a general registry as required by the Privy Council regulations?—We do.

Keeping of the books required by the regulations to be kept.

1659. Do you keep a medical journal also?—We keep a medical journal.

1660. Is the medical journal kept by you or by Dr. McCormac?—It is kept by me.

1661. Is the morning statement book regularly kept?—Regularly.

1662. Are the cases of restraint regularly entered?—They are.

1663. In the case of continuing restraint for several successive days, is an entry made each day of the restraint?—When the entry is made it is continued on.

1664. Is it repeated each day?—Generally, so I think.

1665. Does the morning statement book, in fact, contain an accurate statement of the condition of the patients so far as the law requires it should?—It does.

1666. In what manner do you bring before the Board any representation which you may desire to make to them, verbally or by any memorandum?—Verbally.

1667. There is no memorandum kept?—None but the minute book.

1668. No such book as that required by the 16th section of the regulations: "A memorandum book to be laid before each Board, in which an entry shall be made of all matters to be submitted for consideration as well as for all communications from the manager to the Board, in order that such communications may remain on record with the decision of the Board thereon, to be noted in the margin by the chairman"?—Those matters are all entered in the minute book.

1669. The minutes being a record of the proceedings of the Board, would they necessarily contain these matters that you desired to bring under the consideration of the Board, and upon which no proceeding was taken?—There is never any matter brought by me before the Board, but something is stated in the minutes as to what is the result.

1670. Is there an accountant attached to the establishment?—There is; he is called clerk and storekeeper. He does all the business connected with the accounts.

The Clerk and Storekeeper.

1671. Does he reside in the house?—He does.

1672. Are the provisions regularly inspected by you on their coming into the house?—I do occasionally see them, but they are regularly inspected by the clerk. I see them myself also day by day.

Inspection of the provisions.

1673. Are you satisfied that your inspection is sufficiently frequent to insure proper provisions being generally received?—I consider it is.

1674. When applications are made for admission to the asylum, is each case considered by the Board on the appointed days of meeting?—Each case is considered.

Admission of patients; inquiry respecting their means.

1675. What inquiry is made with reference to the condition in life of the applicant, as regards his poverty or his means of paying for his maintenance in a private asylum?—An affidavit is made by the parties wishing to have him or her admitted. It is conclusive on that point.

Salford District
Asylum.Robert Stewart,
Esq., M.D.Admission of idiots and epileptics.Lunatics above the class of paupers;
what becomes of them.

7676. Is no further step taken?—Occasionally; individual Governors may have had reason to think the parties could pay in a private asylum, and there have been encouraged accordingly. They made special inquiry on the subject. That is however an exception to the rule, and an exception which does not occur often.

7677. Are paying patients received into the asylum?—They are not.

7678. Are idiots and epileptics received into the asylum as well as the ordinary lunatics?—They are.

7679. I presume from your acquaintance with the district of Antrim and Down, you are enabled to state whether you consider there is any large class of lunatics able to pay some portion of the annual expense of their maintenance in the asylum, and who are not received into this institution?—I do not think there is any large class at all in that position; that is my private opinion on the matter. There are many who are apparently very independent, yet to take from them such a sum of money as would be required here if paying patients were admitted, £32 a year, to take that, from their means of supporting themselves and their families, would almost put them into a condition of poverty. That is my opinion on the matter, and from inquiries I made myself on the subject, I do not think there is a large class of patients that would be able to pay a small proportion of the expense of their maintenance.

7680. Are there private asylums in the district?—Not in this district. There is one immediately on the borders of it at Armagh.

7681. Can you give the Commissioners any idea of what usually becomes of the class of lunatics above the condition of paupers?—If they are able to pay the lowest cost in a private asylum they are sent to it; for instance, in Scotland there are several institutions that receive patients for between £30 and £40 a-year, and the minimum scale of charge at Armagh is low; and if the parties are not able to pay the lowest cost, they come here.

7682. It appears that in the whole north of Ireland there is only one private asylum, which is in the vicinity of Armagh: do you consider the lunatics of the class above paupers are usually provided for in Scotland?—I know of many patients sent there. It is convenient to send patients there. The asylums in Scotland are all of a mixed class, having both boarders and paupers.

7683. What is your opinion as to the advisability or otherwise of admitting paying patients into this asylum?—My opinion is very decided upon it. I consider it would be very wrong to do so—that it would interfere very much with the management and comfort of the institution, which should be altogether set apart for its own purpose, that of receiving pauper lunatics.

7684. State the grounds of your opinion?—I think the reception of paying patients would produce jealousy amongst the other patients if they were mixed. If those who were not paid for saw the others who were paying getting any thing that you would not ordinarily give, they would suppose it was a difference you were making because the one class was paid for. I think it would also open the door to an abuse in another way. The friends of the paying patients might endeavour to suborn attendants and servants to get them to do so and so. Various matters of detail of that kind would be certainly more or less injurious to the harmony and good working of the institution. I think it would be a mixture, any thing at all but desirable, that is to have the paying patients mixing in ordinary with the regular pauper patients. It would be injurious unless there was an entirely separate establishment.

7685. Is your asylum at present full?—It is. In fact we have a larger number than the Commissioners who were appointed a couple of years ago calculated, according to the space usually allotted to patients, it would contain. They did not make the number out at more than 315, but we have at the present time between 336 and 340. There is a pressure rather upon the accommodation, requiring a larger number of beds to be put into the dormitories.

7686. Is the number of applications at each meeting considerable?—The number varies; sometimes there will be as many as a dozen, and sometimes less. At the last meeting of the Board there were twelve applications. I should mention, too, that besides the ordinary mode of admitting cases coming before the Board at the regular meeting, we also admit what are called urgent cases between one meeting of the Board and another, cases certified by three members of the Board as urgent. Cases admitted in that way also come before the Governors to be examined in order to ascertain that every thing is correct.

7687. Is the number of applications such as to lead you to believe the accommodation is not sufficient for the wants of the district?—I think ultimately it will not be sufficient. I think the cases will accumulate again to more than we can admit. At the same time I think this institution is quite large enough. In my opinion no institution ought to exceed the number we have at present. In fact I think a smaller number would be better, for accumulating too large a number of patients in an establishment is considered by practical men most objectionable.

7688. Do you receive the lunatics from the goals as soon as the order is transmitted for their removal?—Almost immediately; if there be vacancies they are taken in at once.

7689. Have many lunatics been sent here from the workhouse?—Not a great many; they do come in occasionally, but they are comparatively few. They sent in those cases that become violent and unmanageable with them.

7690. The mode of admission for patients from the workhouse does not differ, I believe, from that for the community at large?—No, they fill up the papers in the ordinary way.

7691. Are you aware that any difficulty has arisen in preparing the proper papers in the workhouse for the transmission of lunatics?—I have heard the master of the workhouse here state casually that they have occasionally experienced difficulties in some cases.

7692. Can you furnish the Commissioners with a copy of the form of admission?—I can. [Same is delivered in].

7694. Are you enabled to comply with the requisition of the workhouse authorities for the admission of their inmates whenever they send them?—We are, from the way that we have managed with the workhouse here; we make an exchange; we send some harmless cases in lieu of those we take from them.

7695. From returns the Commissioners have received it appears there were, on the 1st January, eighty-eight lunatics in the Belfast Workhouse, fifty-nine of whom were maniacal; is it your opinion a considerable proportion of those cases at least should have been removed into the lunatic asylum?—I should suppose so. I am not aware how long they were ill, or any thing of that kind; but if they were only for a short period, undoubtedly, their chance of recovery or improvement would have been much better if they had been sent here rather than allowed to remain in the workhouse. I think a workhouse a most improper place for any case of the kind, even of the most intractable class. According to their regulations they have no proper way of looking after them.

7696. Have you ever received applications from the other workhouses in the counties of Antrim and Down?—We do occasionally.

7697. There appear to be twenty-one lunatics, nine of whom are maniacs, in the Newtownards Workhouse; have you had applications recently from that workhouse?—Not recently; we had formerly, and received the cases.

7698. There appear to be twenty cases in the Larne Workhouse, one of whom is a maniac; have you had any applications from that workhouse?—We have had, but not recently.

7699. I believe the two unions I have mentioned adjoin the union of Belfast?—Larne is a considerable distance, about eighteen miles, from Belfast; but the two unions are in one district in the county of Antrim.

7700. From your acquaintance with the counties of Down and Antrim, what is your opinion as to the extent of lunacy unprovided for in either asylums or workhouses: do you think there is any considerable number at large?—I believe in the unions generally the cases there would amount to between 200 and 300; but I cannot form any opinion about the other cases at large.

7701. From returns the Commissioners have received, it is computed there are 260 idiots in the district who are not in the asylum or in workhouses—how far do you consider it would be advisable that claim should be received into some place of detention?—Unless there was positive evidence of their being dangerous to themselves, or others, I would allow them to have their liberty; that is, if they were harmless, and if they had friends that would look after them.

7702. Although it may be objectionable to detain lunatics in workhouses, do you consider that class of idiots might, generally speaking, be left, with advantage, in a workhouse?—I think it would be desirable to have them all taken out of workhouses. I do not think the workhouses suitable even for that class. They might be improved if they were placed under a judicious system of care and treatment.

7703. Have you ever had occasion in this asylum to put the Superannuation Act, which was passed last year, into operation?—It has not been put into operation; but there are several old servants in the place whom it would be desirable to superannuate, and who would be anxious, I believe, for it; but they were disappointed rather with the way in which it was ultimately regulated.

7704. Do you mean that the scale of superannuation was not such as was expected?—Yes. It was put under the Civil Service, and was so very small that they would rather hold on as long as they possibly could, in the expectation of its being made something more liberal than what was originally intended.

7705. Previously to that Act there was no power of superannuation whatever?—None, whatever; but they were looking forward to it. Some years ago the Governors applied to the Lord Lieutenant on the subject, representing the great desirability of having a means of superannuation for servants and officers.

7706. Do you consider that there are servants in the establishment whose removal would be an advantage, in consequence of their being unequal to the discharge of their duties?—I think so. I think there are one or two at present.

7707. Do you find the salaries given are sufficient to secure the services of competent attendants?—I consider the payments should be a little more liberal. There is an objection to heavy expense, but I think that such money is well laid out. They are underpaid, in my opinion, for the peculiar duties they have to perform here. Their duties are really very onerous, by day and by night. It often surprises me that we are able to get the duties performed that are done, for the pay which is received.

7708. Are the attendants usually capable of reading and writing?—The major part of them. We endeavour, as far as possible, to get those who are able to read and write. The great majority of the attendants do read and write.

7709. Does any inquiry or examination take place previous to the appointment of attendants with reference to their proficiency?—We are always very particular in finding out their moral and general conduct.

7710. And as to their intelligence and general education?—Yes.

7711. Is the quantity of land attached to the asylum sufficient to afford means of employment for the lunatics who are able to work?—I consider it is ample; there are, I think, about fifty statute acres.

7712. I believe this asylum has been erected upwards of twenty-five years?—It commenced operations in 1829.

7713. Has it not been considerably enlarged since that time?—It has undergone two enlargements: it was enlarged in 1835, another enlargement commenced in 1852, and it is just now about being completed.

7714. Have the enlargements which have taken place been carried out without interfering with the proper arrangement of the building?—Yes; the last enlargement that took place rather improved the classification.

Ventilation.

7715. Is there any artificial means for ventilation?—In the new building there is, in the old building there is not. The Governors wished the ventilation of it to be improved, but the architect said that owing to the structural arrangement it is impossible to accomplish it by any artificial means; but the new buildings are well provided for in that respect.

7716. Do you think the arrangements made in the new buildings work satisfactorily?—I think so.

Arrangements for working.

7717. Do you find the ventilation of the old building far inferior to that of the new building?—Yes; but there has been a good deal done to improve it.

7718. What are the arrangements for warming the building?—Open fire-places.

7719. Are there fire-places in all the corridors?—Yes, and in the day-rooms.

7720. Are there open fire-places in the old upper galleries?—Not in the galleries; but in the rooms off the galleries. There are open fire-places in the basement corridors.

7721. Are there ever fires in the fire-places you speak of?—Occasionally, in very damp and severe weather.

7722. Are there galleries, with cells adjoining, without any fire-places?—The basement galleries have all fire-places, and the upper galleries have no fire-places in them; but there are fire-places in the dormitories of the old building. In the upper gallery the rooms consist of small dormitories that hold four each, and each of those apartments has a fire-place.

7723. Are there fires in them in the winter?—No, unless it is necessary. There are fire-places in which fires can be lighted when necessary.

7724. In point of fact, these galleries and corridors that you speak of now are without fire-places, although there are fire-places in the adjoining dormitories, and it is the exception and not the rule that there should be fires in those places?—Yes, that is the case.

Inefficient heating.

7725. Do you think that arrangement affords sufficient warmth?—I do not think it does. I brought the matter officially before the Board, and they took it up and brought it before the Board of Works, desiring that there should be other means of warming provided besides the open fire-places; but the Board of Works declined to do any thing. Before that we had an arrangement for warming the place by means of steam, and that has been done away with altogether; there was also a means of warming by hot water. There was a large sum of money laid out, £500, some years ago, for heating the corridors and sleeping-rooms in that way; however, the arrangement was found insufficient, and it never warmed well, and has been entirely given up. I do not think we are sufficiently provided with warmth in winter. It is a matter of the greatest importance in the treatment of the insane to have the temperature comfortable.

The sewerage.

7726. Is the sewerage of the house in good order?—I think so; I have no reason to think there is any defect; it has been very particularly attended to.

7727. What kind of bedding is generally used?—For the most part straw; with the clean convalescent patients we use cocoa-nut fibre, and also curled hair.

The beds.

7728. How have you found the cocoa-nut fibre to answer?—Not at all; it gets into hard lumps, and requires to be teased. There is no better thing for them than the curled hair. It is very lasting and clean. The Board of Works supplied cocoa-nut fibre without asking any question here on the subject.

The Board of Works and the furnishing of the new building.

7729. Am I to understand that the Board of Works sent down cocoa-nut fibre beds on their own authority, and without any requisition?—It was in connexion with the furniture of the new building.

7730. Then in the furnishing of the new building, I understand from your answer, that neither the medical authorities of the institution, nor the Governors, were consulted in any way as to what was to be supplied?—They were not.

7731. What is your opinion as to the use of straw generally for bedding?—Well, I think it is a very clean, comfortable bed; when we get the straw good it makes a comfortable bed.

7732. Is it the kind of bed generally used amongst the lower classes?—Yes, it is what they are accustomed to, and many of them prefer it.

Classification.

7733. What classification is made of the inmates of the institution?—The classification we observe is not with reference to their disease, but rather with reference to their general behaviour and conduct. We may look upon cases as being chronic, and incurable, or curable, but it is according to how they conduct themselves, and how they behave, that we classify them.

The Manager and the Visiting Physician;
the medical treatment.

7734. Do you take any part in the medical treatment of the cases?—Yes, in common with Dr. McCormac.

7735. That is a duty you perform under the impression that your appointment was made in consequence of your being a medical man?—Yes, ultimately, but not originally.

7736. The Prisy Council regulations do not require the manager to be a medical man to undertake such duties?—In the first instance they did not, but for some years past they have made that a vis guar non, that he should be a medical man.

7737. When a patient is first received into the asylum, is he examined by you or by Dr. M'Cormac, or both together?—He is examined by me. It is a matter of accident that Dr. M'Cormac is here, when a case comes in.

7738. Who determines the course of treatment which is to be pursued with reference to insane patients, you or Dr. M'Cormac?—If there is nothing very remarkable in the case it comes under my particular care. If there is any bodily ailment of a serious nature Dr. M'Cormac sees the patient also; but each case comes under my direction with regard to the general moral treatment of it.

7739. Supposing the law to be altered, and to require what seems to be the invariable practice of late, namely, that the manager of such an institution should be a medical man, do you consider the responsibility of treating the cases for their insanity should rest with him or with the visiting physician?—I consider it ought to rest with the resident physician.

7740. Do you consider it would be advisable under those circumstances to have a visiting physician?—My opinion is, that it would be advisable to have a consulting physician, when serious cases arise, upon which it would be well to have the opinion of a professional brother in general practice.

7741. Would you leave it to the option of the resident medical attendant to call in a consulting physician or not?—I am afraid that would place the resident medical man in rather an invidious position. Some Governors might consider he was putting the institution to too great expence. It would be perhaps better to have him a paid officer, who would come to see such cases as the resident physician would like to have his opinion upon.

7742. Am I to understand you would be favourable to the appointment of a consulting physician with a salary?—Yes, I think that would be a most satisfactory arrangement.

7743. What duties does the surgeon of the institution perform, are they merely of a surgical character, or does he also discharge the duties of apothecary?—He discharges the duties of both.

7744. Then there is no separate officer as apothecary?—No, the one officer performs both duties, surgical and pharmaceutical. We have a surgery in the establishment.

7745. How frequent is the attendance of the visiting physician?—Three times a-week.

7746. And of the surgeon?—The surgeon the same number of visits, or according to circumstances. He sometimes comes every day.

7747. Supposing medicines were required to be compounded in the absence of the surgeon, how would you provide for that?—I make them up myself. Where there is a resident medical officer, of course there would not be any loss or difficulty in that way. I may be premature in offering any opinion with reference to that particular branch of the subject, but I would remark that I consider in such an establishment as this it might be desirable to have a resident medical officer, such as is usually in all such establishments in England, a medical assistant upon the spot, who would be at hand at all times.

7748. Is there an infirmary attached to the institution?—There is.

7749. Is it used as an infirmary?—It is.

7750. Is it reserved exclusively for the cases of patients labouring under disease?—Yes.

7751. Is that the case on both the male and female side?—On both the male and female sides. There are some individual cases it would not answer to put into an infirmary. These are exceptional cases. The arrangement was not in operation when the Commissioners visited the asylum but; it has been since established.

7752. Your opinion is, I presume, therefore, favourable to the treatment of lunatic patients in the infirmary when they are labouring under illness?—For the most part it is desirable, with the exception of cases to which I have alluded—cases that would disturb the other patients.

7753. With regard to the moral treatment of the inmates, is that left entirely to you?—Yes.

7754. What arrangements are made for the amusement of the patients?—They very frequently have a dance to music; some play upon the piano, others upon the violin. Dancing is a very popular amusement here, and they enjoy it frequently.

7755. How frequently do these dances take place?—In the winter, perhaps, every evening, more or less, amongst some of the patients.

7756. Are there any games played by them, such as draughts, or have they any books?—They have a variety of light reading.

7757. Do you consider the occupation of the mind valuable in the treatment of lunatic cases?—Where the patients are capable of appreciating the reading and finding amusement in it it is, of course very important. You are to recollect that they are for the most part uneducated. Amongst many, even of the educated persons, the last thing they will do is to read.

7758. Is any clinical instruction given in the asylum by any medical man?—There is no special clinical instruction given. About a-year ago, the Governors passed a resolution authorizing senior medical students who were required for the East India Service, or were preparing for it, to come in—however, we have not had any attending here. The object of the resolution was to meet the want of instruction in such matters.

7759. Have the Board ever had under consideration the propriety of having clinical clerks who should be accommodated in the establishment?—No.

7760. It would appear from returns which the Commissioners have received, that a very large proportion of the inmates of this institution are incurable?—Yes, that is the case here, is common with all such establishments.

RELEASE.

Belmont District
Asylum.Robert Stewart, Esq., M.D.Propriety of having a separate institution for incurables.

7761. It would appear that out of 330 inmates only 74 are considered curable?—Yes.
7762. The number of vacancies, therefore, which the institution can offer to the district depends upon the number of cures that may take place out of 74 inmates, or the deaths amongst the incurables?—Yes.

7763. Have you ever considered the advisability or otherwise of having a separate institution for the incurables?—Well, I have. I think it would be very desirable that this establishment should be kept apart or separate for recent cases, and also chronic cases of insanity, as distinguished from paralytic, and idiotic, and epileptic cases: all such cases which, I may say, are considered incurable, and having a kind of vegetative existence, it would be very desirable to separate from those two classes of the insane that I have mentioned.

7764. I understand you would desire to see such an institution as this asylum reserved for the acute cases, which require particular care and treatment?—Yes, so that they would enjoy the advantages and comforts of an institution like this, with the view to their cure.

Effect of removal to such an institution
upon the patients.

7765. Do you consider the class you would contemplate removing to the asylum for incurable cases would be injuriously affected by the knowledge that they were transferred to such a place?—I would not remove cases that would be likely to consider that. There is a very large class who would not consider such a matter, persons who have a mere animal existence; while, on the other hand, there are persons here whose cases are chronic since the institution was opened, but whose removal would be a cruelty.

Site for separate
Asylum.

7766. Supposing separate institutions to be provided for the cases which you contemplate removing, do you consider it would be advisable to have them on the same grounds as the existing asylums, or in distinct localities. I am putting the case generally?—In distinct localities.

7767. For what reason do you consider it would be particularly desirable to have them in distinct localities?—I think it would be better to have the cases in them altogether separated; for within the same walls, let your supervision be what it may, they would be mixing with each other, and they should be kept entirely and altogether apart. Every thing should be done to keep up hope in them, which is a great matter in cases capable of having such feelings as you speak of. Many of them, when they come in here, however, think that they will remain in the asylum all their lives.

Necessity for a
officers.

7768. Supposing this establishment for incurables to be placed in a distinct locality, I presume you would necessarily require a staff for it nearly as large as the staff of the original asylum, that is, allowing the same number of patients to each?—I do not think that would be required. The class of cases to which I refer are generally harmless, and a large number could be managed by a small number of attendants.

7769. The grounds which you have stated for the removal of such cases are of a character that would make it proper that the additional expense should be incurred?—Of course. I know, with reference to epileptics, that they are a very troublesome class to mind, and very dangerous, and would require very particular supervision. Where epilepsy is complicated with insanity, one patient will give more trouble, I find, than twenty other patients.

7770. A staff of medical attendants would still be required for such an institution, it being in a distinct locality?—Of course.

Attendance of Governors at an incurable institution.

7771. Do you think it would be so easy to secure the attendance of Governors for an institution which might be considered somewhat of a condemned character as well as at the curative hospital?—Well, I would suppose so, that their feelings of benevolence would naturally lead them to give their ears to human beings so unfortunately circumstanced.

7772. Would you place the proposed institution under the same Board as the original asylum?—I would see no objection to that. I think the existing Board would be better qualified to take charge of it.

Supply of baths in the Asylum.

7773. Is this asylum properly provided with baths for the use of the inmates?—It is. The last addition to the asylum provided us amply in that way. I would, myself, think it desirable we should have a shower bath in each corridor, which we have not. We have only one shower bath on each side; and I think that is a deficiency.

7774. In addition to the ordinary ablution, do the inmates get a bath each week?—They do. Every patient in the house gets a warm bath once a week. That is the standing rule.

7775. Can the shower-bath be used without your knowledge?—No.

The instruments of restraint.

7776. Do you keep the instruments of mechanical restraint?—Yes; they are not allowed to be used without my authority.

7777. By the 23rd section of the Privy Council regulations, the manager is directed to take charge of all the instruments of restraint; and is not, under any pretence, to allow the unauthorized use of them to any person within the establishment: do you not upon that regulation?—There is no mechanical restraint allowed to be used without my authority.

7778. Does that quite fulfil the condition of taking charge of the instruments of restraint which is the most effective means of preventing them being used without authority?—I consider so. I do not profess to keep them under direct look and key myself.

7779. Is mechanical restraint much used?—No, it is the exception to the rule.

7780. In what book are the cases of restraint recorded?—In the Medical Journal.

7781. Is there any entry made for each case each day?—It is made for each case, according as the cases of restraint occur.

7782. Is the Medical Journal made out each day?—It is.

Record of cases of restraint.

7783. Are the cases of restraint entered in the Daily Statement Book?—Not in the Daily Statement Book.

7784. Will you refer to the form of the Daily Statement Book, as approved by the Privy Council?—Yes; that form was done away with by the Act which required the Medical Journal to be kept, and the cases of restraint to be marked down in it.

7785. On what ground do you say the Act has done away with the former book, which is still in use in every other asylum in Ireland?—The Act of Parliament is more binding than any thing else on the subject.

7786. Can you refer to any clause of the Act by which the keeping of the Daily Statement Book was done away with?—I cannot, but that was the time the Medical Journal came into use, and then entering such cases in two places was considered unnecessary.

7787. Is not the Medical Journal a statement differing materially from what is required to be entered in the Daily Statement Book?—It has a distinct head of the general state of the institution.

7788. Is there not also this difference that one requires to be kept daily, and the other is not required to be kept daily?—The Daily Statement Book requires to be kept daily.

7789. Are there any padded rooms?—Yes, there are two upon each side.

7790. Are they much used?—Oh yes, we find them very useful. They were not in operation at the time the Commissioners were here, about six months ago; since then they have been put up by the Board of Works, although they had been applied for nearly two years before that.

7791. Are they padded or panelled rooms?—The door is padded, and the room itself is panelled or boarded. That is the plan they adopted themselves. They did not consult the authorities here upon the subject; but, however, I think it answers the purpose. Where the rooms are padded throughout, the patients very frequently tear the padding and destroy it.

7792. Is there a school in the asylum?—No.

7793. Is any religious instruction given in the asylum?—There is not. If a patient desires to be visited by a clergyman of his or her persuasion, and that it is considered such visit will not cause any undue excitement in the patient, the clergyman is allowed to visit. We had clergymen attending here, whom the Governors permitted to attend, although they did not consider themselves bound to do so; however, that attendance has now ceased altogether, and we have fallen back upon the original rules and regulations.

7794. Do you mean the original rules and regulations of the Privy Council?—No, not of the Privy Council, of the Board themselves. I believe the Board considered they were acting on the original rules and regulations as to the attendance of clergymen for which they made provision.

7795. Am I to understand that if a patient expresses a wish to be attended by a clergyman of his or her persuasion, that the clergyman will be allowed to visit?—Precisely so.

7796. Is there any regular service performed here on Sundays by the minister of any church?—No, there is not.

7797. Has it ever been the case?—It was the case for nearly two years.

7798. By what clergymen were services performed in this asylum?—There were three clergymen, the Roman Catholic clergyman, the Presbyterian clergyman, and the clergyman of the Established Church.

7799. Do you refer now to a period, subsequent to the order in Council, with reference to the appointment of chaplains?—I speak of the clergymen appointed by the Lord Lieutenant.

7800. Previous to that period were any clergymen of any church in the habit of attending to read Divine Service in the asylum?—No.

7801. Were there any prayers or assemblies for religious purposes of any kind in the house on Sundays before the appointment of these chaplains by the Lord Lieutenant?—I used, myself, to assemble them for prayers, and read a portion of the Scriptures for them.

7802. For the inmates generally?—For the inmates generally, that is, the Protestant portion of them.

7803. If an inmate of the asylum were in a dying state, would you consider it your duty to send for the clergyman of his persuasion to attend him, although he had not expressed any wish on the subject?—No, I would not, unless the patient appeared capable of understanding any thing in that way; if the patient made no application for a clergyman I would not consider it my duty to do so. There have been exceptional cases in which clergymen have been sent for without the patients' asking for them.

7804. What led to a different course being pursued in these cases?—I may mention one of them that occurred lately; it was that of a Roman Catholic priest, and his own friends seemed to wish that a clergyman should see him, even when he was in the asylum here ordinarily; but he would never permit the visit of a clergyman to him. On one occasion a clergyman went to see him, and when he went into the room he flew at him, and squared at him, and nearly knocked him down. However, when he got an attack of apoplexy, and was in a dying state, we thought that, under the circumstances of the case, it would be satisfactory to his friends that it should be notified to the Roman Catholic bishop of the diocese that the patient was struck with apoplexy, and that if he thought it desirable a clergyman should see him he would be admitted. A clergyman came, but the patient's consciousness did not return.

7805. What are the peculiar circumstances of the other cases that led to a departure from the general rule or practice you have stated?—There was a patient, with respect to whom we were doubtful as to whether the attendance of the clergyman would produce a good effect, or not, upon her. She had indistinctly talked about seeing a clergyman; and we thought that, under the circumstances, it would be well to see what effect the attendance of a clergyman would produce upon her. When the clergyman came she did not seem to wish for any particular conversation or communion with him.

1806. Then I am to understand it is left entirely to the intelligence of those inmate inmates to determine whether or not they shall have religious ministrations?—Precisely so.

1807. I presume there are inmates of various religious persuasions in this asylum?—There are.

1808. Was any place of worship ever provided for the inmates of the asylum?—Yes, there is a place called "the chapel;" it was never used as such.

1809. Was it built for a chapel?—It was set apart for a chapel; it was arranged for it. It was previously a part of the building here, and was subsequently set apart specially for a chapel. It is not a new building.

1810. Was it arranged for a chapel by direction of the Governors, or by direction of the Executive?—By direction of the Executive—the Board of Works. The Governors were against having any such place.

1811. What is your own opinion, after the experience you have had in charge of this institution, as to the advisability or otherwise, of having religious ministrations provided for the patients?—Well, I think bringing in clergymen for them in the mass, and where there are a great many persuasions, as there are here, is decidedly objectionable.

1812. Do you mean that there is a risk of theological controversies arising because of clergymen of different persuasions attending the institution?—Well, the patients themselves have their strong religious feelings; and seeing different clergymen coming in is apt to excite them; for instance, a Roman Catholic patient seeing a clergyman of the Established Church coming in, it would cause feelings in him that it would be desirable should not exist; or a Protestant patient seeing a Roman Catholic priest, would have very strong feelings on the subject.

1813. I believe the law provides that chaplains shall be appointed in workhouses and gaols?—I believe so.

1814. Do you consider that lunatics should be left without that provision?—I think it is quite sufficient, as in individual cases, so long as they remain subject to insanity, that they should have a clergyman whenever they seem to have an intelligent desire that a clergyman should visit them.

1815. Have any facts come to your knowledge, during the time clergymen were attending this institution that would lead you to the conclusion that their presence here would be likely to excite disturbance in the minds of the patients?—We have had cases here that were perfectly quiet and tractable before the attendance of clergymen; and upon the clergymen coming into the house, Sunday after Sunday, a very decided and prejudicial excitement was produced upon the patients, who theretofore had not been in that state. Neither Dr. McCorrue or myself could attribute it to any other cause but to the undue excitement caused in the way I have stated.

1816. Having yourself assembled the inmates, for the purpose of prayer, upon the Sabbath, I presume you considered it was desirable they should be so assembled?—Well, I thought reading a portion of the Scriptures for them would be desirable; and my not being a clergyman it had, of course, a different effect upon them, for they look upon the head of this place as their father, so to speak. It was more just as family prayer than a distinct service, or worship gone through by a professional minister.

1817. If the feelings of the inmates are so susceptible with regard to religious matters as you suppose, do you not consider that the fact of a person assembling them for prayers when they knew not to be a minister of their own church, would have an effect upon them?—That has been given up; it was not authorized by the Governors, and it was considered desirable that I should give it up.

1818. About how many persuasions exist amongst the inmates in this asylum?—Well, we have Roman Catholics and Presbyterians, denominated Orthodox Presbyterians, and there are Unitarian Presbyterians; we have Episcopalians and Methodists; we had a Jew and a Quaker; we are now, I think, confined to Episcopalians, Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, Unitarians, and Methodists.

1819. Are any religious books provided for the inmates?—Yes; Bibles and Testaments, and their own particular prayer-books.

1820. You mean prayer-books sanctioned by their respective churches?—Precisely.

1821. Do the inspectors frequently visit the asylum?—They do.

1822. When the inspectors attend, being members of the Board, do they take the same part in the proceedings as any ordinary member would?—They do.

1823. Do they vote when differences arise?—Well, we have not had any case. If a question arose they would vote. They are considered Governors in Ordinary, according to their appointment by the Lord Lieutenant and Privy Council.

1824. Are their visits made without notice?—Yes; without notice.

1825. Are they usually made on the occasion of the Board assembling, or at other times?—At other times.

1826. When the inspectors desire to call the attention of the Board to any matter, is that done by them at the meeting at which they attend, or do they make it a matter of distinct communication?—They make it a matter of distinct communication.

1827. I believe a control is exercised over the proceedings of the Governors as regards expenditure by the Privy Council?—Yes.

7828. What is your opinion as to the efficacy of that control?—I think it is satisfactory.
 7829. Have you had occasion to complain of any delays?—Sometimes there have been delays in the granting of money that was memorialled for, but latterly that has not been the case. Of late the money has come more regularly. The Governors had occasion to specially call the attention of the Privy Council to the fact of accounts being delayed in the payment, owing to the money not coming in time. There is no reason to complain of that at present.

7830. With regard to additions made to the asylum or any thing in the way of construction or building: can that be done by the Board itself, or must it be done under direction of the executive authority?—The Governors must have the approval of the executive authority; if there is any thing out of the ordinary course required to be done, they apply to the executive on the subject.

No control exercised by the Governors with regard to new buildings.

7831. In that case the Board exercises no further control over the building or whatever the work may be?—No.

7832. Has that system been considered to work satisfactorily?—Well, it was not found satisfactory in the recent additions; the Board found their hands tied up. They had, in the first instance, applied for additions and structural changes; subsequently they were not consulted in the way they thought they ought to have been consulted with respect to the details. Those works would have been much more cheaply and satisfactorily done if the Board had gotten the sanction of the Executive to execute them, and had the details left in their own hands.

Working of the system.

7833. The female side of the establishment is in charge of the matron?—Yes.

The Matron.

7834. Is the matron supposed to act under your directions?—Yes.

7835. Is the removal of the servants of the institution left with you, or do the Board consider those cases also?—It is left in my hands.

Removal of servants.

7836. Is the supply of water to the establishment sufficient?—At present it is; it was defective. The Governors had a new well sunk, the old well having become quite exhausted, and there was a great increase in the requirements of the establishment, and the new water-closets and lavatories took a large additional supply of water which the old well was incapable of giving. We have now an abundance of water from the new well.

The supply of water.

7837. Is the supply of water worked up by the labour of the inmates?—Yes. That question was brought before the Governors. It was thought objectionable to employ them in that way, and that it would be desirable to have the water raised by steam or other such means. I applied to the Governors and got an order for the erection of a steam engine. It was subsequently found that a supply of water might possibly be had by gravitation, and that in the mean time it was better not to go to the expense of putting up the steam engine, which would be rather an eyesore to the place, and instead of doing so to go on with the force-pump. I think it would be more desirable to have the supply obtained by gravitation.

7838. Are any of the inmates at present employed at the force-pump?—Yes; that is the only way we have of getting a supply of water—the force-pump worked by the patients.

Employment of the inmates in working a force-pump.

7839. Is the amount of work required more than what you would consider advisable for the patients?—In an institution of this kind it has too much the appearance of prison employment, and the patients for the most part have not the physical strength to permit of their being constantly employed at it, and there are only a few comparatively one can get to do the work.

7840. How long are the patients left at a time at that work?—A large number would be left under the charge of an attendant who has directions to change them. We have three or four at each handle, so that the labour is not very considerable. It is the character of the labour that is objectionable. In this institution it is objectionable that we should raise water in that way.

The water-closets.

7841. Are the water-closets in use throughout the building found to answer?—Now they are, but when the Commissioners were here before, the water-closets were considered a nuisance. We are getting up a self-acting water-closet.

7842. Is the establishment lighted with gas?—It is.

The Asylum lit with gas.

7843. You have mentioned that the visiting physician visits three times in the week?—Yes.

The Visiting Physician; how he is informed of the cases requiring his attendance.

7844. How does he ascertain the cases that require his attendance?—The attendants call his attention particularly to such cases when he visits the hospital where the sick inmates are, and if there is any other case throughout the building that requires his attendance, his attention is called particularly to it.

7845. By whom?—By the attendants, and sometimes by myself.

7846. Is there any book for the purpose, or is there any person responsible for giving him a list of the patients who have been sick in the interval of his visits?—There is no particular book nor any particular person.

7847. Then it is a matter of chance whether he hears of the cases of illness that may have occurred in his absence?—That is not likely to occur; he makes it his business to inquire of the attendants when he comes if there is any case requiring him.

7848. That is a verbal communication?—Yes, a verbal communication.

7849. Is there no book kept containing entries from day to day of cases of illness that may require his attendance?—No.

7850. And there is no particular officer responsible for giving the physician a list of the cases of illness that have occurred since he previously visited?—The attendants are bound to tell him of such cases.

Belfast.

7851. There is no single officer in the asylum responsible for providing him with a list of the cases requiring his attendance?—No; there is not.

7852. Referring to the question of religious ministrations, have you, from the time you were appointed manager up to the period of the proposed building of a chapel, heard any complaints from the friends of the patients or the members of the Board as to the want of religious instruction in the asylum?—Never.

7853. When did the question as to the propriety of appointing chaplains first come under the consideration of the Board?—As well as my recollection serves me, it was in 1851, when the plan for the new building was laid before the Board, and when they saw on that plan a place allocated for a chapel, then they took the question directly into their consideration. That is my impression.

Henry McCormac, Esq., M.D., sworn and examined.

Henry McCormac,
Esq., M.D.

7854. What appointment do you hold in the Belfast District Asylum?—Visiting Physician.

7855. For what period have you held that appointment?—About seven years.

7856. It has been stated that there is a surgeon who discharges the duty of apothecary?—There is.

The Visiting
Physician; his duties at the Asylum.

7857. Do you confine your attention to non-surgical cases?—Mainly so, except in case of emergency, in which I consider I am competent to afford any assistance that may be required.

7858. What assistance does the surgeon give you?—There is no strict line of demarcation with respect to our duties; the medical man in attendance, surgeon or physician, acts according to the requirements of the case. Of course the surgeon's treatment mainly refers to surgical cases, but as many of the cases are of a mixed character involving both medical and surgical treatment, we co-operate as far as we can.

7859. Do you both attend on the same day?—He attends daily, and I attend three times a week.

7860. When you come to the asylum do you visit each of the wards, or do you receive any list directing your attention to particular cases?—I go round and see the nurses, the wardmen, and the wardwomen, look to the cases, and I receive any communication that may be made to me.

The classes of cases visited by him in the
Asylum.

7861. Do you visit each of the wards on the occasion of each visit to the asylum?—Not always. We have recently got hospitals established here, which render it less necessary for me to visit the wards generally.

7862. Do you feel in your duty to visit the curable cases of insanity although your attention should not be particularly called to them?—No.

7863. Then unless your attention was particularly called to them, you would not feel bound to visit, on each occasion of your coming to the institution, curable cases of insanity?—No; but occasionally I have consulted with Dr. Stewart on violent cases.

The moral treatment
Manager.

7864. Is the curative or moral treatment left mainly to the resident physician?—Yes; but I consider myself bound to offer any suggestion, or make any communication to Dr. Stewart that occurs to me, with respect to cases either at the time I see them or subsequently.

7865. Does the matron, at her side of the institution, prepare any list of cases for you to attend?—She does not prepare any written statement; she gives me a verbal list.

Mechanical restraint.

7866. Are you in favour of dispensing as much as possible with mechanical restraint?—Yes I am; however, I am personally of opinion, that there are cases in which the use of mechanical restraint is necessary occasionally. I think it is sometimes required, but it is very seldom resorted to here.

7867. Are you satisfied the arrangements are sufficient to prevent it being used without proper authority?—I think they are as good here as in any other asylum I have visited. I consider that the treatment in the asylum might possibly be improved in some respects. I am of opinion that the treatment of the insane is progressive, and that we may reasonably look for further improvements.

Deficient means for curative treatment.

7868. Do you consider there are sufficient means at your disposal for the curative treatment of the patients in the way of books and amusements?—I do not.

7869. Have these deficiencies been brought under the notice of the Board?—They have occasionally been brought before them; but I consider the resources in these respects here are equal to those in most places. In asylums contiguous to London and in the Scotch asylums there are improvements exceeding what we have here for such purposes. The Board here are always very willing to accede to any proposal for making improvements. There are further improvements looming in the distance, which, I hope to see adopted here as well as elsewhere.

The patients
for reading.

7870. It has been stated that the class of patients in the asylum is such that they would not be likely to avail themselves of the resource of reading as an occupation: do you agree in that statement?—It is the case to a very great extent. They might avail themselves of it indirectly. It is not generally known that the inmates of asylums are not so much persons who became insane in many instances as persons who have never been sane, whose minds have never been developed, but have remained in a condition of mental degeneration till some circumstance occurred which plunged them into a state of insanity. Their minds have been in a state more of non-development than of actual insanity, and many of them could not avail themselves of the opportunity of reading, but I dare say they could derive advantage indirectly from the instruction of others. There are individuals that if you speak to them and tell them something, it will interest them, because of your using, in making the communication the various accents of the human voice, while if the same persons read the same thing in a book it would not make any impression upon them.

1871. Are you satisfied that sufficient accommodation is provided for the patients in the corridors and day rooms?—I think, the cells in this asylum and every where else are not sufficiently large. The treatment of lunatics, in the first instance, appeared to have been formed upon a basis of their being something criminal; and patients were therefore put into cells, which, I suppose, was suggested by the treatment of criminals or prisoners, and the treatment of lunatics has always approximated to that of criminals. The same principle still exists in the cell arrangement. If I were permitted to plan an asylum, I certainly should prepare a plan different from that of any other asylum that I have ever seen. The objection that I refer to does not attach to the Belfast Asylum more than to any other. This establishment is kept singularly clean, in fact, as clean as it is possible for any place to be kept.

1872. Are you satisfied that the general diet of the inmates is sufficient?—I do not think they get sufficient. It has been improved since I came here, with the co-operation of Dr. Stewart, and the kind co-operation also of the Board. When I first came, fresh meat was allowed only one day in the week, and now it is allowed three times in the week.

1873. Fresh meat, from which the soup given is made?—Yes.

1874. You, of course, have the power of putting patients on hospital diet?—Yes; it is a power I frequently exercise, as every facility is afforded me for doing so. There is not the slightest objection made. The only difficulty experienced has been in reference to putting the establishment generally upon a better dietary. People in general, are of opinion, and Boards are not exempt from that opinion, that it is not desirable to make too great a contrast between the dietary in this asylum and the dietary the patients have had before being admitted as lunatics, coming from amongst a very poor class, whose diet is not as good as it should be.

1875. That would be applying a test similar to that of the workhouses?—Yes; but still, notwithstanding this opinion, the dietary is very much improved.

1876. Is it the case generally that lunatics actually require a higher scale of dietary than sane persons?—I think they do. The poor as well as the rich are unwilling to consign their lunatic friends or relatives to an asylum, from a prejudice that it is like putting them under a criminal restraint. A person, not able to work for his living, is thus kept by poor people. The lunatics very often labour under bodily disease, and the consequence is, that they come here very much impaired, and it is obvious that persons so circumstanced require a better treatment than might be ordinarily given to sane persons.

1877. I presume the giving of insufficient diet to a patient, might materially impede his cure?—Doubtless, it does so. It prevents him taking exercise, and prevents him having that sense of health and cheerfulness, which powerfully co-operates in the cure of insanity.

1878. Is the clothing of the inmates, in your opinion, adequate?—The clothing is better than they have had. It is not always adequate. Some patients will not work, and are passive; and a person that is perfectly passive, and who is not well fed, is not able to keep up the same degree of animal warmth that a person can who is working.

1879. Is there a sufficient supply of bedding given to the patients?—I do not think the blanketing is quite sufficient. When it was insufficient I ordered more. The patients have not as much bed covering, for instance, as I myself have.

1880. Do you consider the arrangements for the warming of the asylum sufficient?—No, I do not think they are. The house is cut up in a singular way, in large corridors, which are exceedingly difficult to heat. When I came here first they were heated by a system of steam pressure. Other means are now being resorted to, which have not yet come fully into operation, and I do not think that the building is yet properly heated.

1881. What is your opinion with respect to airing courts?—I think it desirable to have airing courts or something of the kind.

1882. Do you approve of those which exist here?—Yes, I do, having regard to the way the building is constructed.

1883. Are they at the north-side of the building?—Some of them are. I may observe, that the first thing of course, in the treatment of the insane, is to get those who will work to work to a reasonable extent, and to exert themselves generally. If there were greater means of amusement and means generally at our disposal in the asylum of rousing patients, a greater effort could be induced on their part.

1884. Do you keep a regular case book?—Occasionally I note private cases that are interesting, but I do not keep a case book. I do not enter into details except in particular cases.

1885. It appears from a return which the Commissioners have received, and which I believe is signed by you, that a very considerable proportion of the inmates are incurable?—Yes, a very large proportion. I do not think myself any cases are absolutely incurable, except where disease has acted on the brain. I do not consider any case of insanity in which that has not occurred is absolutely incurable. There are two great classes of opinion amongst medical men on the subject: one class looks upon insanity as a purely material disease, the other looks upon it as a mental disease, and I am one of those who look upon it as a mental disease; but cases in which false impressions are made upon the sensorium by bodily disease I consider to be exceptional.

1886. I presume that there is a tendency to an increase of the incurable cases in the asylum?—Necessarily so. If they were not cut off by death the asylum would, in fact, be exclusively occupied by them, to the exclusion of all other cases.

Separate establish-and incurable cases.

Improved curative
treatment.

7887. Looking forward to the probable contingency of such a state of things arising, have you ever considered what arrangement could be made for the care of those incurable cases?—It has often occurred to me personally, and I have had conversations with Dr. Stewart upon the subject, that separate asylums would be desirable, and that a higher class of means for the recovery of supposed incurable cases might be resorted to, and to a greater extent than is now possible.

7888. Then you contemplate an establishment which would not alone be an asylum for these probably incurable cases, but an asylum in which additional means should be provided for still attempting their cure?—Yes. The treatment of insanity, like the treatment of all other diseases, is progressive. If you compare the present treatment with that of fifty years ago, you will see that there is an immense improvement; and it is reasonable to believe, that fifty years hence there will be further improvements, which will be progressive. There are many things, such as I have just alluded to in reference to the improved treatment of cases, which, I think, might be introduced into our asylum.

7889. Supposing it were determined to receive these cases for which you would provide these higher means of cure into the original and curative asylum, do you see any objection to the remaining cases of probably incurable patients being placed in a distinct and separate establishment?—No, I think it is the opinion generally of medical men, that if a case does not exhibit symptoms of amendment in six months, or about that time, it then passes on to a further stage, and enters amongst chronic cases. Medical men generally consider that no case is absolutely incurable unless the nervous centres are affected with disease.

Location of hopeless cases.

7890. With respect to these cases in which you would consider it next to impossible that any recovery could take place, do you see any objection to their being removed to an establishment apart from the curative hospital?—I do not; but inasmuch as it is impossible to have separate establishments for all classes of lunatics, unless the treatment were carried out on the same plan pursued at Ghent, and some people think it a good plan, I do not see how asylums on a large scale could be arranged and conducted. With respect to the classification; if it were practicable to have smaller asylums, as it were, established within a large general establishment, the more complete the classification were carried out the better. Upon this point I may further remark, if you will permit me, that it would be much easier to apply and carry out systems of treatment for insanity if the patients were classed together according to their peculiar mental disease, than it would be where patients differently affected were all mixed together.

Improved classification.

Importance of school instruction.

7891. It has been stated that there is no instruction given in the asylum; do you consider it would be advisable to have a school established, in which the minds of the patients would be occupied by instructing them?—I certainly do think that, in all possible and practicable cases, instruction to the utmost extent that patients are able to hear or receive is desirable. Some instruction or occupation of the mind lies at the bottom of the treatment of insanity, if you look upon insanity as I do, as a vicious association of ideas, or as a case of undeveloped intellect, which two conditions of mind, sometimes subsisting together and sometimes existing separately, lie very much at the root of all insanity, except in those cases in which there is disease of the nervous centres.

The question of religious ministrations;
the Privy Council Regulations on the subject.

7892. What is your opinion as to the advantage or disadvantage of having the means of religious instruction afforded to the patients?—I think it depends entirely upon the kind of religious instruction.

7893. Religious ministrations?—It depends entirely upon the manner in which they are afforded. In some cases religious ministrations hurt and excite the patient; in other cases, I have no doubt, it would be found beneficial.

7894. I believe the Privy Council regulations with reference to the appointment of chaplains provide that the chaplains shall "afford religious instruction and consolation to all patients, except such as shall be declared by the physician to be unfit and incapable of understanding the nature of the service, and of appreciating the effects of religion." Do you consider that limitation sufficient to guard against religious ministrations or instructions being improperly applied?—Hardly; and I will tell you why: in a place of this kind persons of all religious denominations are received. If there were asylums only for Protestants or Roman Catholics, or Presbyterians, I think there would be no objection to the limitation you speak of at all; but where persons of different denominations are mixed together, we find, in practice, that religious matters are apt to become the subject of conversation amongst the patients, and to be the cause of excitement amongst individuals, and likely to tend to mutual bickerings and reproaches, such as take place out of asylums.

Religious differences.

7895. Do you think the evil results of the differences which unfortunately arise amongst religious creeds in this country warrant patients whose minds are affected being deprived of all religious ministrations in public asylums?—Unless it could be managed differently from any thing I have witnessed. Religious ministrations in the way it has been performed here, does not promote the patient's recovery: I do not think it is desirable.

7896. I presume it never was contemplated that religious ministrations should be given indiscriminately, by a clergyman of one sect to members of different sects?—Decidedly not.

7897. Is the opinion you have given founded upon any experience of the effect arising from chaplains being attached to such institutions?—I have visited a number of lunatic establishments, and in this asylum also I have had some experience.

7898. There have been no chaplains connected with this asylum during the time you have acted here as physician, except for a limited period?—That is the case. They officiated here for a limited time. If there was a classification of the patients—if there was an asylum for each of the several separate creeds, and if a judicious, enlightened, intelligent, clever clergyman, were to visit those of his own persuasion, and confine his ministrations to them, the effect would be beneficial. If he would ascertain the particular or peculiar cause of each patient; sit beside him and speak with him, and take whatever course he might consider requisite, I think he might possibly, under such circumstances, do good to the patient; but short and brief ministrations in many cases appear hurtful by the excitement they occasion in individuals, and from the quarrels and bickerings which afterwards take place between the patients of the different denominations. Controversies will take place between them, which certainly did occur in this asylum during the period that religious ministrations were given here.

789. Then your doubt is founded more upon an apprehension of the insufficient or injudicious discharge of their duties by the clergymen, than upon the fact of there being chaplains connected with the institution?—If we conceive that the mind of an insane person is at all susceptible of moral impressions, and if we conceive also that religion has any good in itself, of course we must believe that a judicious exhibition of religious consolation might be beneficial.

790. Is it your opinion that there is a large number of inmates in such an institution as this, who would be capable of appreciating religious ministrations?—I do not see why they should not, the same as persons out of doors. I presume that the Board if determined to afford it to them, would have them brought to their several places of worship.

791. If the patients are as capable as those who are out of doors of benefiting by religious ministrations, do you see any reason why the circumstance of their being unfortunately afflicted with temporary bereavement of mind on some point, should justify or warrant their being deprived of such ministrations?—I recollect an instance of a woman here that I could not have supposed incapable of properly appreciating religious ministrations. She talked sensibly; but one morning I went to see her, and I found her on her elbows, growling in the head over a religious formula, in a state of the greatest excitement, and in a state unfavourable to recovery. If the patients of different religions, as I said before, were isolated or separated there would not be the same objection.

792. Do you consider that the evil or injurious results in the case which you have just mentioned, would justify a large number of people being deprived of the probable benefit of religious ministrations?—To answer that question I think we should go back to the beginning. Regarding this asylum as established for the purpose of curing the insane, if we find that during the brief period in which a patient remains in a curable state, that he gets on better without religious ministrations, I think it may be concluded that it would be more advantageous to dispense with it, unless as I have already stated, such a classification could be established as to me does not seem at all possible in an establishment of this kind.

793. Do you think, when a man's mind becomes affected, and he is brought into a curative hospital, that he should be deprived of the opportunity of attending that religious worship, which, as a good member of society, so matter what creed he belonged to, he attended out of doors and would have continued to attend if afforded the opportunity?—We cannot tell in all cases whether they are capable of benefiting by religious ministrations. The agencies that are at all liable to produce insanity should be most cautiously used in reference to the insane.

794. Are there not a variety of other matters which are admittedly beneficial to some insane persons, but which might possibly be injurious to others, or might even lead to insanity, that might be objected to on the same ground?—No doubt of it. The general attention and intercourse of relatives or friends, which is so desirable in the ordinary sane state, is carefully avoided in asylums.

795. Is there not ample means afforded by the regulations of the Privy Council for preventing a clergyman attending a patient when his attendance would be injurious to such patient?—No doubt; but a clergyman, if he came here authorized as a chaplain, might or might not be directed by the medical man.

796. Are you aware, that at Hanwell, where, I believe, there are 1,000 patients, upwards of 300 attend religious worship?—Yes: but are they not all Protestants? I apprehend they are persons principally of one persuasion. I set out to Nottingham by stating that I saw no objection to having religious instruction given in asylums, if the different religions were separated. I further stated, that if a person be in a fit state for religious instruction, fit for social converse and civil duties, he is fit, then, to go out.

797. Am I to understand that you believe every man in an asylum who is capable of benefiting by religious instruction should be permitted to go at large?—He might be capable of being benefited by religious instruction, without being in a condition to go at large, for his cure might not be perfect.

798. Supposing that those 300 patients I have referred to at Hanwell are all members of the Established Church, is not that a reason why all the members of the Established Church in this asylum, or whatever proportion of them might be benefited by religious ministrations, should be permitted to receive it?—I apprehend the patients at Hanwell, which I did not visit, do not quarrel about religious matters as they do here.

799. Then, does your objection mainly rest upon the quarrelsome propensities of the Irish people?—I think the religious differences which exist out of doors amongst the Irish people are also carried on within doors; moreover, the formulae of religious instruction are not altered and adapted for the insane.

7910. I must again call your attention to the fact, that in none of the asylums are the members of one religion present at the religious instruction given to those of another?—I know that, but they are mixed up together after.

REMARKS.

*Belfast District
Asylum.*

Henry McCoombe,
Esq., M.D.

Division of duties between the Visiting Physician and the Resident Physician.

1911. Practically, the division of duties between Dr. Stewart and you appears to be this, that he has very much the charge of the more insane patients, and that you have very much the charge of the several patients who are sick?—So I understand; but at the same time I consider myself called upon to offer any suggestion that lies in my power, as Dr. Stewart also does by me.

1912. Practically, does that division work well?—Yes.

1913. Is there any official record or report book kept, in which it is the duty of each attendant, or ward-master, to insert the names of the patients confined to bed, or ill, so that your attention may be called to visit them?—I am not aware that there is any book for the purpose.

1914. Then your attention being called to the patients who happen to be sick or confined to bed, depends more upon the chance of a verbal communication?—I do not consider that it is a matter of chance; it is a matter approximating to certainty: there is, of course, a possibility of an omission.

1915. Are you sure the omission might not occur?—I cannot be certain.

1916. Do you think the keeping of a book of that kind would insure better attention being given to the patients?—I do think the suggestion appears to be a very good working suggestion.

The infirmary.

1917. Previous to the visit of the Commissioners in November last, there was no portion of the building appropriated exclusively as an infirmary; since that time a portion has been so appropriated: now, from your experience before and since that arrangement, is it your opinion that an infirmary specially used as such would be a desirable adjunct to an institution of this kind?—Well, I think it would, provided it had all the adjuncts or requisites that an infirmary should be supplied with, namely, and the various other means of promoting the comfort, the well-being, and the recovery of the sick.

Improved treatment of the insane.

1918. Have you any suggestions to offer to the Commissioners respecting the subject of their inquiry?—Nothing further than that I should wish this asylum should, as far as possible, co-operate in the general effort to improve the condition of the insane, and show an example in adopting measures of improvement suggested elsewhere, and in carrying out whatever should be suggested amongst ourselves, and which would be beneficial to the inmates. I think the moral treatment of the insane, keeping in view amusements and instruction, and even subordinates to that, acting upon their minds through the medium of their palate, and their possessions; that treatment, I think, might be carried to a greater extent in all asylums, and, I should hope, to a greater extent in this Asylum.

Lord Bishop of Down and Connor and Dromore.

General question of the appointment of Chaplains to Asylums.

The Lord Bishop of Down and Connor and Dromore, sworn and examined.

1919. You are one of the Governors of this Asylum?—I am.

1920. Is there any matter to which you wish to call the attention of the Commissioners, in relation to the subjects of their inquiry?—I only wish to record my opinion of the propriety, and, I think, the advantage of having regularly appointed chaplains for the different denominations who are usually in this house. I do not wish to occupy the time of the Commissioners, by any lengthened statements, but simply to record very briefly, what took place in reference to the subject. It came before the Board in 1851, as Dr. Stewart has stated, when the plans of the new building were under consideration, and when a chapel appeared to be included. I then stated my opinion by letter, not being able to attend, and a discussion took place. Subsequently, feeling that there was a very strong opinion as to the disadvantage of chaplains in general institutions, where there was a mixed community, I felt reluctant in giving a decided opinion, without taking some pains to get myself better informed on the matter, and I thought the most advisable way of doing so would be by visiting the different asylums, where chaplains had been appointed, and had been officiating, as I considered what had occurred in those institutions, would be far better than the mere speculations of individuals. In 1851 I wrote a circular letter to the resident physicians of the various asylums in Ireland. The letter I think did not prejudice the case—it simply asked, what was the effect of the ministrations of the chaplains upon the inmates. The following is the letter:—

"Palace, Holywood, Nov. 11, 1851.

"SIR,—As there exists an apprehension in the minds of some of the Governors of the Belfast District Lunatic Asylum as to the appointment of chaplains, lest the ministrations of clergy of different religious persuasions should have the effect of disturbing the minds of the lunatic patients, and perhaps lead to angry arguments among them, I am most desirous to learn from you whether the services of the different chaplains have had this tendency in your Asylum; or whether afterwards the patients have adverted to the fact of attending divine service at different hours, and from that made any remarks calculated to cause disagreement among their fellow-patients, or to produce excitement in themselves? I would also be glad to learn your experience of the effect produced by religious services among the convalescent, at the time of service, and how far such impressions, if any, are permanent. I beg to offer my apology for thus trespassing on your time.—I am, &c.,

(Signed)

"ROBERT DOWD AND CORRIE."

Testimony on the subject from the Managers of various Asylums.

The following are the replies I have received, which I will read for the Commissioners:—

"District Lunatic Asylum, Waterford, 24th Nov., 1851.

"I have not observed any bad consequences from the introduction of chaplains, nor has there been any greater tendency to quarrel on religious subjects amongst the patients than before their appointment. I think the observance of the Sabbath by a religious service has a TRANQUILLISING EFFECT on families, as well as on the people.

"JOHN DOWD."

"I do not consider the minds of patients to have been at all disturbed by the ministrations of clergymen of different persuasions, or that it has ever led to angry arguments among them, or that they have ever reverted to the fact of attending divine service at separate hours. My experience has been that the serenity produced by religious services has been salutary, especially while the patients have been engaged therein. It is not the practice in this Asylum to compel any patients to be present at the hours of prayer, but there is very great anxiety on their own part generally to be permitted to attend, and the conduct of the most sedentary, with a few exceptions, is quiet, orderly, and free from excitement.

"THOMAS C. BYRNES, M.D."

"Limerick District Lunatic Asylum.

"I have not found the ministrations of the chaplains to this institution disturb the minds of the patients in any degree whatever, nor have I, in any one instance, heard of their having angry discussions on religious subjects.

"ROBERT FITZGERALD, M.D."

"Hospital, for the Insane, Carlisle, 15th Nov. 1851.

"I beg to say that I have never found any ill effect to arise from the services of the clergymen attached to this Asylum; but, on the contrary, I have repeatedly observed the most salutary effects on the patients to result from their being allowed to attend divine service, and converse with the clergymen. On the whole, and from an experience now of several years, I am decidedly of opinion that the system is good and tranquillising. I have never found it to produce bickering, ill-will, or even argument amongst the patients. I have repeatedly observed that they looked forward with pleasure to the chaplain's visitations, and I have known many insane persons (insane on other points), as sincerely and rationally religious as any I have ever met with.

"M. E. WATTS, Resident Physician."

"Londonderry District Lunatic Asylum, 14th Nov., 1851.

"Respecting the effect religious worship has on the patients in the Asylum, in reply, I beg to state that it has been most beneficial in many respects. There never has been any excitement caused by Divine worship being performed here, but every it gives much comfort to, they bring peace on other points, not on religion. It was the opinion of the physicians that it would have had effects before it was tried, but he has changed his opinion as seeing the good effect it has produced.

"D. CUNY, Manager."

"District Lunatic Asylum, Ballinasloe, 22nd November, 1851.

"There is little likelihood of angry arguments or discussions on religious subjects, and they have rarely occurred since the appointment of the two chaplains here; nor have they reverted to the fact of attending divine service at separate hours. It generally gratifies them to have the opportunity of attending to their religious worship.

"JOHN B. McKINNEY, Manager."

"Richmond Lunatic Asylum.

"In reference to the appointment of chaplains of different religious persuasions disturbing the minds of the convalescent patients, and, perhaps, leading to angry arguments among them, I beg to state that such very seldom occurs; there is a selection made of the cases that are capable of receiving religious instruction, and we find that it is attended with the most salutary, and a means, in the hands of the officers of the institution of having a moral control over the minds of the inmates; as withholding the privilege of attending Divine service, for any fault committed, and giving them leave, under a promise of amendment, has very often proved to be most salutary. The service of the chaplains has had no bad tendency on the minds of the patients, nor, in scarcely any instance, have the patients reverted to the fact of attending Divine service at separate hours. We were the first to establish Divine service in a lunatic asylum in this country, and I may say with perfect truth, that we have found the patients, generally speaking, desirous of attending both church and chapel.

"SAMUEL WHISTLER, Manager."

"Cork District Lunatic Asylum, November 29, 1851.

"I have the pleasure to state that the ministrations of clergymen of different religious persuasions have not the effect of disturbing the minds of the patients in this asylum, or causing the least argument among them, either as to the services of the Protestant or Roman Catholic chaplains, or the difference of time of the performance of Divine worship; and have no doubt that such religious observance has the effect of tranquillizing the minds of some of the patients; and not a few of whom, whose character, before admission into the asylum, could not bear the test of morality, were discharged cured, with every prospect of pursuing a serious course of life in future.

"E. O'NEILL, Manager."

"District Lunatic Asylum, Clonmel, November 24, 1851.

"No chaplains ever existed in this asylum, and I am, therefore, unable to give your Lordship the information required.

"JAMES FLENN, M.D."

"I have now simply to state that these letters so received by me in reply, were embodied in memorials to the Earls of Clarendon, St. Germans, and Eglington, all of whom sanctioned the appointment of Chaplains. The Earl of Carlisle felt, and very properly felt, that as the case was under the consideration of a legal tribunal, it then having been brought before the law courts, it would not be proper of him to give any ex officio opinion upon it. A memorial,

Memorials to Lords

BELFAST.

Belfast District
Asylum.Lord Bishop of Down and Connor and

of which I am about to read the concluding lines, was forwarded to the Lord Lieutenant. It received the signature of the Bishop of the Established Church, the Bishop of the Roman Catholic Church, and the Vicar of Belfast, and other clergymen, including the Presbyterian clergymen. This is from the memorial, "As the above extracts must remove all apprehension as to the services of chaplains being prejudicial to the interest of the inmates, or likely to cause unpleasant disagreements, we, the undersigned Governors, beg your Excellency to carry out a measure which, after most careful consideration, was approved of by your Excellency's predecessors, especially as it cannot be said that the circumstances of Belfast furnish any peculiar grounds of alarm; and we do not find, either in the prison or the marine workhouse, that the service of the chaplains of different denominations have produced the slightest discord or religious animosity." I found that I was fortified in my opinion by the communications I received on the subject; and though I should have wished, if I could, to have concurred in the opinion of the majority of the Governors, for all of whom I entertain the utmost personal respect, and to whose judgment I would like to pay the utmost deference, yet being so fortified, I felt I could not forgo my conscientious convictions. I have no further statement to make with reference to the chaplaincy question.

Advantage of giving school instruction in the Asylum.

1921. Is there any other point upon which you would wish to make a statement?—There is no other point, but that with reference to the school, I wish to state my decided opinion, that every asylum for the insane should have a school, perhaps of an elementary character; and I state this with great confidence after the evidence of Dr. McCormac as to the salutary effect such school would produce upon the inmates. Dr. Stewart stated, if I recollect rightly, when you asked him as to books, that the patients were not capable of appreciating books, as the patients who usually came into the asylum were of an illiterate character; and when I recommend schools, I speak of schools conveying secular and elementary instruction, and I do not mean schools conducted by the wardens or medical officers of the institution, but by properly and duly selected schoolmasters, capable of exercising such an important function as that of schoolmaster to the inmates. I have been myself aware of parties who, though insane, were capable of going through extraordinary calculations; and had those persons been instructed in the higher branches of science, they would not only have taken an interest in them, but the study might have led to some salutary effect. I wish to record my opinion of the importance of having schools in institutions of this description.

Richard B. B.
Houston, Esq., J.P.,
Q.C.

Richard B. B. Houston, Esq., J.P., Q.C., sworn and examined.

1922. Have you been for many years a Governor of this asylum?—Since the year 1842. 1923. I believe the attendance of Governors at this asylum, generally, is very good?—Very good.

Appointment of Governors—the system of representation on the Board.

1924. What is your opinion as to the manner in which the Governors are appointed?—I do not approve of the present system.

1925. What improvement would you suggest?—That the Grand Jury should have a good deal to say to it.

Inspectors as Governors.

1926. I understand it to be your desire, therefore, that the system of representation should be carried out more fully?—I think so.

1927. What is your opinion as to the propriety of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums being members of the Board of Governors?—I have never seen them take any part, except so far as voting is concerned; nor do I think they often exercise that authority which is vested in them; and I do not think it would have been judicious of them to do so. We agree pretty well, except upon the one subject, which the bishop has alluded to.

Consideration by Grand Juries of plans for new Asylum buildings.

1928. Are you satisfied with the arrangement under which the erection of new asylums, or of additional buildings, is at present regulated?—No; I think all the plans for building should be submitted to the Grand Juries, who are the parties to provide the money, at least they represent the people, from whom the money comes, but the Grand Juries might possibly not agree.

1929. Supposing the Grand Juries to be represented on this Board, or rather this Board to consist of the nominees of the Grand Juries, would not that obviate any difficulty that might arise from the Grand Juries of Down and Antrim not agreeing?—That would remove the difficulty, a difference would not be likely to arise. I do not see any person belonging to the Grand Jury of Antrim at present here on the list of Governors. Of the Grand Jury of the County of Down, to which county I belong, there are four or five on the Board of Governors.

Veto of central authority.

1930. Do you consider the final approval of any plans for building might be left to a superior authority in Dublin?—I think they should have the veto.

The chargeability of the inmates.

1931. With reference to the chargeability of the inmates, are you satisfied with the present arrangements as they are charged upon the counties?—If they are to be charged upon the counties, I am satisfied with the present arrangement. I would rather they were not charged upon the counties.

1932. What arrangement would you consider preferable?—I would like it better to have them charged upon the Consolidated Fund.

1933. Supposing the county to bear the burden, would you prefer having it charged upon the poor rate or upon the county rate?—Perhaps the charging it upon the poor rate would make it lighter upon the people's shoulders, inasmuch as it is more extensively levied. Under the Grand Jury calculation, houses valued at or under £5, according to Griffith's valuation, are exempt. Under the Poor Law system every house, if only valued at 10s., is liable to pay.

1934. Do you consider that the maintenance of a destitute lunatic should be charged upon an accidental division, which can in no way be responsible for his affliction, rather than upon a union at large?—No, I should say he should be charged upon the union at large. If the charge was placed upon electoral divisions it would press extremely heavy upon the towns.

7935. In the event of the maintenance of pauper lunatics being charged upon the poor rate, would you consider that the Guardians should be represented on this Board?—I think not; I think they would have confidence in the parties appointed by the Grand Jurors.

7936. Do you see any difficulty in the way of the repayment of money being made by the unions, supposing the charge to be placed upon them and not upon the counties?—No, I do not see any difficulty.

7937. You are aware of the summary manner in which money may be recovered by imperative presentment from the Grand Jurors?—Yes; the other process is rather more tedious.

7938. You are aware that when, under other circumstances, money had to be provided for a common purpose, from the Unions, very stringent provisions were made, just as in the case of the Rate-in-Aid?—Yes; I wish to say, that on the whole I would prefer to have the money raised under the Grand Jurors, for it is raised with great facility by them. I would prefer to let the present arrangement stand, except so far as the houses valued at and under £5.

7939. Would you limit the Board merely to those individuals who would be selected by the Grand Jurors, or would you allow the Executive still to name some fixed proportion?—Decidedly. I wish to observe that I think there are several parties on the list of Governors of this asylum, such as the Lord Bishop of Down, who should be ex officio Governors, and who, when removed from the position by right of which they were placed on the list, should cease to be members of the Board. That, in fact, they should be only members for the time being.

7940. You have enjoyed in this asylum the benefit of having as resident manager for some years a professional person?—Yes.

7941. Are you satisfied with that as an advantageous arrangement?—Most decidedly.

7942. It has been stated that the Superintendence Act, which passed last year, has not been, in some of its provisions, so liberal as to induce parties to seek the benefit of it: do you consider it makes fair or unfair provision?—I think the scale is too low. The officials in this asylum have very onerous duties to perform.

7943. It has been stated that in the erection and fitting up of the several buildings, not only is the construction of the work entirely conducted by the executive officers of the Government, but that the fittings and other requisites are supplied by them without any reference whatever to the Board?—That has been done here.

7944. Is that arrangement one that is distasteful to the Board?—I think it is a very bad arrangement. I think the Board should have been consulted more than they were upon the subject, and they could have given local information.

7945. You have probably heard the evidence, stating that a very considerable proportion of the inmates of this institution are considered to be probably incurable, a proportion amounting to more than three-fourths of the whole number: have you ever, as a Governor, turned your attention to the consideration of what would be the most advisable arrangement to make in the event of further accommodation being required in this district?—I think it would be desirable to have the curable and incurable separated and located in distinct establishments. As I have been chairman of the Board of Guardians here for sixteen years, I would say, with regard to idiots, it would be very desirable to remove them out of the workhouse. There is no proper place for them in the workhouse; you cannot classify them there, and if the workhouse could be relieved of that class, it would be the greatest blessing to the establishment, as well as to the idiots themselves.

7946. I believe in the workhouse it is the practice to employ other paupers to take charge of them?—Yes.

7947. As chairman of the Board of Guardians you would desire to see some other place provided for them?—Decidedly.

7948. I presume you concur in the opinion, that so far as curative treatment is concerned, a workhouse does not afford any opportunity for that treatment being carried out; and that, probably, the contrary is the case?—Yes; the contrary is the case. A workhouse is merely for the reception of persons in a state of destitution, and to provide for the old and infirm.

7949. Do you consider that if a separate establishment was provided for quiet, harmless, incurable cases, such as Dr. Stewart referred to, that it could be conducted on a more economical scale than the ordinary asylum?—I should say so. I take it for granted quiet people would not require so much looking after. A smaller staff would suffice, I presume.

7950. Do you think it desirable that such an institution should be in the vicinity of the parent asylum?—It might be in the vicinity, but perhaps not within the walls, so that part of the medical staff could be employed in both places.

7951. Do you think that any particular advantage would arise from it being situated in a remote part of the country where land could be had cheap, and where the inmates could be employed?—I think it would be decidedly more economical, and that more good would naturally result.

7952. In that case the services of the officers of the parent institution would not be available?—No; I am favourable to a junction or amalgamation of several districts, in connexion with such an institution.

7953. On the other hand, is it likely that any large proportion of this class would be capable of being employed?—That is a question more for Dr. Stewart than for me.

7954. You have heard the evidence given with reference to the appointment of chaplains 1954. To this institution. Is it the fact that the chaplains who are appointed are not practically acting at present?—It is.

1955. Am I correct in assuming from what has appeared in the public prints that the law has not sanctioned the payment of the salaries to the chaplains?—That is the case.
1956. What is your opinion as to the advantage or otherwise of having such officers attached to an institution of this kind?—As there are three chaplains, it is undesirable. In England where there is only one chaplain to an asylum, it is desirable. I have visited a good number of English asylums, and where there was only one chaplain there was a very good effect.
- Inmates of different religious persuasions.
1957. Supposing an asylum to contain inmates of various religious persuasions, would you consider it a satisfactory arrangement to have one chaplain appointed for all?—I do not suppose it would be a satisfactory arrangement unless there was a large majority of the inmates of one religion, as in England.
1958. Would you consider it a satisfactory arrangement by which those who profess one religion should be bound to attend the service of another?—I do not suppose it would be a satisfactory arrangement. I never heard the question arise in England.
1959. Being a question that would probably arise here, it becomes a question for practical consideration?—Yes. In England the majority are of one way of thinking, and if there is a grievance, it is not much felt. In this country it would be a very different thing.
- Religious ministrations to individuals advantageously.
1960. Taking the question abstractedly, is it your opinion, advantage would be derived by the inmates from the ministrations of a chaplain, supposing them to be of one persuasion?—Advantage would be derived more by individual attention than by calling the inmates together collectively.
- Objection to providing Chaplains for all persuasions.
1961. Being, therefore, of opinion that there is advantage in the ministrations of chaplains, do you consider that the difficulties which present themselves in this mixed community, in reference to the providing of chaplains for all persuasions, are sufficient to deter the Board from giving the advantage to any?—I consider they are sufficient.
1962. Am I to understand that you apprehend the ministrations of a clergyman to the members of his own church, naturally lead them to discuss polemical questions with those of a different church?—Yes; I think that is to be apprehended.
- Alleged difficulty of managing the inmates of such ministrations.
1963. Have you found, practically, that has been the consequence of the attendance at church?—I have not practically seen it; but Dr. Stewart mentioned at the Board that such had been the result, and that he found them more difficult to manage on a Monday than any other day.
1964. Supposing they were more difficult to manage upon a Monday, do you consider that the difficulty necessarily followed from the ministrations of the chaplains on the previous Sunday—might it not equally follow from Sunday being a day of rest?—I do not believe it was the case before the chaplains came here.
1965. Were any reports made to the Board to the effect that you now state?—I think there have been reports—verbal, not written.
1966. On the part of the Manager?—Yes. We would naturally ask how the inmates were going on, and that led to it. The statement was not volunteered on the part of Dr. Stewart. We were anxious to ascertain how the arrangement worked, and asked the question.
1967. Considering that the religious ministrations take place on Sunday, can you account for the effect you have described not being more immediate, and their not quarrelling more on a Sunday than on a Monday?—I suppose it is towards the latter part of the day the service is over, and that Dr. Stewart may not see them or observe till the next morning.
- Attendance of the servants at religious worship.
1968. The service of some churches is in the morning?—Yes.
1969. Do you know what the arrangements are with reference to the attendance of the house servants upon religious worship?—There was an arrangement made many years ago by the late Bishop of Down, Dr. Mant, which was in operation for a considerable time, until a few years before the chaplains were appointed.
1970. Do you remember when the chaplaincy question first arose here?—It arose in 1851, when the plans for the new building were produced, and it was observed that a chapel was included. It was asked: What is this for? That was the way attention was drawn to it.
1971. The question of the attendance of clergymen in the institution had, however, occupied the attention of the Board some years previously?—Yes.
- Patients formerly sent out to religious worship? the effects.
1972. Are you aware whether patients have been sent out to prayers in Belfast?—They have been sent out. I know they have gone out with the knowledge of the Governor.
1973. If attendance upon religious worship and the ministrations of clergymen are the cause of disturbance, how came it that the Governors sanctioned the inmates being sent out to places of worship?—The persons sent out must have been in a better mental condition than those who remained in the asylum.
1974. When there are persons in a better mental state than others, do the Board allow of their being sent out to attend religious worship?—They were allowed to go out then. I do not know whether or not they are allowed now to go out.
1975. Were not the patients who were allowed to go out and receive religious ministrations as likely, when they came back, to create a disturbance in the asylum, as if they received those ministrations in the house?—There would not be so many collected together.
1976. The disturbance would be on a smaller scale?—It would be on a smaller scale.
1977. Do you know who the patients were that were allowed to go out to religious worship?—I do not.
- Appointment and dismissal of superior officers.
1978. With regard to the appointment of the superior officers of the institution, such as the manager, the visiting physician, and so on, are you satisfied with the present arrangement under which they are appointed by the Executive Government?—No; I think the appointment should rest with the Governors.

1979. Do you consider the Governors are as competent to select those officers as the Board of Guardians are to select their officers?—I think so.

1980. Would you give any power of veto to the Executive Government?—That would depend upon circumstances.

1981. With regard to dismissal, would you give the Executive Government the power of dismissing the officers after investigation?—Decidedly, upon an investigation properly conducted. I would wish to state, that I think the expenditure of lunatic asylums should be laid in detail before the Grand Jurors.

The Rev. Thomas Hinch, M.A., sworn and examined.

1982. For how many years have you been a Governor of this institution?—Since its opening, in 1829.

1983. Have you attended frequently each year during that period?—I attended almost without intermission from the opening of the asylum till the year 1835. I left Belfast in 1837. From that time I have not taken any very active part in the proceedings, but on an occasion of this kind, being one of the two survivors of the original Governors, I thought it my duty to attend here to-day.

1984. At the period of the asylum being opened, was the manager a medical man?—No.

1985. Have you acted as a Governor since the appointment of a medical manager?—Yes.

1986. Are you satisfied that was an improvement upon the system of having a lay manager?—We were perfectly satisfied with the manager we had. I am not competent to give an opinion upon the subject. It seems there is an improvement in the medical treatment of the insane, and I presume from what we have heard, that medical men are selected now for the office of managers of asylums, because it is desirable to have them constantly in charge. I do not feel competent, however, to give any opinion upon the subject.

1987. When the asylum was first opened, what were the arrangements that were made for religious ministrations, or for the celebration of divine worship in the institution?—There were no arrangements.

1988. When did the matter come first under the consideration of the Board?—It came under the consideration of the Board in consequence of a letter from the Commissioners for the erection of lunatic asylums in Ireland, requesting us to inform them, for the information of the Lord Lieutenant, whether we had appointed chaplains.

1989. At what period was that?—It was in March, 1834. The question then came before the Board in that way. There was some time taken for consideration—there was an adjournment. A special meeting was called, and a resolution was passed, which appears on the minutes under that date. The resolution was passed unanimously, I believe at the special meeting of the Board, and I would like to read a portion of the minutes of the 3rd of March, 1834, which relates to this subject:—

"Read the resolution of last board-day on the subject of religious instruction in the asylum, and thereupon resolved, that whereas to proceeding of an important practical nature ought to be permitted in this asylum without the assent and sanction of the Governors, and whereas for some convalescent patients who could not be suffered to attend public worship, it may, under proper regulations, be useful and consolatory, and not likely to be detrimental to bear the reading of the Holy Scriptures and the offering up of prayers in their behalf, by a minister of religion.

"Ordered—That on a wish being expressed by a patient to receive such professional visits, the manager of the asylum, if he is of opinion that such visits are not likely to produce an injurious excitement in the patient, but are likely to be beneficial to him, be authorized to request the attendance of a clergyman of the Established Church, whether the parochial clergyman, or, with his permission, the clergyman of the parish to which the patient belonged before his admission, or of the minister of such other denomination as the patient may have belonged to before his admission, if he should give a preference to such other minister, subject, however, to the same local limitation as in the case of the clergyman of the Established Church. That in any case of application being made to the Manager for the attendance of a minister of religion, the Manager report the application, and its result, at the next monthly meeting of the Governors."

1990. Did that resolution of the Board continue to be carried out while you attended?—Yes.

1991. And I believe was carried out until the period of the orders in Council?—I cannot answer that. It was carried out as long as I continued to attend here.

1992. By that arrangement permission was given to the ministers of religion to attend on the demand of the patients. Are you satisfied that was making sufficient provision for the religious wants of the inmates?—We considered so at that time.

1993. Do you still continue of that opinion?—I must confess that the letters which have been read by the Bishop of Down led me to qualify my opinion. I cannot resist such strong statements. We found practically that resolution answered all the requirements of the case. As curate of Belfast, I attended many times here as minister for the Episcopalians; and, though a Governor of the asylum, I never visited a case without asking the permission of the manager, and ascertaining from him whether the person was in a proper state to receive my visit or not.

1994. Would not that be still required on the part of the chaplains, supposing the Order in Council relative to chaplains to be carried out. In this order it is stated, that the Boards of Governors, managers, &c., do afford every facility for the admission of the several chaplains to enable them to officiate according to their respective creeds, "and to afford religious instruction and consolation to the patients, except such as shall be declared by the physician to be unfit and incapable of understanding the nature of the service, and of appreciating the effects of religion?"—There is an objection to the orders with respect to chaplains which has not been put forward, and which appears to me to be a very strong one. The matter is provided for in the resolution of the Governors which I have read, and it is, that the clergyman of the parish to which the party belongs should be referred to, respecting the visitation of the patient, either personally or that he should have the recommendation of the person to be sent to the patient. There is no provision for that in the Orders in Council. Now, it appears to me, that the appointment of chaplains would exclude a patient from receiving the ministrations of his own pastor.

1795. That is of the pastor of the parish in which he lived before he came to the asylum?—Yes.

1796. Does not that equally apply to the case of poorhouses and gaols?—It certainly does apply to them. I referred to it, because we had that point in view when drawing up the resolution.

Assembling inmates by the Manager for Prayer, &c.

1797. Dr. Stewart has stated that, subsequently to his appointment, he was in the habit of assembling the inmates to read the Bible for them, and for the purpose of prayer: what is your opinion of that proceeding?—I was not aware of that proceeding, and it did not take place till after I ceased to attend here as a Governor.

1798. If the resolution provided all that was sufficient for the religious wants of the inmates, was there any necessity for the manager undertaking to provide more?—We considered at the time that the resolution we adopted provided sufficiently for the religious wants of the inmates. Those who were able to go out to attend public worship went out, and there was a provision made for those who were in a fit state to receive the visits of their clergy.

Opinion as to the appointment of Chaplains.

1799. What objection have you, in the main, to the appointment of chaplains for the institution?—At the time we did not consider, in discussing the question, that it was necessary; and we considered that having a variety of chaplains would cause excitement among the patients. I must confess, as regards that, that my opinion has been very much qualified by the answers to his letter which the bishop has read. At the time I speak of, the treatment of lunatics was comparatively in its infancy, and we at that time did the best we could for the interests of the institution. Since then improvements have been made in various ways. I have not taken any part in the chaplaincy question, and I attended here to-day more in reference to matters connected with the early state of the institution. I have stated what was my opinion at the time the resolution to which I have referred was adopted, and I have stated one objection to the appointment of chaplains, which is, if I wished to see a person who was a member of my own congregation, I could not do so without the permission of the Established Church chaplain.

1800. How would it be possible to have the minister of a distant parish, or a distant congregation, brought to Belfast to visit in this asylum a patient who belonged to his congregation before he was admitted, and who required religious ministrations?—I have had on more occasions than one a letter requesting me to see a person from another parish, and I would presume the arrangement was carried out as regards other denominations. I presume that there was no want felt. Our arrangement was made in 1834, and as far as I am aware we heard nothing on the subject till 1851. We considered, therefore, that the Lord Lieutenant was satisfied with the provision which was made till that time. If it now appears to be an advantage, from the practice in other places, to have chaplains, and that it is considered necessary, I, of course, have nothing further to say.

Lectures from gaols; idiots and epileptics.

1801. Is there any other matter that you would wish to bring before the Commissioners?—There are several matters that at an early period engaged our attention, and which I would wish to speak about:—First, with regard to the cases from gaols, we experienced a good deal of inconvenience on that subject. The Grand Jury of the county of Antrim appointed, in 1835, a Board of Superintendence, part of whose office was to examine the institutions receiving aid from the county. I was a member of that Board. We had several meetings on the subject, and a certain number of queries were drawn up, and inquiries were made for the satisfaction of the Grand Jury. I mention this to show that the Grand Jurors, from the commencement, and particularly from the time of the enlargement of the building, were inquiring carefully about various matters concerning the asylum; that is, that the Grand Jury inquiry did not first arise on the recent meeting of the chaplaincy question in 1851. Here are a series of inquiries made respecting the institution in 1835. [Document exhibited.] Very early after the opening of the institution it was stated, that no idiotic or epileptic cases were to be received; and in 1835, that is, six years after the asylum was opened, there was not one idiotic case. We had a correspondence with the Government on the subject of the reception of such cases. In fact, from 1831, two years after the asylum was opened, it has been burdened with innumerable cases: nearly two-thirds of our cases were innumerable. At one time I was directed to correspond with the Governors of the Derry, Armagh, and Limerick Asylums, which were then in operation, on the subject of innumerable. The Governors of the Derry Asylum recommended that a provincial asylum should be erected for those cases; and it was the opinion, I think, of the Governors of the Armagh Asylum, and here, that there should be extended accommodation provided for them in the existing asylum, rather than in a provincial asylum.

Innumerable cases.

The Asylum accommodation.

1802. Have the increased wants of this district been provided for since that period by additional buildings?—The additional building is full now, so full that urgent cases are not admitted. There should be always a few beds to receive cases for immediate treatment. It appears to me, that without the erection of an additional building, and with very little expense, a suitable building might be had, by obtaining one of the union workhouses. I would suggest that a few of the larger union workhouses most suited to the purpose, and where there was ground for cultivation, should be obtained; and that idiotic and epileptic, and incurable cases generally should be transferred to them from other workhouses, and from the asylum; and in that way, without any additional expense, accommodation could be provided, as it is not likely those workhouses will ever be required again, for the same purpose for which they have been hitherto used.

8003. Have there been any workhouses erected in the counties of Antrim or Down since the introduction of the poor law?—None, I believe, but in many of them there are but few inmates. It is considered that some might be dispensed with in the county of Antrim, by transferring the inmates to other workhouses, if the principle were followed of charging the unions respectively for their own paupers.

8004. If any of the unions were extended, the distance the poor of that union would have to go to the workhouse would, of course, be increased?—One would not contemplate the dissolution of a union; it would be practically the same. Something has been said about the payment by patients in asylums. That subject engaged our attention very early. The word in the Act of Parliament is "pauper."

8005. "Lunatic poor"?—In the original form it was "pauper." At a very early period we had to change it to "poor persons," and the interpretation we adopted was, a person not able to pay the charge in a lunatic asylum. We considered, however, that it might be desirable to classify the expenditure, and that some might be able to pay one rate, and some another rate, and that many would rather pay something; but it was considered that the Governors had not power to make any such regulation, and objections to the arrangement have been stated by Dr. Stewart.

8006. Do you consider the objections of Dr. Stewart valid?—Yes.

8007. How far do you think jealousies might arise amongst the patients, if they were treated in the same manner?—It appears to us it would be opening a door to abuses to adopt such a system, and that it might lead to the introduction of a class of patients able to pay, and the exclusion of those who were poor. The asylum might be filled with paying patients, while those for whose relief it was originally intended might be excluded. The only other point that occurred to me to mention was, that we had under discussion, at an early period, the propriety of having a medical school here for the study of insanity and its treatment. It was considered there might be objections to that, and that if it were known there were post mortem examinations it might interfere with persons sending their lunatic friends into the asylum. Our first physician was very anxious to have a room appropriated to himself and to his pupils, and to have post mortem examinations.

8008. Clinical instruction might be given without having post mortem examinations?—It might.

8009. Are you aware that post mortem examinations are carried on in all the ordinary hospitals?—No.

8010. They are; and if they do not deter friends and relatives from sending patients to them, why should such a circumstance interfere to prevent the sending of patients to this establishment?—If such a fact has not that effect in general hospitals, I do not suppose that objection would apply with reference to this asylum.

The Rev. Henry Montgomery, LL.B., sworn and examined.

8011. How many years have you been a Governor of this asylum?—Twenty-one years.

8012. Have you been a constant attendant during that period?—I believe more so than any other Governor, except that at one time I was confined to my house.

8013. What is your opinion as to the manner in which the Governors are appointed?—I have no objection to the manner in which the Governors are appointed. I believe it is a very good mode, appointing them by the Lord Lieutenant, but I believe the Government ought to pay some respect to recommendations coming from us. I do not ask to take the appointment from the Government at all; in honest truth, I rather prefer those things to be done by the Executive authority. The arrangement keeps jealousies from amongst us, and I believe it is better for ourselves that the appointments should be so made; but I do not think that the Government ought, when we respectfully put a statement before them as to the desirability of appointing Governors, to neglect such a statement. For instance, we have two or three times applied to have a gentleman appointed from the County of the Town of Carrickfergus, which, though in our district, has no Governor at all. We never received, I think, any answer to our application. The gentleman was of the first character and respectability. I do not wish, as I have said, to take the appointment from the Government, but I would wish we would be treated with that amount of courtesy to which we are entitled, devoting ourselves, as we do, largely, to the public service, and knowing, as we do know, the character of the persons, and their aptitude, whom we recommend.

8014. With regard to the regulations for the government of the asylum, and the duties of the various officers, do you think they should still continue to be fixed by the Privy Council?—Well I see no objection to that either. At the same time I believe that the Privy Council would act wisely in consulting the local Boards; and if you will look to the Orders in Council of 1843, I think you will find them very nearly copied from the regulations antecedently adopted by this asylum, to a very large extent.

8015. I believe there were, previously to 1843, regulations which had originally emanated from the Commissioners of Lunatic Asylums, though they were not formally approved of by the Council?—Possibly; at all events the Orders in Council are very much formed on the regulations we had here before that period.

8016. From your acquaintance with this district is it your opinion that the Belfast District Asylum affords sufficient accommodation for the lunatic poor?—It affords at present, I think, sufficient accommodation for all the wants of the lunatic paupers, but not for the lunatic poor. I consider those to be lunatic poor who are the relatives of tradesmen and farmers able to support themselves by their industry, and able, perhaps, to pay a certain sum for a lunatic relative, which would be equivalent to what is expended for the actual support of a pauper here, but certainly unable to support their lunatic relatives in private establishments; and I have known cases of great hardship to arise amongst that class. One case, in particular, of great hardship came under my own knowledge, where a respectable farmer desired to have his daughter put into this asylum. She was certified as a pauper, but we knew that her father was a man in comfortable circumstances, as a farmer, and we declined to receive her. He was not able to send her to a private asylum; and she remained at home, a great distress to the family. We conceive that as the farmers are the men who chiefly support this establishment, pay the taxes, and heavy taxes too, that they ought at least to have the privilege of having their relatives admitted to the benefit of this establishment as a curative institution, on paying a sum equivalent to the actual cost of their support. I am very glad to be able to tell you that in the Bill that was introduced into Parliament on our recommendation last year,—and I had something to do in drawing up the very clause on the subject in the Bill,—the Government consented to adopt that rational and humane principle. The 10th clause of the proposed Bill, number two, runs thus:—

“Whereas pauper lunatics only can now by law be admitted into any such district lunatic asylum, and there are others of the industrious classes, suffering from insanity, who may be benefited by treatment in lunatic asylums, but whose relatives are unable to meet the expense of private asylums, and are not willing to accept gratuitous relief; and it is expedient that some provision should be made for such classes: Be it, therefore, enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Governors of any district lunatic asylum (subject to any Orders to be made by the Lord Lieutenant in Council) to receive as inmates any persons not coming under the description of pauper lunatics (but to be treated in all respects as if pauper lunatics, clothing only excepted), on such terms, as to payment or otherwise, as to the Governors shall seem proper; and the monies so received as payment for such persons shall be applied to the support and maintenance of such asylums.”

I had a good deal to do with the drawing up of this clause in London, aided by my friend Mr. Macrory, who is here. The Governors adopted it. It seemed to be considered one of the best provisions that could be put into the Act. I know that my friend Dr. Stewart's opinions on all subjects respecting the insane are entitled to the very highest respect, but at the same time, he does not live, as I do, and as many clergymen do, in our respective country districts, where we see those unfortunate people a burden to their relatives at home. If he did I think he would give up his objections to this principle. If it be necessary to enlarge the asylum for the purpose of admitting that class, let it be done; if it be necessary to appoint, in addition, another medical attendant, let it be done. I hold, that in reality those are the parties to whom it is most important we should administer the consolations and comforts afforded by the asylum. They are more to be pitied than the lowest and meanest vagabonds of the country. I merely venture to say that this suggestion was made in conformity with the resolution of this Board, which I carried over to London, and that it was no new thought with us, for we repeatedly laid it before the Lord Lieutenant when we had discussions with him on other subjects. There was no difference of opinion at the Board on the subject.

8017. This provision to which you have referred does not limit the amount to be paid to the actual cost of maintenance?—No, because it was thought some might pay a little more, but I do not believe it was ever contemplated to take more.

8018. You are satisfied that there is no danger of parties being admitted at £5 and £10 a-year who might be able to pay a larger sum?—I really think there would not be any danger of that. In the case of the unfortunate individual to whom I have referred, Lord Downshire himself stated that this man could pay something, that he could pay £20 a-year, but could not pay £50 a-year in a private asylum. We might admit some unfortunate cases for £5 or £10 a-year, so that there would not be a total loss as regards them.

8019. Respecting the reception of paying patients, one of the evils to be guarded against would be the improper transfer of what might be fairly borne by individuals to the public rates: you do not apprehend that any thing of that kind would arise?—No, I think not. If a person could pay £5 a-year, let it be paid; if £10, then let that be paid. What are you doing with public rates but supporting the poor.

8020. The next point in this 10th clause is that there is an exception as to the clothing of paying patients, so that the distinction between that class and the pauper inmates would be ostentatiously made known?—I am quite free to state with respect to that provision, that it was put in without my particular concurrence. I did not wish to lose the whole substance of what was good. I advocated from the first that there should be no distinction whatever. I believed that such a distinction would create jealousies; in the end it was put in at the request of another party who held a different view, and thought it might take away something of the humiliation of being classed with paupers.

8021. Is the resolution of the Board exactly in conformity with this clause?—It is very nearly so.

8022. Can you furnish the Commissioners with copies of resolutions approving of this clause?—Yes.

* Board Room, 2nd June, 1856.—The Very Rev. Dean Stannus in the Chair.

"The Lunatic Asylums Bill, No. 2, brought into the House of Commons by Mr. Hensman and the Attorney-General for Ireland, having been submitted to the Board, and duly considered; the Governors expressed their satisfaction, that some of the most objectionable provisions of the former Bill have been modified or entirely removed, whilst two valuable changes have been added, in relation to the Supervision of Officers, and the Admission of Patients, not coming strictly under the designation of Pauper Lunatics.

"(Signed) JAMES STANNUS, Chairman."

I firmly believe that any new Act without a provision of the kind will not meet the exigencies of the case.

8023. With regard to the chargeability of pauper lunatics, are you satisfied with the present state of the law, under which the charge is defrayed out of the county rate?—Yes, I think it is perfectly proper.

8024. Do you prefer it to an arrangement by which it would be charged upon the electoral divisions out of the poor rates?—I think it is better to charge it upon the counties. The larger the surface over which it is spread the less it will be felt.

8025. You are aware the difference is two-fold; first of all, under the county rate the charge is thrown entirely upon the rate borne by the occupiers, while under the poor rate system the charge would be borne both by landlord and occupiers; and next, the county rate is levied upon a smaller area than the poor rate?—I am aware of the distinction; and I had the honour of making a suggestion to the effect that the poor rate should not be made a tax upon the whole union, but, except for general purposes, a tax upon electoral divisions; because if we extend it over the whole union there would not be the same vigilance and care exercised to prevent imposition. There is no chance, however, of imposition in reference to unfortunate lunatics. That is a distinction that I perceive between the two cases of sane paupers and lunatics. The question of area does not make a difference in my view; and my wish that the charge for this establishment should be entirely, as at present, upon the county rate, is not altered by the fact that the county rate is paid exclusively by the occupier.

8026. Have you ever considered any arrangement which might be made for providing for that class of patients who are described in the returns as "probably incurable"?—I have always considered that it would be desirable to have a provincial establishment, supported by taxes raised from the provinces, and let it be built to any extent that would be required, and that those incurable cases should be placed in such establishment. I believe the association of probable curable cases with incurable cases is injurious to the former. I knew that perpetual association with insane persons has some times affected sane minds. Gradually and imperceptibly the sane mind begins to be affected from its being perpetually surrounded by insanity. I believe a provincial establishment, sufficiently large for the reception of incurable cases, would serve the purpose. The more you could collect in the one place the less proportionately would be the general expenditure and the staff. There can be no question of that.

8027. Do you consider that any objection might arise against having a very large number of incurables collected in the provincial institution?—It is just possible a difficulty might arise. I cannot at this moment form any estimate of the number that ought to be in such an institution, but supposing they did not amount to more than a thousand, I do not think there would be any objection. I do not believe it would be more difficult to manage a thousand incurable cases, who are generally quiet and harmless lâches, and easy to deal with, than the case at Haswell, where there are a thousand inmates.

8028. Some people consider that Haswell is too large?—I always understood it was a model in every respect; but supposing the asylum was considered too large you could have another. As to the general question of the separation of that class of lunatics from the others I entertain no doubt of the course that should be adopted.

8029. With regard to providing secular instruction in schools in this institution for such of the inmates as might be unable to read and write, do you consider that arrangement would be advantageous?—I have heard strong testimony given in favour of it by most benevolent and intelligent men, but I have not been deeply impressed myself with the advantages of such a provision.

8030. As a mere occupation would it not be desirable?—I must take the adjuncts of that. You would have very soon precisely the same difficulties that apply to the chaplaincy question, and in rather a worse form in relation to the secular instruction. I think every gentleman will feel that, because there would be facilities for the teacher of such a class, which you or I, if standing beside him, could not prevent him from using—there are modes of posing questions, modes of explaining answers, that I think it would be almost impossible for humanity to guard against.

8031. You think the question of a separate system of education might arise?—That is precisely what I think, and I do not know that the poor people who come in here are in such want of instruction as to make it desirable to give it to them, especially if they are never to go into the world again. If they are to go into the world once more their minds will be recovered, and they will obtain the information they will require. "I may select ten or twenty patients and apply instruction to them according to their minds, and I may do them good, but I am not to take ten or twenty, I am to take 360 patients. I do not feel the force of the remarks that have been made on the subject, however benevolently they were intended and well thought over by the individuals who made them.

8032. Your last answer has reference more to the school instruction, with a view to the restoration of the individual to society?—Yes.

8033. But may not the occupation which school instruction affords be of great advantage to the lunatic in a curative point of view?—I am not able to form any distinct opinion on that subject; in some cases I have no doubt it would, and in other cases I am convinced it would not be of any advantage. I do not find that people always employ their knowledge profitably.

8034. You are aware that in every lunatic asylum there are many persons whose insanity is of a very mild and slight form, while others are labouring under an insanity which may be considered incurable. In that point of view, what is your opinion as to the propriety, or otherwise, of the inmates of such an institution as this being provided with the means of attending religious worship, and having religious ministrations?—Well, this is a question of vast importance, at least I feel it so. I do not know that I have ever been as anxious on any public question as this, for I am quite aware that there are sound opinions of Christian men on both sides. I am quite satisfied; if the patients were all of one religious denomination, that a judicious chaplain, such as Dr. McCusker described—who would live, as it were, with them, and not come as a bird of passage, and go over a certain form of prayers and words, and then walk away—I believe that some good, in that case, might be effected. I have no doubt that in some such cases as those to which you have referred, it would be beneficial; but we are to take these asylums as they are in a country like Ireland, and we are to take this country as one where the population from the highest grade to the lowest is of a very varied character, both as to religion and politics; and there can be no doubt that in insanity, as with men when they are under the influence of intoxicating liquors, all their ordinary views and feelings are greatly exaggerated. The lunatics coming into this asylum, therefore, being in, not in a mild form, but in a strong, exaggerated form, the passions and prejudices which prevail in the society from which they come. I am quite aware that even without any stimulus, or that most stimulating of all elements, the religious element, it is sometimes difficult to prevent political and religious acrimony from springing up here. I have been myself assailed by a patient within these boundaries on account of my "heresy," and informed that he possessed vast knowledge beyond what I possessed; and he informed me also that I was only fitted for a certain uncomfortable locality. Well, if that occurred in relation to myself, one of the Governors, who has at least endeavoured to be as kind as possible to them all, who has added somewhat to their comfort in various ways through the kindness of my brother Governors, I think it would necessarily be a very great evil if it were permitted on a large and greater scale. I am very sorry that the Rev. Dr. Cooke is not here, and I shall tell you my reason: he is a doctor of laws, and well entitled to the dignity, and he is a doctor of divinity; no man has superior information; but above all, he has studied the physiology of man, medical science, in some of the best universities both of Ireland and Scotland, and he has studied it particularly in relation to this very question of mental insanity. I confess that his views coinciding with my own primarily made me very strong in them; and his arguments afterwards at our Board, when we discussed this question, were so forcible, that I really had not power to resist them. I think a man of his large capacity, admittedly high character, admittedly strong religious impressions, is a man whose opinion ought to have very great weight. If he were here he would tell you with infinitely more power than I can bring before you, the objections against having chaplains in this asylum; but if it would not be deviating from the path which you have pointed out for yourselves, it would, perhaps, be convenient to hear a statement from me of this whole chaplaincy question. We cannot blink this fact, that one main object of your inquiry is to investigate this matter with regard to religious instruction; and allow me just before I enter upon it, to say, that we have never desired to prevent religious instruction from being afforded in any asylum in any way that the Governors of that asylum may deem expedient. Where chaplains were supposed, from the condition of the population, or from local circumstances, or if you choose, from strong impressions of any kind, to be desirable, we have never wished to interfere with their appointment; but what we do wish is simply this, and what we would implore you to do and recommend is this, that the Boards of Governors, who have, undoubtedly, I think, the deepest interest in the poor people committed to their care, the relations of their friends and humble neighbours, that liberty should be given to them of appointing or not appointing chaplains as they might deem expedient. I have no wish, recollect, to interfere with the Lord Lieutenant's power to appoint chaplains, or any of the higher officers here; in point of fact, for the reason already stated, I wish the power to remain with him. I think the arrangement protects us from being influenced in those matters by our local feelings and prepossessions; but I think the Lord Lieutenant should only appoint chaplains on application from the Board of Governors. Whenever such an application is made, I think the Lord Lieutenant should appoint chaplains. I wish to put this as a preliminary statement to show that it is not on the subject of chaplains at all, though we have our feelings on the subject, that we wish to give my opposition; but that it is in relation to our own peculiar locality; and our knowledge of this locality is such, I think, as to enable us to speak authoritatively.

I will now state the origin of this question. The Rev. Dr. Hincks has stated truly that it was first mooted in 1834. The regulation that was then made was carried on, I think, without complaint, until 1849 or 1850, when—and I speak it with perfect respect to the gentlemen—Dr. White, the Inspector of Asylums, at a meeting of our Board here, stated to us, that chaplains were generally being appointed, or had been appointed in the asylums, and that he hoped we would concur in making similar appointments. There was no entry made upon our minutes—it was a simple conversation; but Dr. Maunt's regulation was read over to Dr. White, and it was stated, that we had no desire to alter that arrangement. We heard nothing therefore, in relation to it, until the year 1851, to which reference has already been made, when the subject of the erection of a chapel, and the appointment of chaplains, came before the Board of Governors for the first time, on the occasion of the plans for the new buildings being brought under their consideration—that is to say, it was then officially, for the first time, laid before us. It had been spoken of previously. A remarkable feature in this chapel was, that it was to contain 270 persons; and we thought that rather a large building for the accommodation of three or four, or five people of any denomination that might be able to attend. We then deemed it necessary to remonstrate against this, though we felt, in point of fact, that any remonstrance against any arrangement of the Board of Works, from our past experience of them, was likely to be entirely unproductive. We did specially debate the question at several unusually large meetings, and many votes were taken and always with the same result, that of a decided negative. The proposition was consequently supposed to have been abandoned by the authorities—that is, by the Lord Lieutenant—the mind of the Board being so unmistakably adverse to the principle. The question was, however, again unexpectedly re-opened, owing to the actual appointment of a Presbyterian Chaplain, in February, 1853, when the whole matter was re-discussed with the utmost deliberation, and again finally, and all but unanimously, rejected. As much interest has been, and continues to be, attached to a question replete with the gravest importance to the institution, there is given a summary of the proceedings, the same commencing with the minutes from the time the point was first mooted at the Board, and continuing consecutively to the present period. I have this summary here, which I shall be ready at any time to hand in. At a special meeting of the Governors, held on Thursday, the 11th September, 1851, the plans of the new buildings being laid on the table, and explained by Mr. Lanyon, and fully examined and considered by the Board, it was resolved:—

“That seeing a chapel has been marked down on the plans, by direction of the Board of Works, as one of the new buildings, this meeting are of opinion, that the expediency of its erection should be specially considered at the next regular meeting, and that such be notified in the summonses calling the same.”

The next meeting occurred in October, and it was then resolved:—

“That after mature consideration of the peculiar circumstances of the population of this district, the Board are of opinion, that the system of religious instruction adopted on the 3rd March, 1834, (the Bishop of Down and Connor presiding), and which has hitherto been found so successful, should be continued; and that, consequently, the erection of a chapel, which seems to involve the appointment of a numerous staff of chaplains, and the probable introduction of religious controversy and excitement among the patients, is inexpedient.”

At a meeting of the Governors, held on Monday, November 3, 1851, there was read a letter, dated 21st ultimo, received from Sir T. N. Hedington, stating that the Lord Lieutenant (Lord Clarendon), having had under consideration the Board's resolution of the 6th ultimo, respecting the inexpediency of the erection of the proposed chapel, in connexion with the other intended new buildings, did not feel that he could concur in the opinion the Board had adopted. Dr. White, who attended that Board, having entered at large into the propriety of the Board rescinding the above referred to resolution, and a lengthened discussion having followed, it was ultimately resolved:—

“That at the next monthly meeting this Board shall be specially summoned to consider the above letter of the Lord Lieutenant (Lord Clarendon), relative to the erection of a chapel; and also the propriety of appointing chaplains for the religious instruction and comfort of the several classes of the inmates of this asylum.”

We took abundance of time you will perceive. The next meeting was held on the 1st December following, when it was proposed:—

“That the Board's resolution of the 6th October last be re-affirmed by this meeting, and that the statement now submitted, assigning reasons for its re-adoption, be transmitted to the Lord Lieutenant.”

An amendment was moved to this resolution, by the Bishop of Down and Connor and Dromore, seconded by the Rev. J. S. B. Monsell, and that amendment was as follows:—

“That inasmuch as the appointment of chaplains in other hospitals for the insane has been found beneficial to the inmates, and has not been found to produce any injurious effects, we resolve to express our approbation of his Excellency's intention to appoint chaplains in the Belfast hospital for the insane.”

The amendment was put; when the voters for it were, the Bishop of Down and Connor, Mr. Monsell, Dr. Donvir, who was chairman—we allowed him to vote, and we allowed the minority always to vote under protest—and there was the Rev. Dr. Edgar, making a total of four in favour of the amendment. Against it were, Messrs. Bruce, Crawford, and McCance; the Mayor of Belfast, the Rev. Dr. Montgomery, Messrs. Grimshaw, Blackiston Houston, Tennent, Clarke, and Dunville, ten in all. The amendment being declared lost, the original motion was then put, and the votes for it were three of the last-named ten Governors; and against it those of the above four supporters of the amendment. The motion was accordingly declared carried. You see, therefore, the deliberation with which every thing was entered into; and every document that we sent to the Lord Lieutenant on the subject was perfectly known to the gentlemen who conscientiously opposed our views at the Board. I am sorry to say that we did not experience quite so much courtesy on the other side. It was stated to you to-day by the excellent Bishop of Down and Connor, that they put forward memorials. We never saw them—we did not hear of them until afterwards, indirectly; we knew nothing of their contents. They might produce what impression they were calculated to produce, and they evidently did produce a great impression upon the Government; and when we applied to the Lord Lieutenant for copies of those memorials, in some unaccountable way the favour was not conferred upon us. I mention this to show that every act that we did as the majority of the Board was perfectly clear and above board, and I do not accuse the excellent Bishop who is here (the Lord Bishop of Down and Connor and Dromore), of doing any thing unworthy or disingenuous. I state the thing simply as a fact, that the minority knew every thing which we had put forward on the subject; that the Inspectors of Asylums know every thing which we had put forward, and we desired that the Inspectors should know every thing; but every thing that the Inspectors and the other party put forward to the Government when we were not present, we were entirely ignorant of. Some time after, in February, 1852, a letter was received, dated 12th January in the same year, from Sir William Somerville, Bart., Chief Secretary, transmitting, by direction of the Lord Lieutenant, a copy of a report of the Inspectors, in reply to the Board's statement of December before, and stating that his Excellency fully concurred in the propriety of chaplains being appointed to the asylum; and thereupon it was ordered that the consideration of both of the above documents be postponed till next meeting, which was to be specially summoned for that purpose. The reference here is to a memorial that had been presented by us to the Lord Lieutenant, requesting him not to appoint chaplains, and the memorial was properly laid before the Inspectors for their remarks on the subject. We made no complaint at all. It would be tedious to read to you what will be found in their report, our memorial, and their rejoinder. They will be found in the report of 1853, at page 22, et seq. Our memorial to which the replication was made, was published in that report; but I have to advert to a remarkable circumstance that occurred. It was in February before this that we made an application to Lord Eglinton's successor, to Lord St. Germans, and sent a memorial containing our arguments, as we conceived, and a refutation of the statements made in the report of May, 1853. In February, or early in March of that year, we gave in our replication to the report. Strange to say, our reply was not published, though it was in their hands, and although we took up, nearly sextante, the arguments which they had used in opposition to our views; and we then sent a memorial requesting that our replication might be ordered by Parliament to be printed. This in some way was refused, and we never had an opportunity except in this pamphlet form I have before me, and which was presented to the Grand Jurors, of laying our views on the subject before the world. This, of course, was a very limited way of giving circulation to our opinions. The other was a Parliamentary document sent over the whole country, published in every newspaper. The replication which we made was a statement of what I have already referred to, as to the origin of this chaplaincy question, and we then went on to say to Lord St. Germans:—

"Without denying the reasonable consideration due to the opinions of dissenters (although we believe them to be, like other men, subject to professional bias), we respectfully solicit your Excellency's attention to the fact, that of the nine clerical members of the Board, only four, and one of them, a non-resident in the district, supported the proposition of the Inspectors. On the other hand, with the exception of one very able and most respectable gentleman, who remained neutral, every lay Governor ardently opposed the appointment of chaplains, not merely as inexpedient, but as almost certain to become, owing to antagonistic religious and political feelings in Down and Antrim, a source of serious injury to the patients, and a ground of irritation in the public mind."

If chaplains should be forced upon us by any external authority, it will alienate, I know, to a very great extent, the kind feelings of the people towards this institution. The statement to Lord St. Germans continues:—

"With regard to the decidedly pernicious tendency of systematized religious instruction by several chaplains in the same asylum, where the patients must immediately afterwards converse with each other in the grounds or corridors, we have never entertained one moment's doubt. On this point our convictions have been strengthened by the writings of distinguished medical authorities in several countries. By the decided opinion of the late truly eminent Dr. McDonnell, our first visiting physician (father of John McDonnell), and of his almost equally eminent successor, the late Dr. Thompson; by the strongly expressed views of our present visiting physician, Dr. McGowan, who has read almost every published treatise upon insanity, and who has himself written several works on the physical and mental constitution of man; and finally, above all, our convictions have been corroborated by the tabulating opinion of Dr. Stewart, our most faithful and most successful manager, and resident physician, during the last eighteen years—a gentleman whose theoretical information is both accurate and extensive, and whose vast practical knowledge, aided by his perfect acquaintance with our social condition, entitles his views upon the question, as we sincerely believe, to higher consideration than those of any other individual in this country."

That is still our view. Our statement proceeds:—

"We are not unaware that several eminent and experienced physicians have sanctioned religious instruction as a medical aid"—

This is all that has ever been said for it—

"—as a medical aid in certain convalescent cases and under certain conditions; and we know that as these opinions our zealous Inspectors prominently relied in their elaborate report to Lord Clarendon, dated 31st December, 1851. We respectfully submit to your Excellency, however, that not one of the opinions cited, bears distinctly upon the case of the Belfast Asylum, with the exception, perhaps, of a very qualified statement made by Dr. Bagen, of Derry, so far back as the year 1845. All the other statements evidently refer to places where one chaplain alone is employed, and where, consequently, no excitement can be produced, either by controversial preaching, or by the very presence of several chaplains connected with the antagonistic sects out of doors; whilst every opinion is guarded by the earnest depreciation of sectarian, exciting, or gloomy discourses; by showing that religion should be administered as far as possible, in conformity with the soothing influence of family usages, and setting it down as a sine qua non, that even the one chaplain should be a man carefully selected for his piety, piety, gentleness, and moderation."

In relation to this opinion of ours, it would be invidious for me, but it is absolutely necessary, to state, that some of the chaplains—though highly respectable, there was not the slightest imputation against them—were very young ministers in their churches—one, I think, a mere youth just licensed and out of college: the condition, therefore, to which I have referred, was not fulfilled in these appointments so as to make the gentlemen put forward as chaplains such as would render the office at least not injurious. But to resume the statement to Lord St. Germans:—

"Now, we respectfully submit to your Excellency, that all the advantages contemplated in the most favourable circumstances have been virtually attained in the Belfast Asylum, under Bishop Mann's judicious regulation. Ministers of their own communion have, in cases of sickness, and at other times when desired, attended patients mentally convalescent; whilst those more perfectly restored to health have been not only permitted, but encouraged to visit their respective places of worship, in company with a respectable attendant. But should your Excellency appoint three, or in the exercise of a strict impartiality, seven chaplains (as our inmates belong to seven denominations)"—

I think we had seven denominations here—

"—we most respectfully maintain, that the very fact of such appointments, to please different sects, would not merely imply the propriety, but induce the practice, of sectarian preaching, and thus distract the delightful harmony which has uniformly pervaded our asylum, and produced those happy results in a moment we solicit your Excellency's attention."

Then come testimonials respecting the state of the asylum from the two Inspectors, and you will see how much weight is to be attached to them. Under date June 5th, 1849, Dr. Nugent says:—

"On my inspection of the Belfast Lunatic Asylum this day, I found the house itself in the usual state of order and cleanliness; whilst the patients, judiciously employed, and carefully attended to, reflect the greatest credit on the resident physician, Dr. Stewart. This being my first visit since the death of our late amiable and highly informed attendant physician, Dr. Thompson, I deem it but justice to his memory to state that, with the utmost professional care of the inmates of this establishment, he conducted himself with a delicacy towards the Governors, &c., and various officers of the Belfast District Asylum, so as to command their unqualified respect and admiration."

"JOHN NOBLE."

"September 27, 1851.—I have inspected the asylum this day, and have only to express the greatest satisfaction at finding it in such admirable order and state of cleanliness. The patients appeared very happy and comfortable, and nearly all employed at their respective works."

"FRANCIS WHITE, Inspector-General of Asylums."

One more testimonial from Dr. Nugent, to which I especially request your attention:—

"May 4, 1852.—Inspected the Belfast District Lunatic Asylum this day and yesterday, and have every reason to express my unqualified satisfaction, as a Government officer, with the details of its management, and the general appearance of the institution; the comfort and tranquillity of the patients afford the truest criterion whereby to judge of the attention and care bestowed on them by the resident physician superintendent, Dr. Stewart, as well as by the matron. Dr. McCormack, who is most regular in his visitations, gives the benefit of his professional experience in the treatment of the inmates; and hence the Belfast Asylum is particularly fortunate in the per centage of its recoveries. No Board is more fully attended to in Ireland than that of this asylum: it is, therefore, unnecessary to observe on its fiscal condition."

"JOHN NOBLE."

Now, I have a most important document to lay before you, emanating from those gentlemen. In the Report of 1853 the worthy Inspectors have supplied us with other and irresistible evidence, in favour of the wisdom and success of the course of medical and moral treatment hitherto pursued in our asylum. In their clear and accurate "Return of cases cured and improved in the District Lunatic Asylums in Ireland, during the years ending March, 1850 and 1851," we find that Belfast stands eminently above all the others, both in regard to cures and improvement. Here is my table. The total number of inmates in the two years that I have named in the Belfast Asylum, was 762; of those 131 were cured, or a per centage of 18½. Those improved amounted to 50, the per centage being 6½, making a total, cured and improved, of 28 per cent, and a fraction over. Now I come to Londonderry Asylum, the much praised one by the Inspectors, and much praised as we have had it from our excellent bishop to-day. The numbers in the same years in the Londonderry Asylum were 631; there were cured 92, being 14½ per cent.; number improved, only 12, the per centage being two; making instead of our per centage of 28 and a fraction over, merely 18½, or thereabouts, of cured and improved cases. I then go to Ballinacree, which passed a great eulogium to-day upon chaplains. It had the benefit of chaplains; and you will see the great results that proceeded from that soothing and delightful influence that religion produces, and where there was nothing but harmony and good will. That asylum had 780 cases in the same period, the number cured 59, or 7½ or 7¾ per centage, less than one-half of our un-chaplained establishment; and number improved only 4, making a general average of cured and improved 8 per cent, and a fraction over. I come to another chaplained asylum, and it is the last I will give you, the Richmond asylum. It had 901 cases; 83 were cured, being 10½ per cent, and 17 improved, making a total per centage of 12½ cured and improved. Now I hold that those facts are infinitely above all the theories that ever could be delivered or propounded by mortal man, and infinitely above the replies which the learned bishop received from the managers of establishments, who, I dare say, are perfectly honest and worthy men, but who, in all the documents that he read, spoke of nothing decidedly, and who, no doubt, did not wish to cut off the worthy chaplains from their comfortable salaries. What the manager of the Waterford Asylum said was, that he "did not perceive any bad results." I find that Maryborough said there was "no injury." Well, that is not a very strong testimonial—that, indeed, it was salutary whilst they were engaged in it. From Limerick, I think, there is very little said. Carlow tells us it was looked forward to with pleasure. I believe it. The very excitement of chaplains coming would be delightful—the haste, the pressure, the crowding forward of the patients to get themselves admitted, would, as a matter of course, give them the highest satisfaction—the very thing that the inmates delight in. I need not refer to Londonderry, for I have referred to it already. In Ballinasloe there are two chaplains, and I have shown you the result of their ministrations. In Cork I could have shown you the same. From Glendal and Armagh there are no returns. Now the bishop stated that in this asylum, or rather it was stated in the memorial that he read to the Lord Lieutenant, that no bad effect had sprung from the admission of chaplains here. I wish, before I proceed further, to read you the resolution of this Board of Governors, passed on the 6th of February, 1855. The minute contains several matters, first with regard to the law-suit, and then it comes to the resolution. The Board having considered the opinion of counsel which was laid before them, the following, amongst other resolutions, was adopted:—

"That our experience, during the last twelve months, so far from proving the admission of the three reverend gentlemen to have been salutary and comfortable, has shown it to have been, in several ways, decidedly inexpedient, and injurious; and, consequently, although sincerely reluctant to oppose any desire of the Lord Lieutenant, we feel ourselves compelled, by an imperative sentiment of duty to the poor inmates of this asylum, and to the public at large, to direct, as we saw fit, our solicitors, Messrs. Davison and Terrens, to make a suitable return to the mandamus, recently issued by the Court of Queen's Bench, asking that the legal position we contend for has been sustained by the concurrent opinion of four eminent counsel, in deliberate consultation."

This is signed by the Rev. Dr. Cooke, as chairman. I now pass on to show you that the other seven asylums, of which I had given no calculation or statement as to their cures and improvements, would show in each case results similar to the others I have mentioned; but we have selected Londonderry as the model, placed before Lord Clarendon by the Inspectors, to prove the advantage derived from the "soothing and salutary" influence of religion, under "three most judicious clergymen;" and the result is, that in Belfast upwards of 57 per cent. more persons are cured and improved than in Londonderry. The case of Ballinasloe is still more striking, where there is possibly but one chaplain, certainly not more than two; the proportion of cures in Belfast being greater by very nearly three to one. The great Richmond Asylum, with all its chaplains, confers advantage upon very little more than one half the proportionate number that receive benefit in Belfast. In our memorial, from which I have already read, addressed to the Earl of St. Germain, we say:—

"These facts, we respectfully state, are irresistible proofs of the practical good resulting from the system which we have hitherto pursued; for the Inspectors could not deny them."

The Inspectors were present at our interview, and they could not deny them.

"And though, undoubtedly, very able and ingenious men, they never even attempted to explain them. If it be alleged that the transcendental skill and care of our two physicians have produced a result so remarkable, and not the absence of authoritative and systematic religious teaching; we then deferentially submit that such a fact ought to give a paramount weight to the deliberate opinion of our medical officers. We believe, however, that in reality, the gratifying success of our system has emanated from the happy co-operation of two great causes—professional skill and the judicious, though not authoritative, inculcation of religion."

Now, sir, I believe it will be most convenient in this statement of mine to show you what was the "soothing and salutary effect" said to have resulted from having religious instruction here. We admitted the chaplains, as you have already heard to day, though not as chaplains, in deference to the Lord Lieutenant, and we admitted them in reality also for the purpose of experiment; having, as I can say for every gentleman who joined with me, no indisposition to have chaplains if they were proved to be practically useful. I now give you the results, at the end of the chaplains' ministrations, as taken from the Report of the same Inspectors of Asylums, for the year 1855. During the years 1854 and 1855, according to the last biennial return of the Government Inspectors, the total number of inmates in the Belfast Asylum was 678, cured 88, or 12½ per cent. That is a diminution of one-fourth from our former cures; improved, 38 or 5½ per cent., a diminution also, leaving our percentage of cures and improvements only 17½ per cent., in place of upwards of 24 per cent. In the same period there were in the Londonderry Asylum, 475 inmates; cured, 89, or 17½ per cent.; improved, 9, or 1½ per cent.; making a total of 10½ cured and improved. That is placing them two per cent., on the whole, above us, while they had formerly been below us. In the Ballinasloe Asylum, for the same time, out of 763 inmates there were 94 cured, or 12 per cent.; improved, 2, making on the whole an average of cured and improved of 12½ per cent. Richmond had, on the whole, 14 per cent.; and a strange fact, that the asylum which had no chaplains, and to which I shall very shortly advert, to show you that it had steadily resisted, and I believe will resist, the appointment of chaplains—that the Armagh Asylum, out of the small number of 404 patients, cured 84, or 20½ per cent., and improved 40 or 10 per cent., making up a total of cured and improved cases the enormous aggregate of 30½ per cent. Before we were blest here with the presence of chaplains, we were quite at the head of all the asylums in Ireland in our cures. According to the statement of the Inspectors themselves, our establishment was in every way beautifully managed; but when we came to have experience of the chaplains, we detailed down, so that, in point of fact, instead of my friend Dr. Stewart, like a good horseman riding the first horse, he is now somewhere away in the "rack"—third, fourth, or fifth of the asylums in Ireland. I here put before you those incontrovertible facts and figures; let mortal man answer them if he can in any other way. To me it is as clear as the sun at noon-day that our proportion of cures sunk down from the tremendous excitement that was produced in this place, not only by the ministrations of chaplains, but by—I do not wish to express it—the encouragement that seemed to be given to certain domestics here to rebel against the matrons and the manager, because they believed that there was an external power greater than the powers within the asylum. I might refer to the most shocking case of persecution that ever was attempted, against two of the best officers that ever served the public, Dr. and Mrs. Stewart, and that occupied us here in an investigation of eleven days, six or seven hours each day. When we had considered the charges of malversation and neglect of duty against Dr. Stewart, every one of which we went into to the fullest extent upon any testimony that was offered, the witnesses actually aided, as we know, by legal advice; and the result was, that of the eleven charges, which could easily be referred to—and it would be worth your while to look to the matter and see the effect of your chaplaincy appointments—the result, I say, was, that we declared of the eleven and last charge, (and it was unanimously declared by a full Board, Dr. Dewar, the Roman Catholic Bishop, being present), that this accusation, like all its precursors, was false, scandalous, and malicious. That was one of the blessed fruits of the appointment of chaplains.

1835. Chairman.—It is not very clear that that was the fruit of the appointment of chaplains. There is no necessity, in the heat of excitement, for embarrassing our minutes with those statements. In our memorial to the Lord Lieutenant we referred to the appointment of chaplains as producing the evil. I wish to lay before you my view of the case. Now, sir, there were authorities quoted, and authorities have been given to day, and authorities were given, as you will find, by the Inspectors' reports; and I really feel pained to ask you to listen to this very long statement of authorities I hold in my hand, but they are here printed, and, if you choose, let them be inserted on your minutes as read.

1836. Chairman.—Let it be so.—Witness. One is from Mr. Jackson, manager of the Armagh Asylum, that most successful of managers, in which he shows that religious instruction was tried by the asylum and that it was discontinued. No testimony could be stronger. [Same is delivered in, and is as follows:]—

"Armagh District Asylum, 10th February, 1833.

"To become thoroughly acquainted with the insane, and to be enabled to form just ideas of their character, and the treatment suited to each case, it is absolutely necessary to reside amongst them. After a residence of thirty-four years, and the whole of that period devoted to their moral treatment, I am decidedly of opinion, that to the resident officers of our asylums and their staff are we solely to look for the judicious and successful treatment of the inmates and character of the asylums. I am equally convinced that the interference of daily or casual visitors, or undue interference of non-resident officers, is sure to prove most injurious, producing excitement, when to calm and tranquillise is of so much importance. Strong proof of this view could be brought forward. I recollect a visiting physician to one of our asylums, who felt as interest in being what he conceived useful to the patients, but who committed a great error, in conversation with them, and in consequence it took a day and night to calm the excitement produced.

"As to the appointment of chaplains, I am perfectly convinced that their interference with all recent and curable cases would prove most injudicious, for it is an established fact, that the cure of the insane depends on knowing how to let them alone. We had a trial here of the effects produced by a benevolent and careless clergyman of the Church of England; he attended for some time, and a most judicious selection was made, I think the number of patients was six; but he came to the conclusion that his continuing the practice was worse than useless."

"THOMAS JACKSON."

The next is from one of the most evangelical ministers of the Church of England in Belfast, who tried the experiment of religious instruction here; and I would implore of every gentleman who has got strong opinions on the subject to read the testimony of that man. [Same is delivered in, and is as follows:]—

"February 1833.

"Having been requested by some who are interested in the question at present pending with respect to the appointment of chaplains to the Belfast District Asylum, to state concisely my views on that point, as grounded on some acquaintance with the affairs of that institution and its inmates, I readily accede to the suggestion, not only as one having a deep interest in the afflicted class principally concerned, but from an anxiety to afford any information in my power with reference to a matter which has become, in a good measure, one of public interest. With respect to the subject, generally considered, there may, and doubtless there do exist difficulties to be met by a prudent dealing with cases as they may arise. I can easily imagine a combination of circumstances, which might render such an appointment as a chaplain to such an institution a matter perhaps necessary, even though not desirable. It would at least be preposterous for one but partially informed on such cases to express a decided opinion, although, I must confess, that from all that I have either seen or read on the matter, I would be strongly disposed to consider any such appointment as better calculated to form the exception than the rule. With respect, however, to the Belfast Asylum, I have not the least hesitation in declaring that I consider the appointment of chaplains there most undesirable. My reasons for so stating may be briefly given as follows:—I have been acquainted with the resident physician of the district asylum for a period of about seventeen years, and during that time I have had frequent occasions of witnessing the manner in which the treatment of the insane has been conducted by him. It is only justice to state, that this treatment has been eminently successful. The annual tabular returns (which I always peruse with much interest) will of themselves prove this. My reason, however, for forming this high estimate of Dr. Stewart's professional ability and consequent success, under the Divine blessing, is drawn not only from these sources, but from the fact of my having been, indistinctly and otherwise, acquainted with very many cases under his care.

"In some of these cases I have been urged by the friends of the patients, as well as by my own anxiety for their restoration to remove, to visit them and observe their progress—never, indeed, let with the sanction and permission of the physician, Dr. Stewart; and I feel it only my duty to state, that, although thus permitted to visit, and to have such intercourse with those afflicted individuals as they were capable of appointing, it scarcely every such instance I regretted having done so—at least, until they were, in a great measure, pronounced convalescent by him. I almost invariably found my visit to tend to their excitement and consequent injury. More or less, I believe it is a generally admitted fact on the part of those best acquainted with the psychological phenomena, that insanity which takes what is called a religious form is among the worst of its many phases, and most difficult of treatment. I think it, therefore, a matter but of common sense, and extensively corroborated by experience, that the very sight of a minister, especially one formerly or habitually known to such patients, by its necessary connexion with the latent source of their mental disease, has a decided effect towards the aggravation of that disease. I need not say that insane persons are incapable of moral and religious impressions; but I am also decidedly of opinion, that the introduction of such topics, as regards time and manner, ought to be left to the judgment of the superintendents.

"If he be properly qualified to treat his patients, I think this matter may safely be left in his hands, especially if such institutions come to be considered, as actually they ought, not places of restraint for the violent, but curative ones for the mentally afflicted. I may add, to my experience, as above given, that in such an institution as that at Belfast, where the patients are professors of so many different religious creeds, the introduction of so many chaplains as would be rendered necessary, in order to carry out the idea, if at all entertained, would be a most disastrous occurrence, in my opinion.

"In England or Scotland, or in any other locality, where, perhaps, the services of a single chaplain might suffice, if such an appointment were productive of no positive good, it might be justly considered as at least a harmless, if not an interesting experiment; but in Ireland, and more especially in our part of it, and above all, in Belfast, from the reason just adduced, I cannot but consider the experiment a most rash one, and to be deprecated by all who have the interest of the unhappy class of our fellow-creatures under consideration sincerely at heart.

"WILLIAM McILWATER, A.M., Incumbent of St. George's, Belfast."

The next is an extract from a review on insanity and hospitals for the insane, published in the Dublin Quarterly Journal of Medical Science, in November, 1851, conducted by Dr. Nollan. [Same is delivered in, and is as follows]:—

"We quite agree with Dr. Kirkman and Dr. Chyng, in this view of the matter, and feel called upon here to state our belief, that it is one of the insanities of the present day, the extreme to which the exercise of religion is carried professionally in our lunatic institutions. One, or at the utmost, two, discreet and judicious official chaplains to administer spiritual comfort, and advice in those cases dictated by the resident medical superintendent not likely to be prejudicial, may, perhaps, be right and proper; but in institutions where there are several entirely different religious denominations, all of whom would necessarily require a distinct chaplain—three or four, perhaps, according to the particular locality—we esteem that it would be a positive evil, and more likely to injure than serve the patients.

"The very fact of three or four different kinds of religious services being performed each Sunday, by three or four different clergymen, under the one roof, would, in a common sense view of the matter, be calculated to cause no small excitement even among the sane, to say nothing of that commotion being composed of insane individuals; and the Sunday, instead of being a day of rest, would, under such circumstances, become one of more than ordinary disquietude."

The next is from the same journal, on the same subject, in November, 1852. [Same is delivered in, and is as follows]:—

"Professional religious instruction in a lunatic asylum is a genuine novum not confined to Ireland alone, where there are so many angry elements owing to difference of creed, to cause strife and contention by the multiplication of chaplains, but in England also, with but one form of religious faith, the propriety of chaplaincy for hospitals for the insane is more than doubted."

The following is what the eminent physician of the Suffolk Asylum says on this point:—

"The subject of religious instruction is too delicate to be discussed in an ordinary report. It will be enough to convey the repeated conviction, that to be really effective, 'professional' care can never supersede 'domestic' instruction; the administration should be in that guarded manner which is only learned by the knowledge of the existing peculiarities of the parties addressed. Moral delinquencies may arise from mental idiosyncrasies, which need great forbearance, and a peculiarly delicate mode of conveying instruction in righteousness. A patient went home well, whose release, after a longer discharge, came on, as he expressed it, 'after bearing an alarming sermon'; his morbid conscientiousness was morbidly acted on, and he left the church to cut his throat. He is now well again.

"We have ourselves only further to remark on the foregoing, that we feel firmly impressed on each office as that of chaplain should be attached to any lunatic asylum whatever, much less to those of them containing members of the different sections into which Christianity is split in this country. We would not deter patients from being visited by their respective ministers of religion as frequently as might be deemed prudent, or in accordance with the desire of individual patients. Quite the contrary; but to have religious offices for the patients en masse in a lunatic asylum, as regular routine business, performed by a chaplain or chaplains, we hold to be entirely and altogether unsuited for those who are considered fit inmates for such establishments. Religious instruction, we consider, is as much part and parcel of the medico-moral treatment of the patients as their diet, exercise, employment, medication, &c., which are placed in the hands of the medical officer charged with the conduct of the whole institution, and who should no more be interfered with in this particular of management than in any other for the performance of which he alone, and properly so, is the responsible party."

Again, we have an extract from the recently published Lectures delivered before the Medical Society of London, "On the Medical Treatment of Insanity," by Forbes Winslow, M.D., Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, &c. (Same is delivered in, and is as follows) :—

"Among the causes which have unfortunately given force and longevity to the idea that the administration of physical agents is of little or no avail in the treatment of the disorders of the mind, one holding the most prominent rank is the unphilosophical hypothesis which have been entertained and propagated respecting the nature of insanity. To this source much of the fallacy, the false induction, the bad logic, and the neglect in reference to the use of successful measures, may be traced. Insanity has been considered to be a spiritual, a functional disease—to be an adhesion of the immaterial essence—to be a disorder of the soul, and not the result of a derangement of the material instrument of mind interfering with the healthy action of its manifestations. The brain has been supposed to be intact; not a fibre disturbed; not a vessel altered; not a vessel overloaded; this organ has been imagined in the severest forms of disturbed mind, to exist in all its integrity, so preposterously absurd have been the notions relative to the proximate cause of insanity. This spiritual doctrine has naturally led in the conclusion—false in theory and destructive in practice—that for the alleviation and cure of the spiritual malady, spiritual remedies were the most important and essential. The clergyman, instead of the physician, was, therefore, summoned to the bedside of the insane, and the Bible and prayer-book displaced the physical remedies prescribed for the cure of the disorder. 'Madness,' says Dr. Baileys, 'is one of the curses imposed by the wrath of the Almighty on his people for their sins, and deliverance from it is not the least of the miracles performed by our Saviour.'—(Commentaries on Fevers, by Dr. Baileys.) I quote this passage to show what are the prevailing notions of the cause of insanity among the first authorities in the country. Why should the relatives and friends of those so unhappily afflicted seek the aid of medicine when men of position and repute, both publicly and privately proposed such doctrine; and, as a consequence, discourage all physical treatment. Grant and avow the responsibility of those who thus thoughtlessly weaken the confidence of the public in the efficacy of the physical curative agents in the treatment of insanity. 'I was told,' said a lady, 'that medicine was of no avail in the affections of the mind. I went to the clergyman for assistance, but could obtain none. I have struggled for weeks heroically against the disposition to suicide, with the prayer-book in one hand, and the open razor in the other. Five times have I felt its keen edge at my throat, but a voice within me suddenly commanded me to drop the murderous instrument; and yet, at other times the same voice urged me desperately on to self-destruction. I knew I was ill—seriously ill—bodily ill; yet no one pointed out to me the right remedy for my terrible impulse, or recommended me to put myself into the hands of the physician.' Such was the state of a patient who voluntarily subjected herself to medical treatment, and was happily restored to health."

Now, I have a piece of testimony, which is very short, an extract from the letter of the resident physician superintendent, of twenty-two years' standing, of an English county hospital for the insane, dated February, 1853. It is as follows :—

"I was speaking, the other day, to one of the most intelligent of our Commissioners in Lunacy, about the chaplaincy question, who seems quite inclined to consider legislative action on the subject injudicious. On this point, as on all others connected with asylums, I think we owe a debt of gratitude to the editor of the Dublin Medical Journal. There were some able notices on the subject, I remember, in some numbers back."

Finally I have an extract from a communication of the chaplain of a county lunatic asylum in England, whose name we are acquainted with, but we would not wish it to be published.

8037. Chairman.—You had better leave that out. It is rather irregular to put in evidence anonymous documents. We allow you in evidence to refer to anonymous documents?—I am sorry you do not think it right to receive it. It is pretty strong as to the fact. If anonymous publications are not to be received, then the anonymous statements quoted in the report of Inspectors should go for nothing.

8038. Chairman.—The objection to anonymous publications would appear to apply also to the Review, as it is also anonymous?—Let the Review go for what it is worth.

8039. Chairman.—We are not responsible for what is in the Report of the Inspectors, and we hope you will not consider that we want to exclude any thing necessary for your case?—Witness. I do not. I know you are most anxious to hear the whole case fully stated. The chaplains were, as a matter of course, prudent enough to retire from the situation when they found they had not been legally appointed. We, however, placed before the Lord Lieutenant a request, that the chaplains might receive their salaries for their past labours. We presented the same request to the Grand Jurors; and if they could have been paid before the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, the money would have been paid to them; for against the gentlemen who acted here for the time as chaplains, we have no charge whatsoever to make. I believe, no gentlemen could have conducted themselves with more propriety, and if any evil arose it was from surrounding circumstances, and not from any thing wrong in the conduct of those worthy gentlemen. I have now to state to you, that this is a singular case in relation to public opinion. We had four clergymen on this board, men of great respectability, and worth, and high character in every way, who advocated the appointment of chaplains, but there was no lay member who joined with them. We had on the other hand four ministers on the board—indeed, I think, five ministers, if I include Dr. Hincks, who is here to-day, and who holds opposite views, the Dean of Ross, Dr. Cooke, and myself. Here, then, we have the balance as to clerical opinion, and, I maintain, that with respect to the medical authorities, we have an infinite preponderance with us. I maintain, further, that we have a vast preponderance in argument, on this ground, that both the physicians of this establishment have testified distinctly to the injurious effect produced. If there be men who can judge of the result, it must be the two gentlemen who were before you this day. You have heard Dr. Stewart's statements, and you have heard the clear statement of Dr. McCorinn—on clear in its relation to facts, as it was philosophical in its arguments; you have now, then, to say, that against the whole weight of the inquiry of these two counties—

8043. Chairman.—This is a speech which we cannot receive. We are here to receive evidence. This is an address to the Commissioners not to do a certain thing. There is no gentleman more capable of speaking to evidence than you are, but as I have already observed, we are permitted only to receive evidence?—I thought that you would allow me to make a statement instead of putting questions to me, which would bring out my views imperfectly.

8044. Chairman.—We allow you to make a statement of facts upon your oath?—Witness. I am competent to state that the Grand Jurors of the two counties four times sustained us in our resistance to the authorities; that, in fact, there was no diversity in the decision of the three counties, the county of the town of Carrickfergus being the third; they were unanimous on the subject. I do not know a respectable layman—there may be some, no doubt there are—but I never yet met with a respectable layman of any church who advocated the appointment of chaplains here. I do not say there are not such laymen. We are very apt to meet people having congenial sentiments with ourselves. I now desire to state to you, that we have opposed the appointment of chaplains, because we are fully convinced that in our mixed population, and amongst our mixed patients, the admission of chaplains would be mischievous, in relation to the object for which this establishment has been raised, that is, the cure of insanity, for I think that is the great object which must be held in view. It is not a religious question, but a question of the cure of the insane. If consistently with curing you can administer religious comfort, I think our character in the community would say we would not object to the giving of that comfort; but if we find that by means of what would be given with a view to produce something you would call comfort occasionally, a permanent injury might be inflicted, as was testified to-day, upon some of our unfortunate inmates, then we could not give our sanction to it. I wish further to state, that we have, all along, left the question of salaries entirely out of consideration. I wish to put it to you, that if you give, or the government should determine to give, chaplains for three denominations, you must, as a matter of justice, give chaplains for all denominations. An immortal soul is of infinite value; and therefore, if there were but one of a denomination here, spiritual ministrations ought to be given to that person. I now wish to refer to Dr. Stewart's statement, that he had here, at one time, prayers and reading of the Scriptures; that was entirely without the concurrence of the Board. He stated, besides, that it was only for Protestants. It was done with the best motive, and perhaps, under his care, without any injurious result, for there was nothing to produce excitement. It was discontinued the moment we heard of it, for we said it should not continue. I stated before, what I repeat now, that the salaries had nothing to do with the matter; and if it be desirable to give to the gentlemen who were appointed chaplains their salaries for life, provided they remain away from this establishment, I for one have not the slightest possible objection. I think gentlemen appointed to situations have a sort of permanency in them, but I do not like to see the public money applied to a purpose that I believe to be injurious to the public service. In order to show you that we have never been inclined to act upon a pernicious principle, I will state, that we have sanctioned all the great improvements that have been made here. We have increased the ratios and comforts of the patients to the full extent in our power, and we desire that in this matter of chaplains, we should be left alone, to carry out what we know to be best. We respectfully submit we are the best judges of the things that are most advantageous for the poor that are committed to our charge. I feel very much obliged to you for the patience with which you have heard me, and if I went a little further than you think I should have done it was under the impression that I was allowed to do so.

8045. Would you, Dr. Montgomery, be opposed to the appointment of chaplains in an institution where the inmates were of one persuasion?—No, I should say it would then be harmless, and perhaps comfortable. It might be desirable; at all events it would be so innocent that I would gratify anybody's prepossessions or wishes in the matter.

8046. The injury you anticipate, as I understand, is, that in an institution where there are inmates of various religious persuasions, there arise religious contentions amongst the inmates, consequent upon the ministrations of various chaplains?—Undoubtedly, and very great religious contentions.

8047. You have referred to considerable statistics to show that where there are chaplains the number of cures is not so great as it is where there are no chaplains?—Yes.

8048. If the evils you describe can only arise in an asylum where the inmates are mixed to a considerable degree, I presume your statistics as regards the Ballinasloe Asylum, the inmates of which are almost entirely Catholics, as opposed to the Belfast Asylum, would not have much weight?—But they have got two chaplains in the Ballinasloe Asylum.

8049. The effect depends not merely upon the number of chaplains, but upon the number of inmates of different persuasions?—Yes; but the excitement might be the same.

8050. The injury you have described, you say, arises from the religious contentions amongst the inmates?—In part.

8051. That contention cannot exist to any great extent where there are scarcely any inmates of a second persuasion?—It will not be so great as where the inmates are nearly equally balanced in number in respect of religion.

8052. In reference to the Ballinasloe Asylum where the inmates are almost entirely Roman Catholics, is it not too strong to say that the small number of cures there has resulted from there being chaplains connected with the institution?—I should think it rather strong to say that, if it were not for the diminished number of cures in this asylum after the introduction of chaplains.

8050. Has the per centage of cures diminished in the Derry Asylum since the appointment of chaplains?—I cannot say; Derry, I think, has improved two per cent. according to the last return.

8051. You are, of course, aware that the manager of the Derry Asylum gave very strong evidence founded upon his long experience that the results which you anticipate from the appointment of chaplains did not occur in his institution?—I heard his letter read.

8052. I observe here in the Report of the Inspectors upon your memorial that Mr. Cluff, the manager, states divine service has been performed in the asylum since January 1824. He writes in 1831, and he adds that no unpleasant controversy or annoyance has occurred during the period; that is the evidence as to the seventeen years in the Derry Asylum, and it is opposed to what you anticipate would occur here?—Yes; but I do not know that the population of Derry is precisely the same as in Belfast, nor do I know that religious and political rancour run to the same extent.

8053. Is not Derry one of those places in which, perhaps, next to Belfast there is a greater approach to equality in the number of persons of different religious persuasions?—It may be; I am not able to form a judgment upon that. I speak in relation to ourselves.

8054. With reference to the contention amongst the inmates in this asylum consequent upon the ministrations of chaplains, during the two years that they were here, is there upon your minutes any record of such dissensions, as you describe, having occurred amongst the inmates?—No; I made a statement showing the effect had not been favourable; and I have a perfect recollection of Sir Robert Bateson, when asking a question either of Dr. Stewart or Dr. McComas, as to the result of the ministrations of chaplains, getting an answer that they had not been found beneficial; that they had an exciting effect upon the inmates. The matter was brought before the Board, and the question was asked in a sincere and kind spirit by Sir Robert Bateson, in order to ascertain what was the result. There was not a man of us but would have given up our preconceived opinion had we been satisfied that the appointment of chaplains was beneficial.

8055. You spoke of insults offered to you by a poor fanatic in the place?—Yes.

8056. Were any similar cases mentioned by other Governors or brought before the Board?—I am not in the least degree aware. I often go amongst the inmates.

8057. I believe there was a good deal of excitement here, not confined to the inmates, on the subject?—Very strong excitement.

8058. Having stated that you are not opposed to chaplains being appointed in an institution where the inmates were all of one creed, and that you attach, as naturally becomes a clergyman and all of us, the greatest importance to the value of an immortal soul, so that there should be a chaplain for every one inmate of a particular creed if the principle were conceded—do you consider the evils which may arise from these contentions, and, probably, as you deem it, the retardation of cures, would justify 500 inmates of a public asylum being left without any religious consolation?—That will render some little explanation necessary. It was never found that more than a very small number of the inmates were fit for religious instruction. My answer is, that taking the balance of good and evil, and considering the means already afforded for giving religious instruction, that permission is granted to clergymen to visit patients of their own denomination, if their friends desire it, and that patients are allowed to go out to attend religious instruction if convalescent, I consider the evil of introducing four, or five, or six chaplains here, would infinitely overbalance the good that might arise from such a proceeding. It might be comfortable to some and injurious to others, and I believe the injury would be greater than the evil intended to be remedied.

8059. When you speak of the evil of chaplains, I understand you, all through, not to refer to differences amongst chaplains?—Not at all, I speak only of the ministrations.

8060. If you allow inmates to go out of doors to attend religious worship, may not contentions arise amongst them, when they return to the asylum?—I think not, for those patients allowed out are of considerably composed mind, otherwise they would not be allowed to go out. They return to the asylum without the excitement of patients who are only beginning to be convalescent, and those patients if warned by the resident physician not to speak on the subject would have sanity enough to abstain from doing so. I have not heard of any bad effect from their going out; on the other hand, I have known a good effect to arise to persons going out with a careful keeper to attend religious worship.

8061. With reference to the regulation by which an inmate may send for a clergyman of his own religious persuasion, I presume you attach considerable importance to the personal ministrations of a clergyman to his flock?—I simply attach that importance, that if it be considered desirable a clergyman should see a patient, he ought not to be precluded.

8062. As a clergyman generally in the world, do you not attach great importance to the ministrations of a clergyman to his flock?—I do not, perhaps, attach as high importance as some people do.

8063. Considering that some people are not to be left to themselves in religious matters, but should be looked to by their clergy, do you not think there would be an objection to leaving insane people to look after their own religious interests?—My belief as to the ministrations of clergymen is merely that they are very well in their own way, but I believe people can do a great deal more for themselves.

8064. In the regulations with regard to chaplains, is it not provided that any inmate who it may be considered would be injured by attendance upon religious worship, or is unfit to attend, shall not be allowed to go?—Clearly; but at the same time a physician is not able exactly to know what the result of the attendance at religious worship would be.

8005. In the course of your observations you stated as one of the reasons for prohibiting the attendance of chaplains, that lunatics were of a class similar to persons under the effects of intoxicating drinks, and come into the asylum with exaggerated feelings; and that, therefore, lunatics in this part of the country have their political, or religious, or other prejudices very much aggravated?—Yes, that is my impression.

8006. Are you aware, that instead of that which you have stated to be the general characteristic of insanity, the contrary is the case, and that there is no analogy between the effects of intoxication and insanity; that the more general characteristic of insanity is mental indifference, a loss or diminution of the former feelings, and the perversion of even the strongest instincts, such as the maternal?—I am not in the least degree aware of that. I know lunatics are exceedingly excitable, but whether it may be an excitement similar to that caused by drink in some persons, I am not able to tell. I conclude that the brain was excited in some form. I am not a physiologist, and cannot say.

8007. If the fact be as I have stated, that lunacy is not characterized by what you have said, namely, an exaggerated condition of the natural feelings, but that the contrary is the case; then, would not the value of the opinion you founded upon the supposed similarity of effect, as a reason against religious ministrations, be very much diminished?—If that be the fact, which it would be highly improper in me to dispute, when you have stated it as a fact, being a physician of great eminence, what you say would be the case; but so far as I have observed of people coming in suffering under religious mania, they become excited when any thing occurs to bring them to that particular train of thought which most affects them. My statement is according to fact. If you look over our returns you will see religious mania appearing on them as the description of insanity under which some patients suffer. I think the application of religious instruction or ministrations to persons so affected would excite them again.

8008. In a case of that kind would it not be the duty of the medical attendant to pronounce as to the fitness of a patient to receive religious ministrations?—I think so; but we cannot conceal the fact of ministers of different denominations coming into the asylum and going amongst the patients generally. The fact of a Roman Catholic clergyman coming into the asylum amongst a number of Orange Protestants who are damaged would excite their feelings strongly. In the same way, a Protestant clergyman walking in before the Roman Catholics inevitably produces the same effect; it does so in the town of Belfast; it does so everywhere.

8009. Would not that argument lead to the retirement from the Board of the Bishop of Down, and the Right Rev. Dr. Denvir, and yourself?—I have not the least objection; we are here on the Board, as it were, balancing parties. I presume we are here appointed by Government, as it were, to watch over the religious denominations to which we belong—to see that there will be no undue interference. That is a very fair object.

8010. I speak only of the effect of your appearance amongst the inmates?—I do not think the mere appearance would have that effect, when we do not proceed to give religious ministrations. The patients know when we are coming in, that we are coming in for a benevolent purpose in reference to themselves.

8011. If a Catholic patient desired religious consolation from a minister of his religion, would it be a sufficient reason for denying it that the presence of the minister of that church would offend a Protestant lunatic; or, vice versa, if a Protestant desired religious consolation from a clergyman of his church, would it be a sufficient reason to deny it to him, that the presence of that Protestant clergyman would offend other patients?—If you put it in the abstract the two cases would balance each other. I believe you should not offend one man to please another. We do not deny religious ministrations to any one who asks for it. Any one may have religious ministrations by asking for it and bringing it in privately. Dr. Hincks testified that he often came. Dr. Stewart testified that he sent for clergymen. I have myself, before now, visited a patient upon whom no excitement whatever was produced. I dare say, if I were appointed a chaplain there might be fifty as much enraged against me as the individual to whom I referred. All I urge mainly on this subject is, that we wish, at the Board, to be allowed to manage this affair of religious instruction as we think best; and if, in due time, we find great benefit arising from the giving of religious instruction in other places—and the good tree will be shown by producing good fruit—I think you will do us the justice to say, that there is not a man now opposing the appointment of chaplains that will not then be ready to sanction them. Leave it to the Board, if they think it desirable to have chaplains, to apply to the Lord Lieutenant for them, and let the Lord Lieutenant appoint the chaplains. We wish to take nothing out of his hands. I entertain a strong hope that the plan we adopted in the Amended Act last year, and which did not pass, will, as a healing measure, be adopted. We ask that the option of having chaplains shall be left to the Board of Governors. The only thing I have now to do is to urge that you will be good enough to recommend the reception of paying patients—patients from the class between the gentry in comfortable circumstances and mere paupers. I believe that no arrangement could be more beneficial to the country. I want to throw no burden upon the managers of asylums; if a burden be thrown on them additional, give them larger salaries, which strengthen people's backs to bear such burdens generally, and give them some more assistance. This is a subject on which we have been always unanimous. We have repeatedly brought it before the Government, sometimes by resolution, and sometimes when speaking on other subjects. There is another matter which it is rather painful to me to mention, but as I do not know any of the gentlemen concerned, I cannot be supposed to have any personal feeling respecting them on the subject. We have been exceedingly impeded by the Board of Works. We are mere ciphers here. It appears we are here for nothing but to take contracts for butter, milk, and coals, while the Board of Works order improvements and alterations to be made without our knowledge or concurrence; and there is not one of us enabled to direct, nor can the whole Board, if assembled, give an order for the smallest work to be done or executed. We sometimes send a request to the Lord Lieutenant that such a thing will be done; it is referred to the Board of Works; they refer it to their officer; that officer makes an absolute order, and we are bound to obey. Works on our asylum, which were undertaken in 1852, are still scarcely finished; and now improvements, or matters called improvements, are to be removed and altered. I do not blame any individual, but I wish to state, that had we been enabled to take contracts for those works, my firm conviction is we could have done them for twenty-five per cent less than they cost, and in half the time. That is my deliberate opinion; and I do think that to make a board of gentlemen the mere tools and slaves of the Board of Works, however respectable the members of that Board are in their own position, is rather too much. We have to pay the money, and I think we should have some voice in the expenditure of that money. I have put before you this evil, which is patent to every one. If you went over the asylum and saw the changes that have been made, you would be satisfied of the justice of my representation. It is enough to say that five years have been occupied in doing what should have been done in a year and a-half.

Reception of paying

8072. What is your opinion as to the Inspectors being members of the Board of Governors?—The Inspectors are very respectable gentlemen. I have no objection to their being members of the Board; but I think we understand our local business better than they do. I think they should attend the Board and not have votes. I wish that to be taken down entirely irrespective of any reference to the Inspectors as public officers. I have a high respect for both gentlemen.

8073. How far do you think that the appointment of officers should be left to the Executive Government?—I think merely the three superior officers, and that the others should be left in the hands of the Board. We determined, when our late surgeon-apothecary died, to appoint a resident surgeon-apothecary. We knew that cases had occurred here, as will almost always occur, where, for instance, a patient would suddenly commit violence on himself or upon some other person, and that it was absolutely necessary to have a surgical man in attendance. It is not in the power of mortal man to hold Dr. Stewart's situation, with such a vast multiplicity of duties, and be always within these walls; and, moreover, ipso facto, Dr. Stewart is the resident physician, but he need not necessarily be a physician or surgeon at all. We hold, therefore, that there should be a resident surgeon in the house. We proposed to pay £70 a year, and give apartments and rations to a respectable young man; and we did that, not only on the ground of what we considered a vast service to ourselves, but on the ground of what might be a vast service to the asylums of the country; that in point of fact, under such men as Dr. Stewart and Dr. McCormac, a young man in that office would be receiving a valuable training which would make him a most valuable man as the principal of another asylum. We advertised the appointment; we had very excellent applications; but the Government, acting, no doubt, rightly, sent us down word that we should make no such appointment. We then appointed our present very distinguished friend, Dr. Moore, who is honouring us rather than any thing else by coming here. We appointed him in a temporary way; but I trust that, as in the case of chaplains, such officers shall be appointed by the Lord Lieutenant if we apply for them.

Adam John McCarty, Esq., sworn and examined.

8074. How long have you been a member of this Board?—Nearly five years.

8075. You have heard the statements made with reference to the appointment of chaplains to this institution; what is your own opinion on the subject?—My opinion concurs generally with those expressed by Dr. Montgomery on the subject.

8076. Is there any thing which you would wish to add to the statement which he has made?—Yes; I have been for nearly thirty years one of the Governors or managers of the general hospital in Belfast. It was formerly a fever hospital, and we found it necessary then to make very strict regulations with regard to the admission of clergymen to the wards of the institution. We found it very prejudicial, indeed, to have sane patients who were under treatment visited by clergymen, and we accordingly made very strict regulations with reference to their attendance; and my opinion on the subject of their attendance here was founded very largely, indeed, upon the effect I saw arise there from it. I did not consider the patients were improved by the attendance or ministrations of the clergymen. The hospital to which I refer is now called the General Hospital.

8077. Your views, then, as regards the appointment of chaplains extend to institutions for the sane as well as for the insane?—They do.

8078. And would apply to workhouses and gaols as well as to hospitals and asylums?—No. I think not. I think I refer only to cases where there is mental or bodily illness. Religious ministrations are prejudicial to patients in some cases, and in others I think they could not affect them in the least. We found, as I have stated, that they did injure in some cases; and the medical man reported to the Board respecting the injurious effects produced. There is another point which, I think, is of some importance, and to which reference I do not think has been made. During the period that the question of the admittance of chaplains was under consideration at this Board, I understood, that in the day-rooms of the institution the patients got up discussions amongst themselves, and very considerable disturbances was caused amongst them. I understand that in several instances they got into severe collisions with each other on the subject. I mention this to show that the mere discussion of the matter, which casually got in amongst them, had that exciting effect.

8079. What is your opinion as to the propriety of lunatics being detained in workhouses?—I think there could not possibly be a worse thing. I went personally to examine the workhouse here, with a view to ascertain some particulars; and judging from what I saw, the building appeared to be totally unsuited for insane persons, although I never visited any institution that was better conducted. There seemed to me to be no attendance for the insane except that of paupers, who, of course, could not know anything of the treatment for such persons, particularly epileptic patients, who are subject to fits of one kind or another. Even those paupers who were in attendance upon such patients were liable to be changed, and parties new to them brought to undertake the duties. I examined the insane inmates particularly, and they appeared to be comfortable enough, so far as the workhouse arrangements would permit. A number of the cases appeared to me to have been curable if they had been properly treated. There was not then the least chance of a cure being effected, but rather the reverse; that is, their position in the workhouse rather confirmed them in their insanity, for the proper appliances for their treatment were not there.

8080. Do you think there is any class of lunatics in workhouses who might, with propriety, be left in them?—No, I think not. I do not think workhouses are at all suited for them.

8081. I believe, in the workhouse here, they are all confined in dormitories?—They have beds originally constructed for straw. I saw one patient in bed whose face was burned, and when I inquired the cause, I was informed that the patient had fallen against the bars of the fire-grate. I saw an epileptic patient, a very old man, attended by one of the paupers.

8082. The removal of lunatics from workhouses would probably render it necessary to provide increased accommodation for them in the asylum. Have you ever considered, recollecting the large number of lunatics who are here, what arrangement it would be best to make?—I am satisfied that the best arrangement would be to make a new building or institution for such cases a part and parcel of this institution. I am quite certain that the officers of this institution having the other under their care would advantageously take charge of that other. I would, of course, have several buildings, and several separate yards to exercise the patients in, but I would have them all brought under one general supervision here; for I think it would tend very much to the improvement of the patients themselves, and would be much more economical.

8083. Are you led to think the arrangement would be economical from the same staff being available, to a certain extent, for both establishments?—A great saving of the officers would be available. I do not look upon the quantity of labour that is procured from any of those people as being worth very much, and I do not think much good would result from employing them extensively upon land. I find that in the unions of the counties of Down and Antrim, and in the county of the town of Carrickfergus, the population is 323,000, or thereabouts. Of that number Belfast has 125,000. Now, when I inquired within the last week, I ascertained that the number in the Belfast workhouse of insane persons, incurables, imbeciles, persons paralytic and idiotic, and all such cases, amounted to sixty. Taking sixty as the proportion, for 125,000 of the population that would give, at the same rate, about 240 as the number of patients in the three counties. Now, that is not a very large number to provide accommodation for, when you would have the advantage of their being brought, as I have suggested, under one supervision and management. Of course the number of officers would have to be increased.

8084. What is your opinion as to the propriety or otherwise of admitting a class of patients into the asylum who could not be considered, strictly, lunatic poor?—I am decidedly in favour of it. I think there could not be a more humane act than to afford to a class of poor persons who are not paupers the means of relieving their relatives who are labouring under temporary or permanent insanity. Dr. Montgomery has taken a very active part in reference to that matter. I think if the system of providing for the insane be carried out as a system, it would not be complete without extending it to all those cases. I would have them consolidated, or collected, in a local institution like this, and not centralized.

8085. Do you consider the Board should receive patients at varying sums?—I think whatever money comes, that would be so much gained, and would lessen the expense to the county to which the patient belonged. I would decidedly take any money we would get for patients. In the general hospital, I know, we are very glad to get any money paid with patients. We receive paying patients in that hospital, and we find the system to work remarkably well. Respectable artisans and others through the town, are very glad to have such an establishment to which they will have an opportunity of sending their servants or apprentices who may be unwell. They are taken into the hospital upon the payment of a guinea. The fever patients we admit on receiving 8s. 6d. a-week, or more. We take in cases of deltus tremens, but we charge £2 2s. for each case, and increase the charge every time the case comes. We have a graduated scale, which works remarkably well.

8086. Would you be satisfied to leave the charge discretionary with the Board of Governors, and without imposing any legislative restrictions?—If you apply the question to Ireland generally, I would say, no. I would have legislative enactment; but if you apply it to the North of Ireland—without claiming much for the North—I think we would exercise such a supervision that the Government might fairly trust us with the discretion; but, of course, you cannot legislate for one part of Ireland and not for another. You must do it generally, and, therefore, I would have legislative provision on the subject, and would not leave it to the discretion of the Boards.

8087. What is your opinion as to the mode in which the Board of Governors are now appointed?—I think it is a remarkably good mode, and I am quite in favour of it. The only modification I would make would be this, that any recommendation coming from the Board, as constituted, should receive due attention at head quarters. I do not think there could be any improvement in the mode of appointment, and I would think it right to give the Government full control over the Governors appointed, but, as I have already observed, with just regard to any recommendation coming from this Board. At many public boards on which I have acted for many years, we have adopted that system with great success. We have looked around and found gentlemen whom it would be exceedingly judicious to have appointed on the Board, and we took means to get them appointed accordingly. The great point is to get men who will give their time and attention to the performance of the duties.

8088. Would not a system of nomination by the grand juries, of gentlemen who would be their colleagues, be preferable to that of imposing upon the Government what might be considered the odium of selecting persons, whose selection might probably not be acquiesced in by the people of the locality?—Only it would be too uncertain. I think it would be a better system by which the Board of Governors would submit to the grand juries the names of those whom they thought fit for the position, and let the grand juries apply to the Government to make the appointments. If either of the two bodies was to have the privilege of suggesting or recommending, I would say that it would be infinitely better that it should be done by the Board of Governors than the grand jury; for the Board would understand better the description of men they wanted to co-operate with them, while the grand jury do not understand the working of the Board or of the system.

8089. Under that arrangement would not the Executive Government be placed in this difficulty, that if it did not accede to the requisitions of the Board it would incur a certain amount of odium here; and if it did always acquiesce in the requisitions of the Board it would then become a system of nomination by the Governors?—That could be avoided by placing a certain limitation: for instance, that the Governors would be allowed to recommend a certain number within a certain time. There are many ways in which that could be avoided.

8090. If a system of nomination upon recommendations of the Board of Governors is to be pursued, the Government must either refuse or act upon the recommendations of the Boards of Governors. If they always act upon them, all the vacancies of the Board will be filled up by the existing members; and if the recommendations are refused, a certain amount of odium will fall upon the Government?—I would say, that if, for instance, three members retired from the Board, and that the Government appointed two and the Board nominated a third, the difficulty you suggest might be obviated in that way. Unquestionably the local people are the best judges of the parties best fitted to co-operate with them.

8091. What is your opinion with regard to the appointment of the superior officers?—I would give the Government the appointment of the physician, manager, and mason, but the other appointments should be in the hands of the Governors. We discussed that point very fully, in London, with the Government, and they appeared to concur in what I have mentioned as reasonable and fair, at the time the Bill was under consideration.

8092. State the reasons why you consider it would be better to leave the appointment of such officers as you have named with the Executive Government, whereas in other institutions that is not the practice?—Why, I think, there would be so much influence brought to bear upon the Governors that it would become to them a disagreeable task in many instances to make selections. I found the exercise of such a power disagreeable in other institutions, where canvassing went on extensively for offices. I think it would be better, and more independent as regards the position of the Governors, to leave the appointments I have mentioned entirely with the Government.

8093. Have you heard the objection urged, that the Executive Government are open to persuasion or influence on political grounds?—Well, I have; but I have not had any experience of it.

8094. With regard to the chargeability of inmates, would you rather have it upon the county at large, as at present, or upon small districts like electoral divisions?—I think the county system is the better; the machinery is more simple, and in the end it makes very little difference in reality.

8095. You do not see any reason for altering the present system?—None whatever; it appears to me to work very well. The only alteration I would make in the present system is in reference to that which Dr. Montgomery has alluded to, about the Board of Works. We would do things much more economically than they have been done here by the Board of Works. In one instance the Government agreed to pay for a mistake that was made, out of the Consolidated Fund, for repairs that were required.

8096. Do you find any inconvenience to arise from the system of submitting the statements of expenditure for approval to the Privy Council?—None at all. I have seen that notwithstanding all the correctness that is here in minute things, they have discovered, in Dublin, slight errors. I think the supervision quite necessary.

8097. Would you have any objection to give the Executive authority a veto upon any new works either as regards the plans, or the execution of the work itself?—Decidedly, I would give them a veto. I think the position should be reversed, that is, that instead of sending the direction down here in the first instance, we should originate the matter.

Adam John Montgomery,
Esq.

8098. What is your opinion as to the propriety or otherwise of the Inspectors acting as members of the Board?—I do not see the utility of it. I think their presence here is often beneficial. We get a great deal of satisfactory information from them, but they cannot be here at each Board meeting. They come here officially; and acting here officially, and voting upon questions that may arise, is rather an equivocal position for them to be placed in.

8099. Is there any thing to which you would wish to direct our attention?—Yes. Notwithstanding all the additional buildings we have, when I come to look at all the inmates provided for throughout the country, I am led to the conclusion that those buildings are very inadequate for meeting the exigencies of the district. I think you should work out the lunacy system as a perfect system, and that every case of mental debility should be provided for in a place like this. When I come to look at the returns, I find there is not accommodation provided for more than one-third of the cases in the country. I am now speaking from my recollection of what I read some time ago on the subject. I am of opinion that the supply of accommodation is very inadequate to the public requirements in this respect.

8100. You refer, I presume, to the police returns appended to the last report of the Inspectors?—Very likely. It was some statistical statement I looked to. It struck me as very remarkable that there was such inadequate accommodation for the public wants, and that there should be so great a number of people going through the country in a state of insanity who would be much better provided for in asylums. I think it would be desirable if we had in connexion with an institution of this kind, on the enlarged scale I have referred to, a medical school for instruction in this particular branch. We have got a school of medicine in our general hospital; it is very beneficial indeed, and useful for the advancement of medical science; and there is this great advantage also, that it keeps the students in this country instead of their going to other countries to learn their profession. With regard to post mortem examinations, to which one of the witnesses referred, I believe the law on the subject is, that the unclaimed bodies are handed over for such examinations.

in the Asylums.*

Propriety of appointing competent Resident Pupils for fixed periods.

8101. What would you think of an arrangement, with a view to instruction in this particular branch of medicine, by which you would advertise every year for a resident pupil who was very much advanced in his studies, and who, for a small sum and his board, would discharge the duties of a position similar to that of the resident clinical pupil in a general hospital, and would do the duties of apothecary, and in this way acquire a knowledge of this department of medicine during the year he was in the asylum?—It is an arrangement I would highly approve of, and it exactly falls in with a suggestion I made to this Board, from the experience I had in the general hospital, of the beneficial effect of the system. Some of the best men we got there were parties admitted in that way. We got them for a small consideration, but they were deriving very considerable instruction, and they gave very valuable services.

8102. Do you not think such an assistant resident medical officer would be preferable to a person appointed at a small salary, and continuing for a great number of years in that position?—I think so. I have heard the objection urged, that such a resident pupil would not be so fully qualified with regard to surgical cases, cases of accident arising in the asylum; but I must state, that we have had the master tested in the general hospital, and we did not find any bad effect from it. It is true, we had there medical men at hand to apply to in cases of emergency.

8103. Are you aware that, in the larger hospitals, where the most serious accidents occur, the resident persons are very generally students in their last year of study, care being taken that they are competent to meet cases of emergency?—Yes.

8104. If they are found competent to meet emergencies in a general hospital with such a number of accidents coming in, would it not be equally possible that you would get suitable students for an establishment of this kind?—Quite so. I approve of the suggestion for two reasons; first, as economizing the funds of the institution, and next, as giving an opportunity for the study of this branch of the science. I have had a good deal of experience with reference to those matters, and I am satisfied the arrangement would work beneficially in this institution.

8105. The individual should be competent to discharge the duties of apothecary?—I should say so; and such a student as Dr. Corrigan has referred to, one in the last year of his study, would, I presume, be qualified in that respect. With reference to the chaplaincy question I will say, that I have always lamented the Bill of last session did not pass, for I always thought it was a just arrangement of the entire question. All I can add is, that if such a measure is brought forward again and passed, it will completely meet all the difficulties in our way, and will work most beneficially throughout the whole country.

8106. It was intended by that Bill, I believe, to leave the option to the boards with respect to chaplains?—Yes.

8107. To leave things as they are at present?—Yes. There are districts where the system of chaplains might work well, but I am apprehensive that in this asylum it would not work well, for the many reasons that have been adduced; and if the Bill of last session, with any additions that might be considered necessary from other circumstances, were passed, it would meet the difficulties, and be a very desirable enactment. I had a good deal to do with my friend, Dr. Montgomery, in preparing that bill, the present Attorney-General and Mr. Horner assisting. We had several interviews, and we had a good deal of discussion respecting it; and, in fact, one of the most influential deputations that ever waited on any government, was the deputation that accompanied us on that occasion, and they entirely approved of the measure.

Parliament in 1855

tion.*

The Rev. John Carroll sworn and examined.

8108. Did you receive the appointment of Protestant Chaplain to this institution?—Yes; it is dated March 9, 1853.

8109. Did you enter upon the discharge of the duties of that office?—I received the appointment on the 10th March, and on that day I called here, in company with my friend the Rev. Charles Allan, Incumbent of St. Paul's, in Belfast. I told the superintendent here I had received the appointment, and that I came to make arrangements for the following Sunday. He told me the Board of Governors had forbidden our admission.

8110. Did you practically discharge the duties of chaplain for any time?—Not till January 8, 1854. My friend, Mr. McCallagh, the Presbyterian chaplain, called here frequently, twice a week; we called here, but did not get permission to discharge our duties.

8111. For how long a period did you discharge the duties of chaplain?—Two years.

8112. During that period what number of members of the Established Church attended worship?—On the first day there were forty-two; on other days there were respectively, thirty, thirty-four, and thirty.

8113. What number was the average?—The first year I had two services of a Sunday in consequence of the room being small. I then had one service, one on Sunday, for males, and one following for females. Uniting the two congregations the average number would be twenty-eight and twenty-six.

8114. How many were there of your persuasion, who at any one time attended your ministrations?—The greatest number was forty-two, which included both sexes.

8115. Was it in the place intended for the chapel you officiated?—In a little room; not in the place intended for the chapel.

8116. Did you find the patients who attended, orderly?—They were extremely attentive; such as had books read the responses.

8117. Were you furnished with a return of the number of Protestants in the house?—No, I asked Mr. Lamonte for it, and was refused.

8118. Were you enabled to ascertain whether there were any others of your persuasion in the house besides those who attended your ministrations?—No.

8119. Did you officiate at other times than on Sundays?—I was not permitted, except in the case of one or two sick persons whom I was called on to visit.

8120. Were you enabled to form an opinion of the number of patients who were competent to profit in any degree by attendance upon divine worship?—I could not.

8121. Were you enabled to form an opinion of how many of those who attended your ministrations were competent to profit by them?—If I were to judge by appearance, they were all capable of profiting by them.

8122. Were you in the habit of preaching?—I lectured. I commenced with a form of prayer. I then lectured generally upon a passage in Scripture. I generally selected a soothing passage. If you wish I will state some of the remarks made by patients and some observations of theirs as I went along. When I first came in, they all appeared delighted and shook hands with me heartily and welcomed me, and said how highly delighted they were to see a clergyman. They frequently told me of the beneficial effect upon them, but for that I was prepared from my connexion previously with four lunatic asylums near Dublin, Dr. Drummond's, Dr. Gregory's, Dr. Hurry's, and Dr. Duff's. Some of the most constant attendants at the parish church and chapel were lunatics. They came to church without a keeper. I officiated in several asylums regularly as chaplain, and the Rev. Mr. O'Sullivan, who was the Roman Catholic curate of the same parish, officiated as Roman Catholic chaplain. There were eight resident physicians connected with those four asylums; and they were also visited by eminent physicians from Dublin, and I never heard of any bad effect arising from the ministrations of chaplains. In one asylum there were four clergyman patients. I frequently walked into Dublin with them, and they spoke of the necessity of having chaplains in asylums, and they told me of their having officiated themselves in the asylum as such.

The Rev. William C. McCallagh sworn and examined.

8123. Were you appointed Presbyterian chaplain to this asylum?—Yes.

8124. You belong to the Presbyterian body in connexion with the General Assembly?—Yes.

8125. When were you appointed chaplain?—In the latter end of January, 1853.

8126. When did you proceed to discharge your duties?—Not till the year 1854.

8127. Did you attend after that period for any length of time?—I did, for two years.

8128. Did you attend on other days besides Sunday?—No, I cannot say I did.

8129. Did you read prayers on Sundays and also preach?—My mode of conducting worship was a little different from what I adopted in my own church. I had the singing of a psalm and reading a portion of the Scriptures, and then prayer. I commented a little upon the verses which I read from the Bible.

8130. What number of inmates attended your service?—I recollect, on one occasion, I had as many as sixty or sixty-six, including male and female patients.

8131. What was the average during the two years?—They diminished considerably before the conclusion of my service as chaplain. I suppose the average was about thirty.

8132. To what do you attribute the diminution?—I really do not know. I was under the impression that the selection of the patients depended upon the resident authorities of the asylum.

8133. Were you ever furnished with any statement of the number of Presbyterians connected with your persuasion in the asylum?—I was not. I applied for it at one time, if I recollect rightly, and was refused.

8134. How did you find the patients conduct themselves at service?—They depicted themselves in the most orderly manner, and showed as much devotion during worship as any sane congregation I ever witnessed. I had short conversations with them after service.

8135. What impression or effect do you consider was produced upon them by your ministrations?—I think they were exceedingly soothed by them.

8136. When you say that the number of attendants upon your ministrations was not equal towards the close to what it was at first, did you communicate with the Governors to ascertain the cause of that falling off?—I did not. In fact I did not think that any communication from the chaplains would be acceptable at head quarters, and I thought it prudent not to make any communication, considering the feelings that were entertained out of doors towards the chaplains.

8137. What do you mean by the feelings out of doors?—I was under the impression that the slightest movement on the part of the chaplains, might be construed into something which it was not intended to be.

8138. By whom?—Parties opposing the chaplains.

8139. Do you mean by parties on the Board, or by the public at large in Belfast?—I cannot say. I knew there was a great opposition to us both indoors and out of doors, and therefore I deemed it wise to act as prudently as possible.

8140. Were those who attended your ministrations at the end persons who originally attended, or did any who absented themselves return?—I think some of the patients left the asylum during the course of my ministrations and some new patients came in.

8141. Did you apply to the manager for a list of the number of patients of your persuasion, whom the visiting physician considered competent to attend your ministrations?—I have it recorded in my book that I applied to Mr. Lamont for a list of the number of Presbyterian patients in the asylum, and he informed me Dr. Stewart said no such list was to be given.

Mrs. Mary Frances Stewart sworn and examined.

8142. Have you been for many years matron of this establishment?—Twenty-two years in July next.

8143. Do you take general charge of the laundry department, clothing, and bedding?—I superintend it.

8144. Do you also superintend the kitchen department?—Yes.

8145. The stores which are received into the asylum are in the custody of the storekeeper, I presume?—Yes.

8146. To whom are they issued by you in the culinary department?—I have nothing to say to the stores at all. The storekeeper has charge of all the food, which he receives from those who supply it to the establishment, and he gives it out to cook according as it is required. I have nothing to say to the receiving or giving out of the food.

8147. With regard to the articles of bedding and clothing which are not made up in the house, are they kept by the storekeeper till issued?—Yes.

8148. Do you receive any stores to be made up?—Yes, those articles that come to be made under my superintendence. I give directions to the head nurse as to what the materials are to be cut into. I give an order every week according as the various articles are required.

8149. Are the female patients fully employed?—As far as we can employ them, they are. As many as we can induce to work we do, by any means we can use, such as by a little indulgence occasionally.

8150. Are you enabled to make up the whole of the female clothing in the house?—Yes, with the exception of shoes.

8151. At what occupation are the female patients?—Spinning, knitting, and all kinds of needlework.

8152. Are there any amusements provided for them?—Yes; we have got one or two violin players on the male side, and they play for the inmates, and they have a dance, generally, in some corridor. They ask me for permission to have a dance in one corridor or another, and I give permission; that is generally every evening.

8153. What books have the female patients?—They have the Illustrated Times, the London News, Punch, the Ladies Newspaper, the London Journal, Chambers' Journal. They take great interest in those publications that have stories in them.

8154. Have they any religious books?—They have Bibles and Testaments, according to their various persuasions, the Douay and other Bibles.

8155. Have they Books of Common Prayer and Catholic prayer books?—There are some of the men, I think, have got their Manuals. Dr. Stewart gives them out to some of the male patients. They have got their own little Manuals to read themselves, but they are not supplied by the establishment.

8156. Is there a considerable number of the female patients who are tolerably sane?—Yes, there is a great number of them convalescent. We do not consider that they are really sane: they are convalescent, and very capable of being employed in the various branches of employment we can put them to. A great number of the female patients are employed in the laundry, all the washing being done by the patients, with the exception of an assistant in the laundry.

8157. Do the patients assemble for prayer on any day?—No.

8158. Then, any thing in that way is left entirely to themselves?—Yes. Such of them as we consider fit to go out on the Sabbath, with their nurses and keepers, are permitted to go to a place of worship; but we have no worship in the house at present for them.

8159. How is the selection made of those who are allowed to go out to worship—is permission given to any inmates who make a request to go out?—Yes, if they are sufficiently well. Some might ask who would not be considered sufficiently well to leave the asylum.

8160. How many, on the average, generally go out on Sunday?—Four or five female patients.

8161. Out of how many female patients?—One hundred and forty-eight. They are not all fit to go out who express a wish to do so. Those that are fit to go out are never refused; and whenever any of them ask for any clergymen, we always make it a point to send for him. They sometimes ask to see their clergyman, and we make it a point to send for the clergyman.

8162. No matter what church they belong to?—No matter what church they belong to.

8163. During the twenty-two years you have been here, has there been the same absence as there is now of any religious prayer, or reading, or instruction?—We had chaplains here for some time. Previous to that Dr. Stewart had Sabbath worship for some of the patients who expressed a wish to come in. We generally allowed them to do so, a small number of them—of course, a great many would not be allowed to do so; but those who were fit we allowed, under the supervision of their nurses and keepers, who always came in with them.

8164. Were they all of one religious persuasion who attended those Sabbath meetings?—They were all, generally speaking, Presbyterians, and Episcopalians, that is, the Protestant religion. When we know of any others coming in we always forbid them, for we knew it was contrary to the rules of their church. They have come and forced themselves in at times, and they come into worship when I was not aware of it; and when I found it out from the nurses, I always forbid it, and would not allow it.

8165. For how long a period did those Sunday meetings continue?—I could not exactly say.

8166. For years or months?—Some years.

8167. Did you find that the attendance upon those Sunday meetings led to the patients who were present at them speaking much upon religious matters with the other patients during the week?—I never found that they did so. They always seemed very much pleased to be allowed to come in, and we never found any unpleasantness from it. We never found them talking to each other on the subject, and they were very glad to come.

8168. Did you find the manner or conduct of the patients, during the period that there were chaplains officiating here different from what it had been before?—A very decided difference.

8169. Explain what difference?—I perceived a very great difference in many of the patients who were in the habit of attending on worship, and in many who were not in the habit of attending. They quarrelled very much with each other with respect to their religion. One would say to another, "My religion is a great deal better than your religion. Such a clergyman knows how to teach a great deal better than yours." I have been sent for by nurses to quell those quarrels at times, and I very often found it very unpleasant to have to go to prevent those things.

8170. Were those quarrels between the inmates or the nurses?—Between the inmates; and the nurses would come to me to try and prevent the quarrelling. There was a great deal of unpleasantness amongst the patients. Several of them wanted to go into the different places of worship, when they were not fit at all to go; and very often, rather than appear harsh to them, or rather than let them think we would not allow them to go, we really have allowed some to go into worship whom we did not consider fit.

8171. You mean, they were too excited?—Yes, they were very much excited afterwards.

8172. By whom was the selection made of the patients who were to attend, by Dr. Stewart or by the visiting physician?—Generally speaking, by Dr. Stewart and myself. The visiting physician was not here at all times, nor could he know who was fit. He only saw them for a few minutes, perhaps three times a week.

8173. How do you account for those extensive conversations and disputations about religious matters taking place in consequence of the chaplains' ministrations, and not occurring after Dr. Stewart had read prayers for them?—I can account for it in this way: that they looked upon Dr. Stewart as a friend. They wished to come in and hear the prayer; but it was the different denominations that had all the quarrelling. I recollect at several different times there was quarrelling amongst different denominations.

8174. What arrangements were made for the celebration of divine worship by each of the chaplains: did they all officiate at the same hour?—No; they came regularly, and there could be nothing existing at all in their coming or ministrations. I am sure it was merely a feeling that took possession of the weak-minded creatures about the different chaplains coming in one after another. The best of people, in their senses, will quarrel on religious subjects; but those inmates could not control themselves as we could, and they used to fight. I recollect, one time, a poor woman taking up part of a wheel and hitting another a blow on the head on account of religion.

- Report.*
Belvoir District Asylum.
 Mrs. Mary Frances Stewart.
 Clergymen sent for to attend dying patients.
8175. Have those religious differences occurred at other times in the asylum?—I do not recollect them ever having occurred at any other time. I am sure they never did in my time.
8176. How long is it since the chaplains were discontinued?—I should think, about a year.
8177. Supposing a patient, in the opinion of the medical attendant, to be dying, or to be in such a weak state that she would not be likely to be aware of her condition, would you feel it your duty to suggest that a clergyman should be sent for?—Whenever I see that they are conscious, and that they do not wish it themselves, I frequently ask, "Would you not wish to see your priest or minister?" The nurses do it; and whenever a patient expresses such a wish, it is always attended to.
8178. How frequently have clergymen attended during the present year in this asylum?—Well, several times. We have had a Roman Catholic clergyman attending; but with one exception we have not had another this last year. We have not had a patient that wished for it but once. I do not know how often the Roman Catholic clergyman came, for he has come very often, of late particularly.
- Religious excitement amongst the patients.*
 8179. Are you enabled to form any opinion as to whether this excitement you speak of arose from the preaching of the chaplains or from the fact of the patients being reminded by attending religious worship of the difference of their persuasions?—I do not think it was from the preaching. I think it was from one set of patients of one denomination going into one worship, and the other set of another denomination going to another worship, and then their meeting together after.
8180. Have any religious differences occurred since the chaplains ceased to attend?—I could not say whether there have or have not; I have not heard of any. They certainly have not had any quarrelling on the subject. They may, of course, have had conversation in the corridors about it, but I was not aware of it. I have never been told of any thing, nor have I been called in to quell any thing like disturbance in consequence of it.
8181. Can you give me any idea of how often you were called on to compose those differences during the two years the chaplains were officiating?—I could not say. I was obliged to go into the corridors on very many days—I had to go very frequently; and before the hour of the chaplains coming, I was very often annoyed with the quarrelling of the patients with each other about going into the chaplains, some saying the others should not go, when they would not be allowed to go.
8182. That was not amongst inmates of different religious persuasions?—No; they were quarrelling about being permitted to attend.
8183. The excitement you previously referred to I understood to be amongst inmates of different religions?—Yes, entirely, after they came out from worship.
- No quarrelling in consequence of patients attending worship out of doors.*
 8184. Have you found any excitement or differences connected with religion to arise amongst the patients who go out on Sunday to worship and come back again?—No; they go out to their particular places of worship with the nurses who belong to their denominations, and they are not with each other at the time they are going to worship.
8185. Nor were they with each other at divine service in the house?—No, but the persons who go out of the asylum are persons that leave in the morning after breakfast, and do not return till the service is over; so they have not any opportunity of conversing.
8186. Have they not the same opportunity when they come back as if they had been in the asylum?—Not at all; for when they attended worship in the house, one denomination came out at once, and met another persuasion going into the room.
- The arrangements for the different services.*
 8187. Then the arrangements were such that they came in actual contact: when one party of inmates of one religion were retiring from service they met another party of another religion who were proceeding to service?—Not exactly always that way, but the one party would come into a different room, and knowing that the others were with the other clergyman, it so happened that they used to quarrel about it.

ARMAGH, 14th MAY, 1857.

ARMAGH.

Present:—Sir T. N. REDINGTON, Chairman; Dr. ANNEWS, Dr. CORRISSAN, and Mr. BARRY, Secretary.

ARMAGH DISTRICT ASYLUM.

Armagh District Asylum.

Thomas Jackson, Esq., sworn and examined.

Thos. Jackson, Esq.

8188. How long have you held the office of manager of the Armagh Asylum?—Thirty-three years; I was appointed in 1824.

8189. Are you a professional person?—No, I am not a medical doctor.

The Manager not a professional person.

8190. You are neither physician nor surgeon?—Neither.

8191. Is there any medical attendant of the institution besides the visiting physician?—No.

The supply of medicines.

8192. Is there no apothecary?—We get the medicine from an apothecary in the town.

8193. Is he a salaried officer of the institution?—No.

8194. Has that been always the case?—Not always. At one period there was an apothecary who furnished medicine and came and administered it; however, the present plan was found more convenient.

8195. By whom are the medicines compounded?—By the apothecary in Armagh.

8196. Then the medicines which are to be used simply are kept in the house?—There is a stock of medicine in the house ready compounded. When any thing out of the ordinary course is wanted, the physician prescribes in the book which is sent to the apothecary.

8197. For what counties is the asylum appropriated?—Armagh, Monaghan, and Cavan.

Counties comprised in the district.

8198. Is the attendance of Governors regular?—I would say very good.

Attendance of Governors.

8199. Is the attendance from the more distant counties of Cavan and Monaghan regular?—No; there is seldom any attendance from those distant counties. It is the Governors living in the vicinity who attend.

8200. Have you on all occasions a quorum for the transaction of business?—It is very seldom that we have not a quorum; perhaps not twice last year was there no quorum. There are generally four, or five, or six Governors present.

8201. Has the business of the asylum ever been transacted by a smaller number than a quorum?—The ordinary monthly transactions have, by a Governor or two Governors.

Business transacted by less than a quorum.

8202. Is there any committee appointed by the Governors to visit the house in the intervening period between the monthly meetings?—No.

8203. Do the Governors themselves visit the house at the time of the monthly meetings, or at other times?—They generally go through the house at the time of the monthly meetings; not always.

Visits of Governors to the Asylum.

8204. Do the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums attend the meetings of the board?—Seldom.

The Inspectors at the Board.

8205. When they do attend, do they vote and take part in the proceedings like the other Governors?—I am not aware that they have voted on any occasion, I think not, as well as I recollect. They are not often here at the monthly meetings.

8206. Are there any special local regulations, for the government of the asylum, framed by the Board of Governors in addition to the Privy Council rules?—No.

8207. Is the asylum at present full?—Yes, we have four over the prescribed number. I would observe, that latterly there has been a great pressure for admission. That occasionally increases from time to time, and subsides.

Pressure upon the accommodation of the Asylum.

8208. Are we to understand the pressure for admission has been beyond what you could provide for?—Yes; at present it is, to the extent of six cases, one man and five women. During last summer we had twelve or thirteen vacancies. The pressure occasionally takes place and subsides.

8209. Do you receive many patients from the gaols?—I would say, too many. The gaols are made the medium of transferring patients in many instances, greatly to the injury of the patients; and there is a difficulty afterwards in getting shut of them, there being no guarantee for their removal. I would further observe, that there are, from time to time patients coming in through the medium of the gaols that we consider not fit subjects for an asylum.

Patients received from gaols who are sent in under Dangerous Lunatic Act.

8210. Do you refer to the operation of the Dangerous Lunatic Act?—Yes; that is the Act under which they are transmitted here.

8211. In what respect do you consider them not fit patients for the asylum?—I refer to cases of imbecility. For instance, Dr. Corrigan saw a case now of an old man who did not leave his bed since he came here. He is occupying the place of a curable or dangerous patient.

8212. From what gaol has he been sent?—I do not know that he came from a gaol, but such cases have been sent from gaols. Very recently, from Cavan, there came such a case.

8213. Do you consider the detention of lunatics in gaols impedes their cure?—No question of it; the disease very soon assumes a chronic character.

Detention of lunatics in gaols injurious.

8214. Your difficulty with reference to the non-removal of such cases arises from there being no bond, as in the case of ordinary admissions by the Board?—There is no bond, and we are bound to receive them.

ARMAGH.

Armagh District
Asylum.

Thos. Jackson, Esq.
Information respecting cases; reception of inmates from workhouses.

Information with such cases; the removal board.

Number of inmates in the workhouses of the district.

quacy of the Asylum.

The incurable cases in the Asylum.

Question of providing accommodation

Large proportion of the inmates from Armagh county.

Opinion as to providing for incurables;
probable increase of such cases.

Large number of deaths in the Asylum in some years.

8215. Do you find that you receive sufficient information with respect to those cases which come from gaols?—We receive scarcely any information whatever.

8216. With ordinary cases do you receive the requisite information?—We frequently receive information which it is satisfactory to possess, and which it is necessary to record in our books; but with gaol cases we get no information except the name of the patient and the party committing.

8217. Do you receive many cases from workhouses?—Not many. They have been anxious to transfer cases from workhouses, but the Governors did not altogether like that.

8218. You mean, the guardians have been anxious to transfer cases to the asylum?—Yes.

8219. Is full information given respecting workhouse cases when they are received?—Yes, generally the requirements of the forms of admission are complied with; indeed I should say in almost every case where there is a possibility of complying with the form it is done, so far as the parties know the particulars of the case.

8220. Do you know whether there is any difficulty as to the board in workhouse cases?—I think the master of the workhouse generally signs it.

8221. Have you had any difficulty in getting workhouse cases, which proved to be incurable, removed from the asylum?—There have been very few cases from the workhouses, and I do not at this moment recollect any difficulty in getting any of them removed.

8222. Have you received many workhouse cases within the last six months?—To the best of my recollection, we received two females; one recovered in a very short time, the other is imbecile.

8223. Are you aware that it appears from returns which have been furnished to the Commissioners that there were, on the 1st January last, over 100 inmates in the workhouses of this district?—I am not.

8224. Is it your opinion, as far as you are acquainted with the district, that the existing asylum at Armagh is adequate for the wants of that district?—I should think it would be adequate if improper and unfit subjects were not forced upon it. The pressure that now exists I hope will subside in a very short time; and if they do not fill up the vacancies that occur by putting in improper or unfit subjects, the asylum ought to be adequate to meet the wants of the curable and dangerous lunatic poor of the district.

8225. By the return which you have furnished it appears that there were on the 1st of January last in the asylum 104 incurable cases out of 133; the opportunity, therefore, of providing for fresh cases can only arise on vacancies occurring by the recovery of some of the twenty-eight curable cases, or by the death or removal of some of the 104 incurables?—Yes, or by the removal of harmless cases.

8226. Does not the existence of such a number of incurable cases limit the operation of this establishment as a curative hospital?—Unquestionably.

8227. Have the Board of Governors ever considered what could be done with a view of providing for those incurable cases?—The subject has been under consideration from time to time; not recently. One time there was a proposal to erect a hospital for incurable cases belonging to the province; another proposition was, to add to the existing establishment a department for incurables. There were never any decided steps taken in the matter.

8228. What was your own view as to the most advisable course?—If the present asylum could be enlarged without deranging the plan, to add to it would, probably, be a very good way of meeting the difficulty; but my own opinion is that it would be better to detach the other counties, and let them build on a small scale for themselves.

8229. I understand you consider this asylum would then be adequate for the wants of the county Armagh?—It is more than adequate for the wants of Armagh; I would say it would be fully adequate for the wants of Armagh and Monaghan, and the great probability is, for the wants of Cavan.

8230. By the returns to which I have referred it appears that fully one half of the inmates come from the county Armagh?—Yes; the great majority come from the county Armagh. There is a great deal of the disease in Armagh.

8231. Having had some experience in the charge of the insane, in your opinion favourable to having a distinct institution for incurable cases, or to incurable cases being treated in the same asylum with curables?—I am favourable, on the whole, to putting them in the same asylum with curables. I think there could be a separate part of the building for idiots and a separate part for dangerous cases. In the present building there is not a proper arrangement for their accommodation.

8232. Has the number of incurable cases in the asylum been gradually augmenting?—Yes, I think so.

8233. The number of recoveries, I presume, is chiefly amongst the recent cases?—Yes; there is a solitary instance of a case of long standing recovering, but that is a rare occurrence.

8234. From the returns you have furnished it appears that there has been a considerable number of deaths in the asylum in some years; amounting in the year 1853 to nearly 20 per cent. on the average number of patients?—The number of deaths arises from the accumulation of old chronic and imbecile cases. Every hospital will in some years have a great deal more deaths than in other years, by the dropping off of old, worn-out cases. There was no epidemic.

8235. Can you give any particular reason for the number of deaths having been twenty-two in the year 1853, six in the year 1854, and twenty-five in the year 1855?—It did not arise from any epidemic.

8238. Do you find the asylum generally healthy?—Remarkably so.
8237. What quantity of land is there attached to the building?—About eight statute acres, I think. We have nearly six acres under cultivation and under a garden.
8238. Is that a sufficient quantity of land for the employment of the inmates?—I think it is. Our number is not large. We always, except in bad weather, have resources for occupying the patients on the land.
8239. If this asylum were enlarged so as to meet the wants of the district, would there be any difficulty in obtaining a sufficient quantity of land?—I should think not. I would follow that up by observing, that there is a great danger in accumulating the land of the asylum; we would be inclined then to keep chronic cases working here that should be out of the asylum.
8240. Is the building, in your opinion, suitable in every way for a lunatic asylum?—By no means; the plan is very bad.
8241. In what do you consider it principally deficient?—There are no rooms for the servants; there is no second day-room, as there should be; so that while we are cleaning one the patients could go into the other; there are no water-closets. We are tolerably well off for hot water. The plan of the building is not so suitable as it ought to be. Much depends upon the plan for producing that order which is of very great importance in a lunatic asylum.
8242. Where do the attendants sleep?—In the day-rooms.
8243. Are the airing-courts extensive?—Not as extensive as they should be. I would say we have only one yard for men and one for women, that we can use with any degree of comfort. The men are mostly out, and the women in summer are out, in the evening, walking; so that we made up in some measure for the want of airing-courts.
8244. Do the women take no out-door exercise except in the airing court in winter?—No.
8245. You have stated that there are no water-closets: is it the case that the privies are obliged to be emptied through the airing-courts?—It is.
8246. Have you not found that very objectionable?—Very objectionable; and the great difficulty with the Governors was to know where to place them. Such was the plan that we could not devise a convenient place for the privies.
8247. Would there be no means of placing them rather in the exterior of the grounds, so that they could be cleaned from the outside?—With respect to two privies we made an improved arrangement, by making cess-pools outside; but there are two more we could not at all arrange in that manner, they are built close to the wall of the house.
8248. Is the sewerage of the house good?—Very inferior.
8249. Are we to understand that it does not act effectively?—It does not. It requires great attention and pains on the part of the attendants here to keep the sewers clean.
8250. Does the sewerage lead entirely out of the grounds?—There is a little rivulet behind, and in summer it makes its way into that; but the sewerage is not adequate to meet the demands upon it.
8251. Is the asylum lighted with gas?—Yes.
8252. Are there any fires in the galleries in winter?—Yes; it depends upon the state of the weather. If the place is dry, we are sparing of the coals; on the slightest appearance of damp, we light the fires.
8253. Are you afforded the means of keeping the asylum sufficiently warm?—Yes, so far as open fire-places can accomplish it.
8254. You seem to provide fires principally against damp?—Dampness, or excessive cold. We have always fires in the day-rooms.
8255. Are there any thermometers to enable you to determine what the temperature is?—We have such a thing in the house.
8256. Is it used?—Not commonly.
8257. Is there a supply of hot and cold water for the several lavatories?—Two of the male corridors have a supply of hot water, and two of the female corridors the same. To all the eight corridors there is a sufficient supply of cold water.
8258. Is there sufficient bedding and clothing provided for the use of the inmates?—I think so. It is a thing that requires great attention. The Governors do not limit any thing that is necessary.
8259. Are there any benches or seats in the corridors?—Not in the corridors; there are some outside, under the colonnade.
8260. Is there an infirmary attached to the asylum?—No infirmary. A patient is treated by the physician in his own room.
8261. Is that invariably the case?—That is invariably the case here, and has been so here from the commencement.
8262. Is there any of the cells provided with fire-places?—What are called the convalescent male and female rooms are provided with fire-places. We remove, occasionally, a delicate case into one of these rooms when it can be done.
8263. Do you think that the patients who are labouring under sickness can be as well treated in their separate cells as in an infirmary?—If there were a number of sick, an infirmary would be the better place for them; but we do not average one sick here in a month.
8264. Would not an infirmary afford greater facility to one nurse attending patients than if they were distributed over the house in cells?—I think the patients would, probably, be more comfortable in an infirmary ward, under the care of the nurse and physician.

ANSWERS.

*Armagh District
Asylum.*
Thos. Jackson, Esq.
Warmth of the cells.

8265. How many cells have you altogether with fire-places in them?—Six for males and six for females.

8266. Are not comfort and warmth as necessary for one patient as for many?—I would advocate warmth for all lunatics.

8267. You cannot provide for a sick lunatic adequate warmth and comfort unless you transfer him to one of those cells of which you speak?—If the disease appear to be only a temporary one, the patient is very well in a sleeping-room, with a nurse to attend him; if it is likely to be a prolonged case of sickness, he would be better in one of those cells for sick persons.

8268. Attendance will not compensate for the want of warmth?—I generally find the sleeping-rooms warm.

8269. Do you consider it would be advisable to have an infirmary attached to the asylum?—It would be advisable if the sick were numerous; it depends upon that.

8270. That may any day arise?—Yes.

8271. You have said that you generally find the rooms in which a sick patient is confined warm enough?—I think so.

Means of warming.

8272. What are the means of warming it?—There are no means except the heat from the fires in the corridors. One or two of those rooms are near the boiler for supplying hot water; other rooms may not be so warm.

8273. From what does the heat of those rooms arise which are not near the boiler?—From the fires in the corridors.

8274. And what about the rooms that are at a distance from the fires?—I think the fires are sufficient to produce a comfortable degree of heat, as much as any healthy person would require.

8275. But it is of sick persons we are speaking?—We would have them removed, when they are sick, near to the heat, which we can do.

8276. In all cases?—Probably not in all, but mostly in all.

Restraint; custody of the instruments for.

8277. Is mechanical restraint much used in the asylum?—I would say, very sparingly; though, I think, you have seen more of it to-day than you would have seen for two months before.

8278. Are the instruments of mechanical restraint kept always in your custody?—No; but they cannot be applied without my knowledge.

8279. How can you be aware of that, if they are not in your custody?—I am seldom off the premises.

8280. Unless you were perpetually going round through the house, might they not be used without your knowledge?—It may take place.

8281. Are you aware the regulations require that you should take charge of those instruments of restraint?—I am aware that they do require I should take charge of them, and the only way I can meet that is by giving them out to a servant of discretion, who is accountable for their application.

8282. Is not the meaning of the regulation that you should exercise the discretion, and not the attendant?—The attendant is accountable to me for their application. The attendants may want a pair of straps; I may be in town for an hour, or half an hour, and it would not do to leave them without something of the kind.

8283. Under these circumstances the charge of the instruments of restraint might be left either with the matron or some head officer?—Very true.

Restraint applied without medical direction.

8284. Is restraint ever used without the direction of the medical attendant?—Yes. The medical attendant could not remain in the asylum to give instructions or directions in every case calling for restraint. He always sees those cases that are under restraint.

Record of application of restraint.

8285. Do you record all those cases regularly in the Daily Statement Book?—There may be an omission, but generally the remark is made.

8286. Are you not aware that the imposing of restraint or any other deviation from the ordinary treatment is required by the regulations to be recorded in the Daily Statement Book?—There has been a book lately brought forward by Dr. Cumming; it was left aside by the former physician as useless, and Dr. Cumming now uses it.

restraint recorded in Daily statement
book.

8287. Were you aware before to-day that a man named Lynch was, for four days and four nights, strapped down in bed, with wrist-locks, leg-locks, and body-straps?—I am aware that he was in bed; and I am aware that when he goes to bed those measures of restraint are absolutely necessary, for he is a most desperate man.

8288. Are you aware that he was four days under this restraint?—I am aware he was four days in bed. I gave directions to have some of those straps removed. He has a few days in that kind of confinement.

8289. Are you aware that he has been four days and four nights strapped down in that state on his back in bed?—I know he was in bed. I was not aware he had all those instruments of restraint upon him; but I know he requires them. He is up every morning to be washed, and he is put back again.

8290. Is there any record in the Morning Statement Book of Anne Mitchell being under restraint: she was also in bed, strapped down with wrist-locks?—I do not know whether there is any record; occasionally there is; she is only occasionally in bed.

Daily Statement
Book not made up daily, as required by Privy Council regulations.

8291. I observe that your Daily Statement Book is not made up every day?—No.

8292. Does that fulfil the conditions and requirements of a Daily Statement Book?—Whenever a change takes place, we make an entry. There is no one here to see it.

8293. Are you not aware that the Privy Council Regulations require that you should keep this Morning or Daily Statement Book; and as the book is not kept every day, that requirement is not complied with?—So far as the daily statement of the numbers in the house is concerned, it is in the book. Whenever a change takes place an entry is made. The book is not kept daily.

8294. This is Thursday, 14th May; there appears to be no entry in this book since Friday, the 8th May; how do you account for that?—There was no change.

8295. Then, in point of fact, the regulation is not complied with?—Well, in my mind, it was.

8296. Your attention has been called to the case of a man who has been four days and four nights under restraint: as the Daily Statement Book has not been made up for six days, there is no record of that man's case. How do you consider the Privy Council Regulations have been complied with in that instance?—I think, the physician has a note of that case. The book for noting it is under his care.

8297. Are you aware that the Privy Council Regulations are not complied with in this respect by any entry made by the doctor, the duty devolves upon you?—I consider I fulfil my duty by making an entry whenever a change takes place.

8298. Was it not a change in the condition of the patient, Lynch, to place him under restraint?—Unquestionably.

8299. Then that change has not been recorded according to your own rule?—I would say, that is an omission. I would observe, that there is such a variety of official work thrown upon an individual that an omission may take place occasionally. I have all the official work of the establishment to do, and it is more than an individual can do.

8300. Are you aware it is your duty to keep the Morning Statement Book?—Yes.

8301. How can that book afford a record, as the law requires, of the period of the medical attendant's visit each day, if it has not been kept for the last six days?—There is no heading requiring that entry, I think, in the book. The medical attendant has his own book, in which he enters the hours of his visits, and the duration of his visits.

8302. I would call your attention to the following paragraph of the regulations, that the Morning Statement Book shall contain "A return of the number of patients, divided according to their sexes, the names of those admitted and discharged, specifying whether cured, relieved, or harmless and incurable; the names of those who have died; the number employed; the names of those under restraint or seclusion, and the causes thereof; the number under medical treatment; the visit and hour of visit of the respective medical officers, which latter is to be duly filled up and signed by them." How can that be done when the book does not contain any such statement?—I think you will find that there is a book containing that heading set apart solely for the physician.

8303. In what manner do you bring under the notice of the Board of Governors any matters you wish to call their attention to, verbally, or by a written statement?—In most cases, verbally.

8304. Do you keep a memorandum book?—No.

8305. Are you aware the Privy Council Regulations require "A Memorandum Book to be kept before each Board, in which an entry shall be made of all matters to be submitted for consideration, as well as of all communications from the Manager to the Board; in order that such communications may remain on record, with the decision of the Board thereon, to be noted in the margin by the Chairman"?—I have no such book.

8306. Have you ever read the regulation?—I think I have.

8307. How long since?—Probably a year or two ago. There are some of the regulations not very penitible. It is in the working of an institution you will see the utility or invalidity of these things; but as much as possible we comply with the law regulating us.

8308. Is there any record of the case of Anne Mitchell, who was found this morning with wrist-locks on her, and strapped down in bed, with the strap twisted under her?—No particular record. We are aware it is one of those cases periodically subject to violent paroxysms for some days.

8309. There is the case of Eliza Hare, aged 19, in wrist-locks and strait-waistcoat, without shoes or stockings, and stated to have been kept in that condition of continued restraint for a period of two years?—I would say, not continued for two years. She never can be suffered to be at liberty, being a most violent case of impulsive insanity. She would destroy all in the room in a moment, if she was at liberty.

8310. Have you any padded rooms?—No.

8311. Have you ever had any experience of padded rooms as a substitute for mechanical restraint. I have not had experience of them here. I have seen them, and look upon them as very filthy things. It is impossible to keep them clean.

8312. Why is it impossible to keep them clean?—Because, if you put a case with dirty habits into one of them, you cannot clean the padding, and you must have a new set of padding to put in. I do not know that our Governors would be satisfied with that expenditure.

8313. Do you say they are filthy from personal observation?—From what I saw.

8314. Have you seen them?—Yes.

8315. Where?—In Hanwell, where I saw them very filthy.

8316. Is there any greater difficulty in keeping them clean in the Armagh Asylum than there is experienced in any other asylum?—I do not know that there would be any additional difficulty.

8317. Are you aware that they are not filthy in any asylum in Ireland?—I am not.

8318. Are you aware that wrist-locks are hung up loose in the day room of the patients in this asylum?—Yes.

ANSWERS.

Armagh District
Asylum.

Thos. Jackson, Esq.

8319. Then, without going through all the cases or circumstances, the state of things is this, that the attendants of this institution can use all those appliances of restraint without any direction from you or from the physician?—They are called on to report every case under restraint. They must not restrain a party without reporting it.

8320. But it appears that in one case in which the restraint was continued for four days and four nights there was no report, and that it was a case of which you were not aware?—I was aware the man was in bed, and that whenever he went to bed there should be restraint upon him.

No baths given except when medically prescribed.

8321. How frequently do the patients get a bath?—They wash the face and hands every morning. On Saturday there is a more general washing. They only get baths when prescribed by the physician.

8322. Then bathing of the whole person does not take place except when prescribed by the physician?—No it does not. There is a very extensive washing every Saturday so far as the shoulders.

No paying patients;
declined by the Board of "lunatic poor."

8323. Have you any patients in the asylum who pay?—No.

8324. Have you ever had any?—No.

8325. Is it the feeling of the Board of Governors that there should be no paying patients?—I believe it is the general feeling.

8326. Do you believe there is any considerable portion of lunatics in a condition above pauperism, but at the same time not able to pay that sum which would be requisite for their maintenance in private asylums?—I think there are very few. The Governors here consider a respectable party who is not able to pay in a private asylum as coming under the denomination of "lunatic poor."

Objection to the admission of paying
patients.

8327. What is your own opinion as to the advisability or otherwise of patients whose friends can barely pay for their maintenance here being received into the asylum?—I would be opposed to it on the ground that it would create a jealousy with the non-paying patients; and, referring to an observation that I made previously, there appears no necessity for such patients being received.

8328. If they were treated in the same way as the non-paying patients, would the jealousy you apprehend arise?—Lunatics are a very jealous community.

8329. Would it necessarily be known that one patient paid and another did not?—I do not think that there is a move I make that the patients do not know. You are probably aware that they are a most intelligent community, possessing far more intelligence than what are called sane persons outside, that is, the maniacs.

8330. In the present case there would be no necessity for a move on your part, nor any necessity that the patient himself should know he was paid for?—It is extraordinary how they acquire information. They are quite sharp and on the alert in every little matter.

The servants; their capacity to read and write; reading for the patients.

8331. Are the servants of the establishment for the most part able to read and write?—For the most part, I think, they are capable of reading and writing.

8332. Are they ever employed in reading for the patients?—Some years ago we had a school, and they engaged in teaching the patients to spell and read. There are occasionally solitary cases with which we are engaged in the same way; but we gave up the general practice, inasmuch as it did not appear to meet the approbation of some people.

8333. Explain more fully what you have stated?—The servants occasionally read with some of the patients. We have periodicals for the servants themselves to get them to attend to reading and writing. Formerly, as I have mentioned, we had a school. I formed classes at which the nurses attended as monitors. The thing went on till cold water was thrown on it.

Reasons of the discontinuance of a school in the Asylum

8334. Why was it given up?—I do not know that I can well answer, but the manager was insulted about it, and it being a very great labour to him he had to give it up.

8335. What do you mean by the manager being insulted about an arrangement that was carried out under the approval of the Board?—It was a voluntary act of his own; an additional labour undertaken. It seemed to be condemned by those who probably had a right to condemn; therefore he relinquished it.

8336. Are we to understand that the school was opened and the giving of instruction was undertaken by the manager without the particular direction of the Board?—The Board was aware of it.

8337. What were the objections raised against the school instruction?—I would answer that by saying that the idea of teaching was ridiculed.

8338. Do you mean that the idea of giving any instruction to insane persons was ridiculed?—Yes.

8339. Do you mean by the Board?—No; the Board did not ridicule it.

8340. Do you mean by individual members of the Board?—I do not know that I would say the former physician we had here gave great opposition.

Collection of books for the patients.

8341. Is there a library of books?—It is a limited one. We have some periodicals—Chambers' Journal, Family Herald, and other little publications, which a good many of the patients, both male and female, engage in reading from time to time; not every day, but occasionally.

Amusements.

8342. Have you any means of amusing the patients?—The men occasionally play cards and draughts, and ball in fine weather. The women occasionally have a little tea-party and a dance, under proper control, and with a very cautious selection. I would observe that during an excited period to bring such cases forward and permit them to engage in this would prove injurious to them.

8343. I presume, that in all well-regulated establishments no one would be allowed to take part in amusements or occupations that were not suited to his state of health?—Certainly not. The selection requires a good deal of discrimination.

8344. You would not consider that the fact of a few patients being injured by attendance at such things, and who would therefore be prevented from attending, would be sufficient to justify the withdrawal of amusements from all the patients?—Not at all; but I would prefer of all those things some rational occupation. I have no great opinion of amusements.

8345. Are there any chaplains attached to this institution?—No.

8346. Have there ever been?—No. There is one of the clergy attends here by the Primate's direction, I believe at his expense. He attends on Sunday for about half an hour.

8347. Do you mean for the purpose of celebrating divine worship?—Yes.

8348. Where is divine worship celebrated?—In one of the day-rooms.

8349. How long has that continued?—I cannot exactly say, about two years.

8350. I understand his Grace the Primate provides the chaplain himself?—I think so.

8351. What proportion of the inmates of the Established Church are capable of attending divine worship?—The number varies; sometimes ten. About one-fourth of the total number of Protestants attend, sometimes more than thirty attend.

8352. On an average, are half of the Protestant inmates able to attend?—Scarcely one-half.

8353. With regard to the other religious persuasions, does any clergyman attend to celebrate divine worship for them on Sundays?—No, but they attend whenever called upon; and the Roman Catholic Archbishop left word with me to send for them whether a patient wished it or not, if there was no hope of recovery. That is a constant practice; a notification is sent to the clergyman, and he comes.

8354. What is the general rule of the house with reference to the attendance of clergymen of various persuasions?—The house is open to them. They seldom come except it is notified to them, unless they call in to ask how a patient is, or some such question.

8355. Are any of the patients allowed to go out to attend church or chapel?—No.

8356. Then the Board have made no arrangement for the celebration of divine service for such of the inmates as the physician and clergyman may deem fit to attend?—No.

8357. Has the appointment of chaplains ever been under the consideration of the Board?—It has been brought before them from time to time.

8358. With what result?—The majority of the Board, I think, appeared to consider the appointment unnecessary.

8359. Have you ever been in the habit of reading prayers to the inmates of the establishment?—No.

8360. Then, except in the case you have referred to, of a clergyman sent by the Primate to attend, there is no religious prayer whatever regularly in the house?—None, except what I state of a clergyman coming to visit one of the patients. They do come occasionally. The Roman Catholic Archbishop, as I have said, begged of me to give intimation to the clergyman whenever a patient was ill.

8361. Have the ministrations of the clergyman who attended by the direction of the Lord Primate been followed by beneficial or injurious effects as to the health of the inmates?—Neither the one nor the other. We make the selection very cautiously, and where there is a number of chronic cases you can always select a quiet body that will go in and come out just the same.

8362. Do you think it is satisfactory to them to be enabled to attend divine worship?—I think some of them look upon it as a great hardship. Some are anxious to go; others deem it a hardship, and exhibit a little refractory conduct at the time.

8363. Do you think the presence of a clergyman in the house and the celebration of divine worship create any excitement or ill-feeling between inmates of different persuasions?—It has not done so here so far. Some of the patients appear angry that they are not permitted to attend.

8364. Would you go so far as to state, what has been argued by some, that the attendance here of a clergyman of the Established Church and his ministrations have at all impeded the cure of patients of that church in this asylum?—Decidedly not.

8365. Do you select curable cases to attend the chaplain?—I select all the cases that go just according to their state of mind.

8366. What is your opinion generally as to the advisability or otherwise of having chaplains attached to this institution?—Well, I would qualify it in this way: where there are chronic cases you can always select a quiet congregation who may attend without either benefit or injury; but as to the recent cases, the interference of the chaplain would do mischief—that I am satisfied of.

8367. Do you think that a person who is unfortunately affected with a diseased mind, coming to a curative institution, is likely to have his cure retarded by being afforded that religious consolation which he has had out of doors?—Much will depend upon the state of mind of the patient. A patient may be very indignant at a clergyman going near him; another will not, but on the contrary may wish to see a clergyman.

8368. Then, there can be no general rule laid down upon the subject?—No general rule except this, that any interference with patients, by strangers or non-residents, I have ever seen to be injurious. I believe it produces excitement.

8369. I believe the Privy Council Regulations with regard to chaplains, provide that cases which are unfit to receive, or are incapable of benefiting by, the ministrations of clergymen, can, at the discretion of the officers of the institution, be prevented from attending?—I think there is a provision of that nature.

8370. Are you aware of this provision, "That the respective Boards of Governors, the managers and matrons of the district lunatic asylums in Ireland do afford every facility to the admission of the several chaplains appointed thereto, in order to enable them to officiate according to their respective creeds, and to afford religious instruction and consolation to all patients, except such as shall be declared by the physicians to be unfit and incapable of understanding the nature of the service, and of appreciating the effects of religion?"—I met with that provision.

8371. Supposing chaplains to be appointed for institutions of this kind, do you not consider that clause would sufficiently protect any inmates who might be injured by attendance at religious worship?—I do not know as to that. I have never had an opportunity of judging of the effect of the presence of a variety of chaplains on such a community as we have here; but so far as I have seen of any individual chaplain, I have observed no ill-effect.

8372. My question was, whether the provision which I have read from the regulation, giving a discretionary power to the officers of the institution to select patients for attendance at religious worship, and to prevent those who were unfit, from attending, did not sufficiently guard against unsuitable cases being present at divine worship?—Of course, it does.

8373. Do the Inspectors visit this institution frequently?—I think, at least, twice a year.

8374. Are those visits made without notice?—We have no intimation of them.

8375. Are they made on the occasion of the attendance of the Inspectors at meetings of the Board?—They have occasionally come on board days; not often.

8376. Have you found any difficulty to arise as regards the supervision which the Privy Council exercises over your contracts and expenditure?—So far as the Privy Council are concerned, the arrangement is satisfactory. We have sometimes, I conceive, been given a great deal of unnecessary labour.

8377. Have you any suggestion to offer the Commissioners relative to their inquiry?—I would suggest the repeal of that Act which admits of dangerous lunatics being committed to goals, or of goals being made the medium of transferring to the asylum. I would also observe that, where the local authorities take such an interest as they have ever done here in those matters, that they should be looked to as the responsible parties, and that their officers under them should look to them, and render an account of their stewardship, without having to deal with a great many departments unconnected with them.

8378. Supposing that Act repealed, would you give the justices the power of committing direct to the asylum?—The only thing would be to require a compliance with the form of admission. We have to guard against patients coming from other counties. We can only charge Armagh with so many, and the Governors are cautious that patients admitted from Armagh are from the county. A good deal of watchfulness is necessary, for efforts would be made to send in patients from adjoining counties.

8379. Supposing that Act was repealed, I suppose it would be an additional reason why further accommodation should be provided at once in the asylum?—The probability is, that by the time the act is repealed, we would have a good many vacancies. We have only six outstanding applicants at present. We have admitted thirty within the last month.

8380. There are, however, over 100 lunatics within the workhouses of the district?—I was not aware of that.

8381. Have you found the number of applications to increase or diminish within the last few years?—For the last year they have increased.

8382. There appears to have been a considerable increase as compared with the year 1852?—Yes; I cannot well account for it.

8383. Is there a clerk and storekeeper attached to the institution?—No clerk; there is a storekeeper who resides on the premises.

8384. By whom are the duties of clerk performed?—By the manager.

Thomas Cawing, esq., M.D., sworn and examined.

8385. How long have you held the office of visiting physician to the Armagh District Lunatic Asylum?—Six years, last April.

8386. Do you attend immediately on the admission of patients to consider their case?—I attend three days in the week.

8387. The manager not being a medical man, how far do you feel that you are aided in the discharge of your medical duties by him?—If there is any thing particular, requiring my attention, so far as he can judge of it, when a patient is admitted I am informed of it, and I come to see the patient at once.

8388. On the first admission of a patient, do you attend the case at once and prescribe to the manager the course of treatment to be adopted?—On the first admission of a patient I see him, and I take a particular note of his case in my private book, and I enter it in the general register, and I direct whatever I may think the case requires.

8389. As a general principle, are you favourable or otherwise to the manager of such an institution being a medical man?—Yes; I think a medical man, ceteris paribus, is the best person to be manager of such an asylum as this, although the Armagh Institution could not, in my mind, be conducted in a better manner by any person than by the present manager, Mr. Jackson.

Opinion in favour of having medical Managers.

8389. With whom do you consider the responsibility of treatment should rest, if the manager was a medical man, whether with the manager or the visiting physician?—With both—partly with the resident physician, and partly with the visiting physician.

8390. Do you consider the resident medical manager or the visiting physician should be the person to prescribe the course of treatment to be followed?—Well, I should say, so far as the medical treatment is concerned, the visiting physician should be the person; and so far as the moral treatment is concerned, in the absence of the visiting physician, for he cannot be here constantly, the manager should be the person.

8391. You consider the visiting physician, in that case, more like a consulting physician?—Well, the visiting physician does not see the cases daily, and the manager would have them more under his observation.

8392. Supposing a competent medical man to be selected as manager of the institution, is it your opinion, as a general rule, that the attendance of the visiting physician could be dispensed with?—Well, I should say it would be better that the visiting physician should still continue in attendance.

8393. Do you make any entry of your visit in the Daily Statement Book on each occasion?—Yes, I do, in my own Daily Statement Book. Yesterday I made an entry in that book. We had sixty-nine male patients and seventy-four female patients. We had Thomas Lynch, an epileptic, strapped in bed three days; Jane Lang strapped constantly; a girl named Hare constantly strapped. Those I enter every three or four days, so that I know the persons who are under restraint. Every day I come I enter the hour at which I arrive, and the duration of my visit.

8394. On the occasions of your visits, do you go all through the house?—On each occasion I go through every part of the house. I first go into No. 1 corridor, and I ask is any person in bed; and if any person is in bed, I go and visit that patient, and prescribe, if it is necessary. Then to No. 2 corridor, then to Nos. 3 and 4, and so on; and then I go into the yard and see the patients, and, if there is a necessity to prescribe, I do so. This I do three times a week.

8395. Are you enabled to judge, by any record that is kept, of the cases that are under restraint?—I ascertain each day who are under restraint, and I make an entry of it.

8396. That would be at the time of your visit?—Yes.

8397. Is there any record accessible to you that would show those who were under restraint since your last visit?—I believe the manager keeps a record of those under restraint, and when I ask him he tells me, and the keepers or the nurses tell me.

8398. I refer to cases under restraint in the intervals of your visits?—Every other day I visit, and if I find any person under restraint when I come, I ask how long he is under restraint, and I enter it in my book.

8399. Supposing a person to have been under restraint for the whole of the intervening time between your visits, and that there was no record of it, would there be any means to enable you to ascertain that such a person was under restraint?—I do not look to the manager's book; I merely ascertain from the attendants who are under restraint, and who had been under restraint since I last visited, and I make an entry of it myself. It is a question I always ask of the attendants.

8400. Do you keep a case book of all the cases?—Yes; I have every case entered.

8401. Are all the cases of restraint entered in your book?—There is the case of Anne Mitchell that I omitted to enter yesterday. It was a mere omission; but if you look back you will find her name mentioned as under restraint. She is so often under restraint, that we might omit entering the case for one day.

8402. Do the attendants apply the instruments of restraint without an order from you?—I do not give any order; it is the manager who gives the order.

8403. Then the instruments of restraint may be applied without an order from you?—Yes.

8404. You visit only every second day?—Yes; sometimes, if there is any urgent case, I come every day.

8405. Then, in the intervals of your visits, patients may be continued under restraint, although not requiring it, at the discretion of the keepers?—Subject to the approval of the manager.

8406. Is there any record, or book, or books, to which you can refer to ascertain any cases of illness that have occurred in the intervening days, or of restraint having been applied?—No; there is no record that I am aware of.

8407. Then, for any information as to either illness or restraint, you have to depend only upon verbal communications?—Yes, either from the manager or from the attendants, to whom I chiefly apply.

8408. It is stated that there is no portion of the building set apart as an infirmary, what is your opinion as to the propriety of having an infirmary?—I should like an infirmary; it would be of great advantage. We do not know when an epidemic would arise, and we would require larger accommodation than we have at present.

8409. In the construction of this building there was no provision made for an infirmary?—No.

8410. Is the ordinary diet of the establishment such as you would consider proper?—At present it is. When I first became physician of the asylum I thought the diet was too low. We had soup three days in the week, and bread and milk three days in the week for dinner. I suggested to the Board to give soup six days in the week. I think the effect has been favourable, for we have had much less disease in the asylum since the improvement of the dietary than we were in the habit of having before.

8412. Do you consider the patients have a sufficient quantity of warm clothing?—Well, I should say they have.

8413. Are you satisfied with the supply of bedding?—Yes.

8414. Are you satisfied with the bed-room appliances for the sick confined to bed?—Well, I think there is an inconvenience in attending sick patients in their separate wards. The distance at which the nurse is from the patients is sometimes inconvenient; and if you have a number of patients to visit, the going from one corridor to another is, I think, a great inconvenience; and, I think, the rooms in which sick persons are laid up day and night are badly ventilated.

8415. Do you think the appliances of the rooms at present, such appliances as are required for sick persons, are sufficient?—Well, I do not think they are. I think they are insufficient.

8416. Do you think it would be advantageous or otherwise to have secular instruction given to those of the inmates who do not know how to read and write?—I do. I think any thing that would occupy either the body or the mind of a lunatic is likely to be of advantage.

8417. Do you consider that the institution possesses a sufficient amount of those means for occupation and amusement which a curative hospital for the insane ought to have?—Well, I think it would be rather an advantage if there were some more means of recreation afforded to the inmates of the asylum.

8418. What is your opinion as to the advisability or otherwise of chaplains being attached to the institution?—Well, I should say in recent cases the chaplains would run a great risk of doing harm; but in old chronic cases, where they are properly selected, I should think no injury would be done.

8419. The Privy Council regulations give to you the discretion of selecting those who might attend the ministrations of the chaplains, do you conceive that danger, such as you speak of, could then arise?—Well, I do not think danger could arise if the cases were properly selected; but I perfectly agree with the evidence of Mr. Jackson, that, as to recent cases, there would be a risk of disturbing the minds of the patients if chaplains were allowed to attend them.

8420. My questions always proceeded upon the assumption that you would prevent the attendance of the chaplain upon cases where the patients were unfit to receive his ministrations?—Yes.

8421. Does not the asylum contain a large number of incurable cases?—A great number.

8422. Do you find that number to be increasing?—I think so.

8423. Are a considerable number of those incurable cases chronic?—Yes.

8424. Would the attendance of chaplains in such cases be, generally speaking, advantageous or disadvantageous?—It would be very difficult to say; I should say it would be attended with neither one effect nor the other.

8425. Having a power vested in you to prevent a patient who was unfit to receive the ministrations of a clergyman from attending at or receiving those ministrations, would you apprehend that the attendance of the chaplain would interfere with the curative treatment?—Except in recent cases, I think not.

8426. Do you think the mere appearance of a clergyman has a tendency to excite the inmates of an asylum who come from amongst a mixed population?—I do not think it has.

8427. Are there not many insane patients labouring under some particular monomania who are perfectly capable of profiting by religious ministrations?—There are.

8428. The number of lunatic poor in Ireland unprovided for has led to the consideration of the best means of supplying additional accommodation, have you ever considered in what manner that additional accommodation could be best afforded, whether by removing incurables to another institution, or extending the present building?—It is a nice and difficult question to answer. The great objection, I think, to an incurable hospital, is the gloom that attaches to it. By sending supposed incurable patients to an asylum for incurables, you doom them, in fact, to perpetual lunacy; whereas, if you extended the size of the present establishment, you could continue the same system of treatment, you would have a mixture of curable and incurable cases, and amongst the apparently incurable cases cures may take place some time—after years of apparently hopeless insanity, patients will unexpectedly get well.

8429. You think there would be a risk, therefore, in undertaking to determine who should be transmitted to an institution for incurables?—Yes; I think there would be some difficulty about that.

8430. Do you attach a good deal of importance to the depressing moral effect that would be produced upon patients by removing them to an hospital for incurables?—Well, I attach some importance to it.

8431. You are, of course, aware that when cases are incurable in an ordinary hospital they are removed from that hospital?—Yes.

8432. Their resource, then, is the workhouse, if they are paupers, or if not, they remain at home with their friends?—Yes.

8433. Do you apprehend that those who are not of sane mind would suffer more from the depressing moral effect of removal, under similar circumstances, than those who are of sane mind?—Those who are sane would suffer much more than those who are insane.

8434. Then the depressing moral effect would be less upon the insane than upon the sane?—Decidedly.

8435. Supposing there was a provision made that the proposed provincial or large asylum for incurable patients should have the power of re-transmitting a patient if he became convalescent, or if symptoms of convalescence appeared, would your objection to the establishment of large separate asylums for incurable cases be diminished?—It would, certainly.

8436. Is there any other matter to which you would wish to call our attention?—I do not know of any other.

8437. I believe you are one of the most constant attendants at the Board of Governors of this institution?—Yes; I believe I am about the most constant attendant.

8438. Have you been for many years a Governor?—About twenty years.

8439. What is your opinion as to the manner in which the Board of Governors are at present appointed, do you consider it desirable the system should be changed?—No; I do not see any reason to find fault with the present system.

The appointment of Governors.

8440. It has been suggested, amongst other things, to the Commissioners, that the Board should assume more of a representative character, and that Governors should be appointed from the Grand Jurors of the counties, would you think that desirable?—Well, I do not think there would be much improvement in that arrangement.

8441. What is your opinion as to the Inspectors being members of the Board of Governors?—I think there is no objection to it.

The Inspectors as members of the Board.

8442. Do you consider that they should be allowed to vote at the Board, or merely to attend without voting? I do not think it would make much difference one way or the other. I think it is of very small importance whether they vote or not.

8443. Do you consider that the existing asylum at Armagh is adequate for the wants of the district?—It would appear not, latterly. One of the counties was taken off a short time ago, about two years ago, and we find the pressure quite as great as it ever was before.

Inadequacy of the Asylum for the wants of the district.

8444. What county was taken off?—Fermanagh.

8445. What is your opinion as to the control exercised by the executive authority over the expenditure for the enlarging or making additions to the asylum, do you consider that might be left to the Board of Governors, or would you prefer it remaining in the hands of the Executive?—I would prefer to leave it in the hands of the Executive; I think a check of that kind is always necessary.

Government control.

8446. It has been stated to us that it has been the usage of this Board to admit into the asylum any patient whose family might not be able to pay the full sum required for his maintenance in a private asylum, is that the case?—Yes; that has been the practice.

Admission of patients; objection to receiving paying patients.

8447. What is your opinion as to the propriety of taking payment from the families of patients who might be enabled to pay only a portion of the cost of maintenance?—I think parties would avail themselves of that privilege to a very limited extent only, and I do not think it would be expedient to alter the present system. I think it would not be desirable to mix up the two classes, paying and non-paying patients.

8448. Of course a patient who is enabled to pay the full cost of his maintenance in a private asylum would not be received here?—He would not be received here.

8449. What do you consider to be the objection against mixing those patients who would be enabled to pay a portion of the cost of their maintenance with the pauper patients?—I think there would be a certain degree of jealousy, that might probably interfere with the proper control of the establishment.

8450. How could that jealousy exist if both classes of patients were treated in the same way?—I do not think it would be possible to prevent a distinction being observed in some way.

8451. If a distinction was not made it could scarcely be observed?—Well, I think it would come to be known amongst the patients.

8452. At present the cost of maintaining the inmates of the district lunatic asylums is borne by the county rate?—Yes.

8453. What is your opinion of the suggestion which has been made, that it should be transferred to the poor rate?—It would come to much the same thing. It would throw part of it upon the landlord; that would be the only difference, and I think the landlords have enough to pay as it is. It would come very hard upon the clergy, who have to pay the rate. I think the present burden of the poor rate is unfairly laid upon them, and it would increase that burden unfairly by placing this charge upon that rate.

Objection to transferring to poor rate the cost of maintenance.

8454. It has been also suggested that the lunatic poor, under the proposed arrangement, would be more properly charged upon the electoral divisions than upon the larger area of the county?—Well, I have sometimes thought it would be a fair course to put the charge upon the electoral divisions. It would be attended with a great deal more trouble, and I do not know whether it would be perhaps practicable in all cases.

Question of charging lunatics upon electoral divisions.

8455. Do you think electoral divisions ought to be made as responsible for their insane poor as for their unemployed sane poor?—I would say so on the first glance of the thing; but on consideration, I would prefer to leave the whole matter as it is at present.

- ARMAGH.
Armagh District Asylum.
W. Paton, Esq., J.P.
8456. Have you had occasion since the passing of the Superannuation Act for the officers and servants of lunatic asylums to put it into force in this institution?—I think not.
8457. You have not then had an opportunity of considering whether it is suitable?—No; we have had no experience whatever of it.
8458. In the event of this building being increased, do you, from your knowledge of the locality, think there would be any difficulty in obtaining sufficient ground for the purpose?—I think there would be no difficulty.
8459. Do the Board of Governors make it a rule to visit the institution themselves from time to time?—There is no particular rule; but we do occasionally look in to see it.
8460. You have heard reference made to the Dangerous Lunatic Act, what is your opinion as to the propriety of repealing that Act, by which lunatics can be committed to the county gaol in the first instance?—Of course if the Act was repealed some means should be provided to receive the lunatics that might be sent by magistrates to the asylum, and at present this asylum has not sufficient accommodation to admit of that being done.
8461. How far do you consider it proper that any class of lunatics should be detained in the workhouse?—Well, there is no proper provision in the workhouses for them. I look upon it as a mere temporary measure putting them into the workhouse, and it is only a certain class of lunatics of course that is admitted—only those that are perfectly harmless and quiet.
8462. I believe by the workhouse arrangements the attendants upon lunatics are generally pampers?—Generally.
8463. Do you find that idiots and lunatics whose habits are objectionable are subjected to annoyance in a workhouse?—Sometimes they are.
8464. I presume you do not consider workhouses suitable places for lunatics?—I do not consider either a workhouse or a gaol a suitable place for them.
8465. The gaol of Armagh is conducted partly upon the separate system?—Yes.
8466. Do you know whether lunatics, when committed to that gaol, are placed in separate cells and treated on the separate system like the ordinary prisoners?—They are placed in separate cells and kept there, and they are treated like the common prisoners, I suppose.
8467. How far do you consider that the appointment of the manager, physician, and superior officers of the asylum should be left to the Executive Government?—Well, I think it should not be entirely with the Executive Government. I should place it pretty much upon the same system as that upon which the Poor Law officers are appointed, that they should be nominated by the Governors and approved of by the Executive.
8468. Would you leave the Executive the power of removal after inquiry upon oath and cause shown?—Yes, I would.
8469. Referring to a previous part of your evidence, is it your opinion that there is any large class of persons who are enabled to pay only the cost of maintenance of their relatives or friends in an asylum, and for whose lunatic relatives or friends it would be desirable provision should be made?—No; I do not think there is a large class; I think it is very limited.
8470. Have you ever considered the propriety of chaplains being appointed to this institution?—Yes; we have had it under consideration several times at this Board. I think the general opinion of the Board was always against it; but, I think, we were more influenced by the opinion of the medical gentlemen and the manager than any thing else.
8471. Do you think that the presence of chaplains of different persuasions in the institution would lead to excitement amongst the inmates?—We have generally entertained that opinion.
8472. Do you consider, supposing the fact to be so, that it is sufficient to outweigh the important advantage of the attendance of clergymen upon such an institution?—Yes, I should say it was.
8473. Do you find that in workhouses and gaols the attendance of chaplains of various persuasions leads to any angry feeling?—No; not amongst the inmates of those institutions, who are sane.
8474. Is your opinion as to the injurious effect that may result from the attendance of chaplains founded upon experience of such an effect having arisen in this institution?—No; we have had no experience of it.
8475. Then, it is a mere conjecture?—Mere conjecture.
8476. In these any matter to which you would particularly desire to call the attention of the Commissioners?—With reference to the enlargement of the building, I was about to remark that I think it would be better to detach the counties annexed to the asylum than to enlarge the building, because I look upon it, that, in a few years, this house will not be more than sufficient for the wants of this county. The applications, you may have observed, have been increasing year after year, and although Fermanagh has been detached we are still as much in want of room as ever we were; and, I think, if Monaghan and Cavan were detached we would be still in much the same position as we are now.
8477. You would prefer the counties being detached to having an enlargement of the present building?—Yes; besides, if ever it was determined to put the incurables into a different place from this asylum, it would then be too large even for the three counties. If the asylum were now enlarged it would prevent this matter from being afterwards carried out, in case it were found expedient at any future time to do so; and I should be of opinion that, in the course of time, it will be found that this house will not be more than sufficient for the wants of the county Armagh.
- The Dangerous Lunatic Act.*
- Objection to the detention of lunatics in workhouses;*
- Or in gaols.*
- The Armagh gaol.*
- Appointment and removal of superior officers of Asylums.*
- Lunatic members of families with small means.*
- The chaplaincy question.*
- Objection to Chaplains merely conjectural.*
- The Asylum accommodation; suggestion to detach counties from the district.*

8478. You mean for the wants of the county, comprising the curable and incurable cases?—Yes, for the curable and the incurable, and also, taking into account the result of repealing the Dangerous Lunatic Act, which would be to increase the number sent here, and the having no lunatics in gaols or in workhouses would have the same effect, that is, to increase the number of our inmates. There is another thing, I think it would be expedient to consider on this point. We see from experience that the number of inmates from the county in which the asylum is situate is always greater than from the other counties of the districts. That proves that a certain inconvenience arises to the other counties, because of their distance from the asylum. We generally have as many patients here, belonging to the county Armagh, as we have belonging to the other two counties; and I have no doubt whatever that if this institution was in the county Monaghan we would have double the number of patients we have now from that county, and the same with respect to Cavan.

Thomas Dobbin, esq., J.P., sworn and examined.

8479. What is your opinion as to the manner in which the Governors of this institution are at present appointed, do you approve of the appointment being left with the Executive Government, or would you approve of the system of representation being introduced?—So far as my opinion goes, I think the present system is the best.

8480. What is your opinion as to the authority in whom the appointment of the superior officers should vest?—I think it should be also with the Government.

8481. Have you been long a Governor of the institution?—I have been for some years.

8482. What is your opinion as to the propriety or otherwise of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums being members of each Board?—I do not think there is any objection whatever, quite the contrary. When they attend our Board they generally participate in the discussions. I do not think there is any gentleman at the Board would have the least objection to their attending.

8483. Do you think they should have the power of voting or be restricted merely to the right of attending?—I do not think it is of any consequence either way.

8484. Have you ever considered the question, whether the cost of maintaining the inmates of a lunatic asylum should be charged upon the electoral divisions under the Poor Law, or remain, as at present, upon the county rate?—I would rather have it on the county rate.

8485. In the event of this district requiring additional accommodation for its lunatic poor, which would you be in favour of detaching one or two of the counties of the district, or of extending the present building?—I think it would be better to detach a county. I think Cavan would furnish a sufficient number of insane to require an asylum for itself.

8486. Do you concur in the opinion expressed as to the unsuitability of gaols and workhouses as places of detention for lunatics?—I object to them very much, for such a purpose, from what I have seen.

LIMERICK DISTRICT ASYLUM.

Limerick District
Asylum.

Robert Fitzgerald, Esq., M.A., sworn and examined.

Robert Fitzgerald,
Esq., M.A.

8487. How long have you held the appointment of manager and resident physician of this asylum?—Seven years in September next.

8488. Was the manager whom you succeeded a professional man?—He was.

8489. What instructions were given to you with reference to your medical duties, if any, at the time of your appointment?—None whatever.

8490. Is there a visiting physician attached to the asylum?—There is.

8491. Practically, what part do you take in the treatment of insanity in the asylum?—An equal part with the visiting physician.

8492. When a patient is admitted, does the visiting physician immediately attend to examine that patient and consider his case?—Sometimes.

8493. Do you consider that you have any responsibility of the treatment of the patient beyond that which was attached to the resident manager under the Privy Council regulations?—I do not conceive I have, except in a case of accident, or any thing occurring at night. However, that is a supposition of my own—I have never had it from any authority; I would suppose that was the reason medical men were appointed resident managers.

8494. Has any arrangement been made between you and the visiting physician as to the particular duties you would discharge?—None whatever.

8495. The visits of the visiting physician, I believe, are required only three times a week?—I believe where the patients number any thing over 200 he is required to visit daily, at least according to the instructions I have read, from the Privy Council.

8496. How many lunatics are there in this asylum?—338. I think the instructions say a daily visit, and as often after as is necessary where the number of patients exceeds 200.

8497. Practically, do you or does the visiting physician determine what course of treatment is to be pursued with reference to a lunatic on his first reception?—I see him, of course, immediately, and perhaps the visiting physician may not see him for a day or so afterwards, and it devolves upon me to order certain things for him.

8498. Are the lunatics admitted by the Board of Governors in every instance?—No; I occasionally admit any pressing case that comes, and I bring it before the Board at their next meeting.

8499. You making a memorandum of the admission as required?—Yes.

8500. Is the asylum at present full?—Yes; there is no vacancy either at the male or female side.

8501. Are there more applications for admission?—Yes; there are outstanding applications.

8502. Do you consider, therefore, that the asylum is not adequate for the wants of the district?—It is certainly not adequate.

8503. Has the enlargement of the asylum been under the consideration of the Board of Governors?—No.

8504. Do you generally obtain full information with regard to the case when a patient is admitted?—Very frequently inadequate information; none at all in some instances, particularly with respect to the cases coming from workhouses and gaols, we can never learn their antecedents.

8505. Do you, in point of fact, get any information at all in gaol cases beyond what the gaol authorities know of their own knowledge?—No.

8506. Do you find that the cases which come from gaols have been long detained in them?—They are sometimes very long in gaol before we can receive them.

8507. As a medical man, what do you consider is the effect of that long detention as regards the probability of cure?—There is less chance of cure, because of the duration of the disease.

8508. How long have you known a patient to have been in gaol before he was received here?—Sometimes three months; I cannot speak positively.

8509. I believe this asylum at present is only for Limerick county and city, and for the county of Clare?—It was also for the county of Kerry heretofore.

8510. Are the admissions more numerous from Limerick county or from the county of Clare?—They are more numerous from the county of Limerick.

8511. Do you think greater facility is afforded to lunatics coming from any one portion of the district than from another?—I do not. If a clear case is presented to us, and that we have a vacancy, we receive that person. There is no priority.

8512. Is any fixed portion of the house appropriated particularly to Clare?—No.

8513. With reference to lunatics coming from workhouses, have you found that you obtain sufficient information with them?—None whatever. We can never obtain any information respecting workhouse cases.

8514. Are you enabled to form any opinion as to the time they generally remain in workhouses before coming here?—No.

no priority given in admissions to patients from other county.Cases from workhouses; no information respecting them.

8515. Are they generally chronic cases you receive from workhouses?—Very often chronic, bad ones.

8516. In cases of patients being received from the workhouse presumed to be incurable, what bond have you for their removal?—No bond.

8517. They remain, therefore, in the asylum?—There was one case they took back at the Scarriff workhouse by a great deal to do. I had an application from the workhouse, and before I could take the man in he was sent to Ennis goal. I had some correspondence with the workhouse authorities, and, after some delay, he was taken back. There is no bond whatever.

8518. By a return which you have furnished, it appears that on the 1st January, 1857, there were 206 probably incurable cases in the house out of 335, have the Board of Governors ever considered any arrangement for disposing of those incurable cases?—No.

8519. As a curative hospital, it would appear that this is not available to any thing like the extent of its accommodation, inasmuch as this number of incurable cases is likely to remain till death removes them?—Yes; and, therefore, to exclude the probably curable cases.

8520. Have you at present any applications from Boards of Guardians in the district for the admission of lunatics?—Yes; I think we have from our workhouse here.

8521. Is there any class of lunatics who, in your opinion, can properly be detained in workhouses?—We have some that would be much more suitable for a workhouse than for an asylum.

8522. What class of lunatics are those?—Quite harmless persons; there are not a great many of them.

8523. What is your own opinion as to the best arrangement to make for the disposal of those incurable cases?—I think the best arrangement would be to extend this asylum, and put them into a part of the building separate from the curable cases.

8524. Would you be favourable to placing them in a separate asylum in a different locality, or to an addition being made to the present building, and those incurables being removed, remaining, however, connected with the asylum?—I think it would amount to the same thing; it might be more economical to have an addition built to the present asylum for them.

8525. Supposing a distinct and separate asylum provided for those incurable cases, do you think there would be any danger of an injurious effect being produced upon the lunatics because of their removal to an establishment for incurables?—Well, if they came to understand that they were there as incurables, I think it would operate against their recovery, if there was any chance of their recovery. It would be like condemning them to perpetual insanity.

8526. What effect do you consider the presence of a large number of incurable lunatics in a curative establishment has upon those whose cure is possible?—A most injurious effect.

8527. Considering, on the one hand, the injurious effect which the presence of incurable cases has in a curative hospital, and the probable risk, on the other hand, attending the removal of those cases to an incurable establishment, which course would you prefer?—I would have the two classes distinct and separate.

8528. How do you consider that the presence of incurable cases amongst curable is injurious?—What I should say is, that incurable cases might injuriously affect excitable persons coming to convalescence. Congregating too many of them together is, I think, a bad arrangement.

8529. Then, your objection is to the assembling of too large a number of lunatics, under any circumstances, in the same building or establishment?—Yes; to assembling them in the same dormitory, day-room, or ward.

8530. From your knowledge of the district, is it your opinion that there is any considerable class of lunatics who are at large unprovided with any accommodation?—I rather think there are not many at large. Those insane persons who cannot be admitted here are generally sent into goals. The course adopted, generally, is this, their friends swear informations against them, and have them sent to goal.

8531. It is stated in consistory returns we have received, that there are about 200 persons in this district who, it is supposed, are insane, and are not in any asylum; do you consider that is likely to be a correct return?—I should say that would be a doubtful statement. I hardly think it could be the case without my knowledge; at the same time, I have not the opportunity the police have of ascertaining.

8532. Do you think there is any objection on the part of the poorer class to send their lunatic relatives and friends into this institution?—I think not; on the contrary, they are glad to get them admitted.

8533. Do you find that lunatics are detained at home for a considerable time before they are removed to this institution?—I think the relatives keep them in their houses for some time, not knowing, perhaps, what is the matter with them, from their not being acquainted with insanity; but when they discover the persons are insane, they show a great disposition to send them in here.

8534. Do you receive paying patients?—Yes.

8535. How many have you?—I think, nine.

8536. What rule is followed by the Board in that respect, are the patients obliged to pay the full cost of their maintenance, or only a proportion?—The rule made is this, that a paying patient shall pay a sum equivalent to the cost of supporting a pauper patient; then the sum varies, for the price of provisions may be greater in one year than another.

Lunatics.Limerick District Asylum.*

[Robert Ewagmoll, Esq., M.D.]
 Distinction made between paying and pauper patients.

8537. In point of fact, no patient is admitted as a paying patient unless he pays the average cost of the maintenance of a pauper inmate in each year?—Yes.

8538. Do you make any distinction between the paying patients and the pauper inmates as regards dress or diet?—Generally speaking, a paying patient is clothed by his friends. As to diet, the friends frequently give some diet, and we also make a distinction, because they are persons who have been accustomed to better diet before they came in; at the same time, there are paying patients who receive the same diet as pauper patients. If they are delicate we give them a better diet.

8539. Except for the reason you have stated, that where paying patients have been accustomed to better diet, and also where such patients receive diet from their friends, no paying patient in this asylum receives diet superior to that given to the ordinary patients?—It is to be understood by the friends of the paying patients that they are not to expect for them a higher scale of diet than is allowed to the ordinary pauper patients, because then the cost would be greater.

8540. Is there a fixed annual sum?—It varies according to the price of provisions.

8541. Each year a paying patient pays the same sum which it has cost to maintain a pauper patient?—Yes.

Difficulty of obtaining payment.

8542. Do you find any difficulty in securing the continued payment of that money?—I have found great difficulty.

Patients admitted for payment obliged to be retained as paupers.

8543. What was the result in those cases?—We were obliged to keep them as pauper inmates; we had no alternative. We could not put them outside the gate in a state of insanity. I found, in one or two instances, this to be done, that we received a quarter's payment in advance: the friends were apparently anxious to pay, and promised to continue paying so long as the patient remained in the asylum; but when the three months expired, we could get no more payment; the patient was in the asylum, and we could not put him out.

No bond for removal.

8544. Is there no bond from the friends or relatives binding them to take away the patient?—There is no bond. Generally the next of kin, as they are called, promise, in the event of recovery, to remove the patient; however, we may not be able to find those friends when we require them; they may not be forthcoming.

8545. With regard to the system of payment to which you refer, are you in favour of a fixed sum being charged to the paying patients, or of a discretion being exercised by the Board with regard to the sum that should be paid?—There is no law on the subject, and I do not know well what to say about it.

Paying patients wearing clothes different from that of pauper patients.

8546. Do you observe any difficulty arise from paying patients being in the same institution with pauper patients, because of their wearing a different dress, or from other circumstances?—No; I do not think it militates against either party.

8547. Are the friends of paying patients admitted to see them more frequently than the friends of ordinary patients?—No.

Visits of friends to patients.

8548. How do you regulate the admission of friends to see patients?—There are fixed days for visiting; however, if the friends come from a distance, on other days, we do not exclude them, provided it would not be considered injurious to the patients to see them. We do not allow friends to see patients when it would excite them too much.

Attendance of Governors.

8549. Have you generally a good attendance of Governors?—Well, three form a quorum. There is not a large attendance.

8550. Have any occasions arisen during the year on which a quorum of Governors did not assemble?—I think, on two occasions.

8551. On those occasions no meeting took place till the ensuing monthly meeting?—No; there was no extra meeting.

No Visiting Committee.

8552. Do the Governors visit the house themselves on those occasions?—Sometimes.

8553. Is there any Committee of Governors appointed as a Visiting Committee?—No.

8554. Is it a regular practice, or not, to visit the various wards of the institution at the time of the monthly meeting?—No.

The Inspectors as Governors.

8555. Do the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums attend the Board regularly?—They do not attend every monthly meeting.

8556. When present, do they vote and take part in the proceedings of the Board like the ordinary Governors?—Well, I think they do; they are referred to very frequently by the other members.

Their inspection of the Asylum.

8557. How frequently do they inspect the asylum?—There is no regular time.

8558. How many times a year?—I could not say.

8559. Do they visit twice in the year?—Yes.

8560. Are those visits paid at the time of the monthly meetings, or at other periods?—Sometimes at the period of the monthly meetings, and sometimes at intermediate periods.

8561. Without notice given to you?—I get no notice whatever.

No special regulations except as to paying patients. Issue of money from Privy Council.

8562. Are there any special regulations for the government of the asylum, except those of the Privy Council?—None, except that with regard to the admission of paying patients.

8563. Have you experienced any difficulty in obtaining the issue of money, and so on, from the Privy Council?—No difficulty, except that there is sometimes a delay, which has reduced the balance at the bank rather low. There is more regularity now than there used to be.

8564. Do you keep the morning statement book regularly?—Do you mean with respect to the health of the patients?

The Morning Statement Book.

8565. I mean what the Privy Council regulations require to be kept—the Morning Statement Book?—Yes; perhaps not to the full extent. [The Morning Statement Book is produced.]

8566. Do you enter regularly in this book, the number of cases under restraint?—Not regularly; it occurs so very seldom.

8567. I saw on some days the entry—"No restraint or seclusion on this day;" on other days there is no entry on the subject. Are we to understand that on the days for which there is no entry there was no case of restraint, or do you not enter the cases of restraint?—No; I may omit to do so; but we very seldom resort to restraint.

8568. Are you not aware that the Privy Council Regulations require such entries to be made?—I was not aware.

8569. Is a medical journal kept?—Not a regular medical journal.

8570. Is mechanical restraint at all used?—Rarely.

8571. By whom are the instruments of restraint kept?—We have but one instrument of restraint, and it is kept by one of the keepers.

8572. What is that?—The strait waistcoat; we have some straps that we very seldom resort to.

8573. By whom are they kept?—By the keepers.

8574. Are you not aware that the Privy Council Regulations require that they should be kept by you?—I was not aware of that; I never saw the regulation to that effect.

8575. Read section twenty-three of the regulations?—[Same is shown to witness, and is read by him.] I have read it: I have to observe that we have but one waistcoat for 388 patients.

8576. And the straps you spoke of?—Straps to put on the head merely. They are never used without my concurrence.

8577. Have you any padded rooms for the seclusion of patients?—No.

8578. Have you ever had any?—Never had one.

8579. Is there a proper supply of cold water laid on?—Sometimes we run short, and are obliged to wait for an hour or two until the tank is filled. We get it from water-works. There is an immense quantity of water used in the establishment, both for culinary purposes and for hot and cold baths.

8580. Are there regular bath days for the patients?—No regular bath days. The warm baths are given according to circumstances.

8581. How frequently do the patients get an ordinary washing-bath?—The first thing done when a patient is admitted is to put him into a tepid bath.

8582. Are we to understand that a patient never gets a bath except as a portion of the treatment of his case?—Yes.

8583. For the purpose of cleanliness is there no system of baths?—No, except a necessity arises with dirty patients, and they are put into baths; but otherwise the baths are not used except as a curative means.

8584. Are there lavatories attached to each of the corridors?—We are only now getting them put up; there were lavatories, but not regular ones. There are washing-places.

8585. Were they anything more than tubs?—Tubs, and rooms apart, and towels.

8586. Have arrangements been made to provide proper lavatories?—They are in progress; some are made, and there are many more to be made.

8587. Are there any water-closets in the establishment?—No regular water-closets for the patients; they are in progress also.

8588. Are there night-chairs in the apartments?—No.

8589. Are there any privies in the yards?—There are sheds, but not regular privies.

8590. Is there any improvement with regard to those matters, under consideration?—Yes.

8591. Have you ever, during the seven years you have been here, brought those matters under the consideration of the Board of Governors?—I have.

8592. Have you applied for night-chairs?—I have never applied for night-chairs, nor have I ever brought that under the notice of the Board of Governors. I thought you alluded to the water-closets.

8593. Do the patients dine in the regular day-rooms, or are there separate dining-rooms?—Sometimes in the day-rooms, and sometimes in the dining-rooms; generally speaking, they dine in the regular dining-room; they breakfast and sup in the day-rooms.

8594. Some of the dining-rooms appear to be mere temporary sheds?—Yes; they are used more in summer.

8595. Are they found efficient or suitable?—Yes.

8596. How are the corridors of the establishment heated?—They are not heated at all. 8597. Is not the asylum very cold and uncomfortable in winter, and during damp weather?—Yes, some portions are very cold.

8598. Are the corridors flagged or boarded?—Some are flagged and some are boarded; the ground ones are flagged.

8599. Do you consider a sufficient degree of warmth is very important in a curative hospital for the insane?—Very important.

8600. Have you ever brought under the notice of the Board of Governors the importance of providing for the better warming of those corridors?—I have.

8601. Are any measures in progress to secure that?—Not at present.

8602. Are the patients kept generally employed?—Those that are available for work are.

8603. Are you enabled to make up the clothing which you require for the inmates, in the establishment?—No; we are enabled to make up all the female clothing, but not all the male-clothing.

8604. It appears from the Morning Statement Book that on yesterday there were only

- LOANING.
 Robert Fitzgerald, Esq., M.D.
 Large proportion of females unemployed.
 Employment of the males.
- twenty-five female patients, out of 173, engaged in needlework; do you consider that represents the number of those who could be properly so employed?—There were others at other occupations. That was the number at needlework alone; others were cleaning up the house, and working in the laundry.
 8606. There were totally unemployed 168 out of 173; is that the ordinary proportion?—Yes; in or about that.
 8606. With regard to the men, have you a sufficient quantity of ground to occupy those who are fit for agricultural work?—Yes; we make occupation for them—picking weeds, and so on.
 8607. Is any tailoring done in the establishment?—There is only one tailor.
 8608. Is there any shoemaker?—No.
 8609. At what hour do the patients usually retire to rest?—From seven till half-past seven in summer, and earlier in winter.
 8610. At what hour do they rise?—About seven o'clock.
 8611. What indoor occupations have you for the men?—Assisting to clean the house at the male side, and whitewashing. There is not much occupation for the men inside.
 8612. On wet days how are the 206 male inmates of the house employed?—Playing cards, and some reading.
 8613. Have you any other amusement for them?—Playing the flute and the violin.
 8614. Do they frequent the corridors much?—They do.
 8615. Are there any seats or benches for them to sit down?—Not in the corridors; there are in the day-rooms.
 8616. Is there a school in the asylum?—No.
 8617. Was there a school here?—Not to my knowledge.
 8618. What is your opinion of the advantage, as a means of occupation, of having instruction given to those inmates who would be capable of benefiting by it?—I think it would be very desirable, but at the same time, I think very few would avail themselves of it. They get books from time to time, but it is impossible to keep them together; they knock them about and tear them. There is, generally speaking, the greatest disinclination on their part to study; there are, of course, a few exceptions.
 8619. My question did not refer, of course, to compulsory study, but to instruction as a means of occupation for those who would not object to it?—A few would avail themselves of it.
 8620. Have you at present any books for the use of the inmates?—Very few.
 8621. How many may there be?—I suppose about eight or ten.
 8622. What are the arrangements for religious worship in the institution?—There is a Protestant and a Roman Catholic chaplain.
 8623. Is there a chapel attached to the institution?—One of the large rooms is set apart for the Roman Catholic worship, and this board-room for the Protestant worship.
 8624. Is the large room you refer to used exclusively as a Roman Catholic place of worship?—Exclusively, there is no other use made of it.
 8625. Have chaplains been always attached to this institution?—Yes.
 8626. What is your opinion as to the advantage, or otherwise, of chaplains being attached to this institution?—I look upon it as a very great advantage.
 8627. Are the chaplains admitted to visit the patients during the week?—Whoever they like; they have free access at all times.
 8628. Have they free access to each of the patients without reference to the condition of the patient—that is, supposing a man to be in a state of excitement that religious topics might not be desirable for him at the time of the visit of the chaplain, would you feel it your duty to tell the chaplain so?—I would, and he would agree with me.
 8629. Are there many of various persuasions in the asylum?—Very few Protestants; they are mostly all Roman Catholics. The number of Protestants is comparatively few.
 8630. Have you found any sectarian disputes to arise amongst the inmates resulting from their attending the religious instruction of their respective clergymen?—None.
 8631. What classification are you enabled to maintain in the asylum?—We have two classes.
 8632. The orderly and disorderly?—The orderly and disorderly. I would find it difficult to separate the moderately tranquil from the tranquil, they vary so.
 8633. Have you any particular sleeping rooms for suicidal cases?—No.
 8634. Have you not recently had a case of suicide?—Yes, we had one recently.
 8635. Was that investigated by the Board?—There was a Coroner's inquest, and some of the Governors attended the inquest.
 8636. What was the result, as regards blame being attached to the attendants or otherwise?—The verdict of the Jury was, that blame attached to one of the nurses, an assistant nurse. She was dismissed.
 8637. Are the idiots kept in a separate class?—No.
 8638. Then any acute case received into the asylum, even if it was a violent case, would be placed in the same ward or department possibly with idiots or with chronic disorderly patients, where there would be perhaps eighty, on the male side?—A very violent case, newly admitted, we would put with the disorderly.
 8639. How many airing courts are there altogether in the asylum?—Seven.
 8640. Are they all in use?—Yes, they are all in use.
 8641. Do you think any arrangement could be made for the better appropriation of the airing courts, and for the more extended separation of the orderly convalescent?—So far as the airing courts are concerned, they would do very well as they are. The orderly and disorderly do not interfere with each other in that way. In summer we have two large fields into which we take them, the males and females. One field is on the north-west, and the other is to the south of the asylum.

8642. Has not the asylum been enlarged since it was first erected?—Yes, additions were built to it.

8643. Has the effect of that enlargement been to confine the airing courts?—I should say not; however, I cannot speak positively.

8644. Were the buildings erected on some of the airing courts?—I do not know; it might have been on other ground.

8645. Do you think the building would admit of any considerable extension at present?—I think the grounds would admit of it.

8646. I mean an extension attached to the present building?—I think it could be done.

8647. Are you satisfied with the class of attendants employed in the institution?—I am perfectly satisfied with them; they are very good.

8648. Do you find that the wages given are sufficient to secure the services of competent persons?—I find that if we have a vacancy for an attendant, we have applications innumerable. That would lead one to suppose they consider the remuneration sufficient.

8649. Are any means resorted to of testing the efficiency or fitness of the candidates?—Nothing more than reference to their previous character.

8650. Do they all read and write?—Generally speaking, they do. There may be one or two exceptions.

8651. Have you ever had occasion to put in force the recent Act for the superannuation of attendants?—In one instance.

8652. Has the Act been found adequate for its purposes?—It has been carried out in our case, and I believe the Governors considered it adequate; but the man receiving the allowance considered it very inadequate. The man was twenty years in the establishment, and had conducted himself in a very exemplary manner. His remuneration or compensation is about £15 a-year, which is very small after such long service.

8653. Has any complaint ever been made that all the officers and attendants of the establishment are not included in this Superannuation Act?—I am not aware that any ground for such complaint exists, because, I believe, all the officers are included.

8654. Is the clerk and accountant included?—I believe the Act says "all the officers," and the clerk is an officer.

8655. By whom are the attendants appointed—by you or by the Board of Governors?—Sometimes by the Board of Governors; generally by me.

8656. How is it in fact—by whom are the appointments made?—By me.

8657. By whom are the attendants dismissed?—I dismissed a man forthwith, whom I caught in the act of injuring a patient. I may have done so in other cases.

8658. Does the clerk and store-keeper reside on the premises?—No.

8659. Is there any order of the Board permitting him to reside elsewhere?—Yes, he got an addition to his salary in lieu of apartments and rations.

8660. Do you inspect all the provisions coming into the house to see that they are according to contract?—I do.

8661. Are the provisions and articles required for the house provided by contract?—Mostly all; all the staples are provided by contract.

8662. Are coals and candles supplied by contract?—Yes, they are supplied by contract.

8663. And the materials for clothing?—They are exceptions. We tried the contract system as to clothing, and found that it failed. We found that it produced a great deal of confusion. For instance, we had tenders for two or three different kinds of clothing, and we received samples on a particular Board day. The confusion became so great, that we could not know one article from another, and we found it much more advisable to purchase at a particular house, that we found dealt fairly by us. This arrangement saved a great deal of trouble, and it produced a beneficial result, inasmuch as we got a good article.

8664. Why should confusion arise here more than in any other institution?—We received patterns, for instance, of corduroy, and we selected one at one price, and another at a different price; but we found that we sometimes gave the large price for the bad article, and rejected the good article. We were not competent judges.

8665. Do you consider yourself responsible for any portion of the medical treatment of any section of the inmates?—This is a supposition of my own; but in the event of any accident occurring at night, I consider myself responsible for the proper treatment of that patient.

8666. But, under other circumstances, do you consider yourself responsible?—Certainly not. Where there is a visiting physician I would not conceive myself responsible for the duties that devolve upon the medical attendant.

8667. Do you consider yourself responsible for any part of the medical treatment of the sick as distinguished from the general inmates?—Nothing more than having been appointed resident medical attendant I would conceive that I was responsible to some extent. I was not appointed a resident physician; I was merely appointed "manager." That is the word in the appointment. At the same time, knowing I would not have been appointed if I was not a medical man, I conceived it my duty to act as such when necessary.

8668. There is no distinct line of division with respect to the medical duties to be discharged by you and the visiting physician?—There is no strict line of demarcation.

8669. Have you an infirmary here?—No.

8670. Do you consider the associated dormitories proper places for treating the sick?—

| LOMBARD.                                               | We have had so little sickness, that we have never found any grievance to arise from not having an infirmary; but, generally, I think it would be a great deal better to have a separate place for the sick. I think it would insure better attendance upon them, than to have them in the ordinary dormitories.                                                                                                                           |

| Robert Fitzgibbon, Esq., M.D.                          | 8671. How is the visiting physician, when he comes here, informed of such of the sick as require his attendance?—Generally speaking, the attendants and myself tell him of the case or cases that require his attention.                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |
| Cases of sickness; how reported to Visiting Physician. | 8672. Is there any book kept in which entries are made to direct his attention to such cases?—The matron gives a morning statement in her book of the sick at the female side of the house.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |

Do you think a dormitory, having ten or eleven patients in it, is a proper place for such a case so affected to remain in—proper either as regards the other patients or the patient herself who is suffering?—I think it is a most unsuitable place for her.                                                                                                                                                                        |

| Treatment of that patient; no record respecting her.   | 8680. Is that woman under medical treatment at present?—Yes; she is under medical treatment so far as her diet. Lately I made a regulation forbidding it, in consequence of the inefficiency of the attendance.                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |

Do you consider the nurse, when the assistant is employed at other duties, is capable, alone, of taking charge of thirty-five patients in addition to a patient confined to bed for three weeks, in the condition in which I saw the woman whose case I have mentioned?—Certainly not.                                                                                                                                               |
| Desirability of an infirmary.                          | 8689. Then, in short, you consider an infirmary with a nurse, or two nurses, as the case may be, would be necessary in a large institution of this kind?—I think it would be very desirable; at the same time, we have had so little sickness here, that the nurses who would be appropriated, or set apart, for that particular duty would be very idle for a great part of the year, if they were not made available for other purposes. |
| Guarantee against use of unauthorised restraints.      | 8690. Would not the infirmary be a suitable place for them to take charge of?—Yes.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                         |
|                                                               | 8691. What guarantee have you that the attendants may not make use of restraints, without your knowing of it, when they have the instruments in their charge?—The dread of the consequences, as well as good feeling, would guard against their resorting to such means without authority from the medical attendant.                                                                                                                      |
| David O'Callaghan, Esq., M.D.                          | David O'Callaghan, Esq., M.D., sworn and examined.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| The Visiting Physician; his visits to the Asylum.      | 8692. What office do you hold in connexion with this asylum?—Visiting physician.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
|                                                               | 8693. How long have you held that office?—Thirty years.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
|                                                               | 8694. Has that been since the opening of the institution?—Yes, since the opening of the institution.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
| His idea of his duties and responsibilities.           | 8695. How frequently do you attend the asylum?—Generally every day.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|                                                               | 8696. The manager of this institution being a member of the medical profession, how far do you consider that he has any charge of the treatment of insanity in the asylum?—I conceive him to have charge equally as much as I have.                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
|                                                               | 8697. Do you consider that the responsibility of treating insanity in the house rests with him equally with you?—I do.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
|                                                               | 8698. Is that in consequence of any particular instructions which were issued on his appointment?—No; I got no particular instruction, but I did in the time of the former manager, that I was to consider him as a consulting physician, that we should consult in all cases in which we thought it proper.                                                                                                                               |
| The special charge of the sick.                        | 8699. Am I to understand that you consider your position as that of a consulting physician?—Principally; both an acting and consulting physician.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |
|                                                               | 8700. Who has charge specially of the sick?—I should say that the charge of the sick lies with the manager and with the nurse-attendants.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
|                                                               | 8701. As the law does not require the manager, of necessity, to be a medical man, surely it does not contemplate the charge of the sick resting with him?—Certainly not before medical men had been appointed; but, I suppose, since medical men have been appointed, they are considered as assistants to the visiting physicians.                                                                                                        |

8702. Am I to understand, generally, that you regard your position in reference to this establishment as a physician visiting almost daily for the purpose of seeing that the treatment pursued by the manager is correct?—Not by any means, for the treatment is by myself as well as by the manager; we consult respecting it.

8703. Supposing a difference to arise with regard to the treatment of an insane case, with whom would the responsibility rest of determining that treatment?—I should say with me.

8704. I presume it is your opinion that a professional person should be at the head of the establishment?—Certainly.

8705. Supposing the law to require, what is now in practice usually done—namely, that the head of the institution should be a medical man, do you consider the sole responsibility of treating all cases in the house should rest with him?—Not the sole responsibility; a responsibility conjointly with the visiting physician.

8706. It has been stated there is no infirmary in this institution?—There is not.

8707. Do you consider that a deficiency?—Certainly. An infirmary would be very desirable, and has been often spoken of. I think the Inspectors have reported about it on different occasions.

8708. Has the matter been under the consideration of the Board of Governors?—I rather think it has.

8709. Has there ever been an infirmary here?—Never, except during the time of the cholera, when we cleared out a couple of wards, and used them as such. In fact, the number of sick cases is very small. Except during the cholera, we had very few infectious cases of disease.

8710. It has been stated that there are not sufficient means of warming the establishment, do you concur in that opinion?—I think we are rather deficient in that respect.

8711. Is not warmth important in a curative hospital for the insane?—Good air and warmth are certainly useful.

8712. Do not insane patients particularly require warmth?—I think they are rather chilly in general.

8713. What is your opinion of the ventilation—is it good?—Indeed, I think, it is in general very good.

8714. Are there any artificial means of ventilation, such as extracting shafts?—No, there are not, except windows at the ends of the corridors, and windows along the corridors; but, on the whole, the ventilation is very good.

8715. Are you satisfied with the amount of clothing provided for the inmates?—I think it is quite sufficient.

8716. What is your opinion about the bedding?—I think the bedding very good in general.

8717. What beds are generally in use, straw or cocoa-fibre?—Both.

8718. Which do you consider the best?—Why, straw is more suitable for dirty patients.

8719. In the district, generally, do not the poorer classes use straw beds?—Almost exclusively.

8720. What is your opinion as to the importance of having chaplains attached to this institution?—I think the probability is, that they tend to soothe the minds of the patients in some measure.

8721. Have you at all found that an injurious effect has, in any case, been caused by the attendance of chaplains?—No; we have seen no injurious effect from it in this house.

8722. Have there been chaplains attached to this institution for the thirty years that you have been medical attendant?—No, nor for half the time.

8723. Do the manager and you together see all the inmates?—Sometimes we do; not always.

8724. How would you propose to carry on a conjoint treatment if you do not together see the same patients?—When we see any particular case we speak to each other and consult upon it, and then go to the patient if there is any necessity.

8725. But, ordinarily, you do not go together?—Not in general.

8726. Then, if the treatment were to be what is called a conjoint treatment, how would you carry it out, where the manager would see a patient one day, and you would see him the next day, and not see him together?—When a system of treatment is laid down it is carried on, except when an alteration is necessary.

8727. Do you keep any book to record wine or diet for the sick?—No; whenever there is necessity for those things they are ordered, and the manager provides them.

8728. How is the order given?—Verbally, or entered in the Apothecary's Book.

8729. Is the wine or the sick diet entered in the Apothecary's Book?—It generally is.

8730. Is it always entered?—Not always, I believe.

8731. Referring to the conjoint treatment which you suggest, suppose you had not the Manager with you, how would you ascertain the treatment which had been given in the way of wine, extra diet, or other matters?—By inquiry from the nurses; that is the only means; but I have always an opportunity of seeing the Manager every day. I meet him every day of my life.

8732. Still, to obtain full knowledge of the treatment ordered by him the day before, you have only the information given by the nurse?—I would have the information from himself.

8733. But, suppose you did not go round together?—When I would meet him he would tell me.

William Henry Gabbett, Esq., sworn and examined.

- Limerick.
Limerick District Asylum.
W. H. Gabbett, Esq. 8734. How long have you been a Governor of this institution?—I believe since the year 1833.
 8735. Have you been a tolerably constant attendant at the meetings of the Board?—Yes, particularly of late.
 8736. It has been stated that the asylum is at present full?—Yes.
 8737. Do you consider it is adequate for the wants of the district?—I would say so; we are generally very full, but sometimes we have room to spare. We lately were relieved of the Kerry patients, which gave us a great deal of accommodation.
 8738. Did the asylum fill rapidly after the Kerry patients were removed?—Yes.
 8739. Would not that rather indicate that there was a number of cases outside wanting accommodation?—Yes; but there are not a great many applications.
Location in Limerick workhouse. 8740. By a return the Commissioners have received, it appears that there were, on the 1st of January last, twenty-five lunatics in the workhouse of Limerick?—I do not know how they stand at the workhouse.
Objection to committing lunatics to gaol. 8741. What is your opinion as to the propriety of committing lunatics to gaol?—I am decidedly against it. I have been one of the Board of Superintendence of the county gaol for nearly thirty years, and I have found great inconvenience to arise from the system of committing to gaol.
 8742. If the law was to be altered in that respect, would it not be necessary to provide additional accommodation here?—I should imagine so.
Transmission to asylum. 8743. Do you find any difficulty in getting the lunatics from the gaol received into the asylum?—Not on the part of Dr. Fitzgerald, whom he has room. We must get an order from the Lord Lieutenant for the transmission of a patient.
 8744. Have lunatics, generally, been long detained in gaol before their removal?—Not very long.
Location in gaol and workhouse. 8745. Are lunatics kept separate from the other prisoners in gaol?—They are, sometimes, when they are very violent, but not otherwise.
 8746. What is your opinion of workhouses as places for the detention of lunatics?—I would say that they are not proper places. I am not a Guardian of the poor, and I have not been, and I do not know much about the workhouse.
Relative attendance of Governors from Limerick and Clare. 8747. Do you find the attendance of the Governors at the Board to be pretty equal from the counties of Clare and Limerick?—I would say it is not so. Very few from Clare attend.
 8748. What proportion of the Governors on the Board belong to the county Clare?—I could not tell that exactly. There are not so many as from the county Limerick. Whatever the number is, they do not attend; nor did the Kerry gentlemen when that county was connected with this district.
Propriety of receiving paying patients. 8749. Kerry, however, was far more remote?—Yes.
 8750. What is your opinion as to the propriety of receiving paying patients into this institution?—I have always advocated it, because I thought there were a number of patients not able to pay in a private asylum, and that it would be hard to exclude them; and, under the direction of Dr. Nugent, we took them in at the actual cost of patients in the asylum, for about £20 a-year.
The charge fixed. 8751. Your charge is fixed, is it not?—Yes, it is about the average cost of the maintenance of a pauper patient.
 8752. There is no varying scale according to the circumstances of the individuals?—No; we do not take them in unless it is proved to us that they are not able to pay in a private asylum.
 8753. Do you think the present plan of charging a fixed sum—namely, the actual cost of maintenance, is preferable to charging a varying sum?—I think so.
 8754. In point of fact, then, any person not able to pay that fixed sum is received as a pauper?—Yes, received as a pauper.
Appointment of Governors. 8755. The Board of Governors are at present, I believe, appointed directly by the Government?—Yes. We have heretofore notified to the Lord Lieutenant when we wished to have a Governor appointed, and it has been generally sanctioned.
 8756. Are you in favour of giving this Board more of a representative character, by the appointment of a certain number of members from each Grand Jury?—That never occurred to me. I think it would be well to displace Governors who have not attended a certain number of times in the year. We have many who scarcely ever come at all.
 8757. I believe a Governor, once appointed, remains on the list for life, whether he attends or not?—Yes.
Propriety of the Inspectors being Governors. 8758. What is your opinion as to the propriety, or otherwise, of the Inspectors of Asylums being members of each Board?—I think it advisable. Whenever they do attend, they sit here as members, and often give us very good hints.
 8759. Do they vote at the Board?—Well, I do not know that on any occasion, when they attended, there was a division.
 8760. As a general principle, do you consider they should belong to the Board, with the same power as ordinary members, or should merely attend as the Poor Law Inspectors do at Boards of Guardians?—Well, I do not see any disadvantage in their attending as Governors.
Appointment of superior officers. 8761. With regard to the superior officers of the asylum, the manager and physician and storekeeper, do you consider these officers should be appointed, as heretofore, by the Executive Government, or by the Board of Governors?—Well, I see no particular disadvantage in their being appointed by the Local Lieutenant.

8762. Have you found any delay or difficulty to arise from the control exercised by the Privy Council over the expenditure?—No, indeed; except in one or two instances in which circumstances, perhaps, occurred two or three years back that caused rather a little annoyance for the time, I do not see any inconvenience from the system.

8763. I believe that at present, when any enlargement of the asylum takes place, or any new building is erected, the works are done by the Central Board in Dublin; are you favourable to that system, or would you prefer it should be left to the Local Board?—We generally did a great deal by contract here ourselves; I think we ought to be better judges of what was to be done at this asylum than others.

8764. Supposing that the Local Board refused to provide additional accommodation when required, do you consider it proper the Executive Government should have the power of causing the work to be done?—I think if the Local Board refused, the Executive Government should certainly have that power.

8765. From a return we have received, it appears that there were 206 probably incurable cases in the asylum on the first of January last out of 235 inmates; have the Board ever considered, with the view of affording additional accommodation, what arrangement could be made with respect to those incurable cases?—It was reported to us at one time that it was contemplated to build an asylum for incurables: that would be a great relief to us.

8766. Would you prefer that there should be a central asylum for the reception of incurables, rather than that there should be erected additional buildings on these premises?—I would.

8767. When you speak of its being a great relief to the district to have a central asylum for the incurable cases, do you mean that the central asylum should be maintained out of the public funds and not out of the local rate?—I would say so.

8768. Would not that probably lead to an unfair removal of patients to the incurable institution with the view of relieving the local rate?—I think the cases should be particularly examined and reported upon, as to whether they were incurable or not. I consider any difficulty on that head could be fully provided for.

8769. What is your opinion as to the propriety, or otherwise, of chaplains being attached to this institution?—Well, I understood by the evidence of Dr. O'Callaghan, and many others, that they have not been productive of any evil, and I do not see why they should not be continued. Whether they were productive of any good or not I really cannot tell.

8770. Do the Governors visit the whole of the institution at their monthly meetings?—No, not every month.

8771. Are any of the Governors appointed as a committee for that purpose?—No. We generally go through the accounts, particularly for the previous month, and see that the bills are all receipted properly, and entered, and then we pass the bills to be paid, and see that there is no overcharge.

Thomas Kane, Esq., M.D., J.P., Mayor of Limerick, sworn and examined.

8772. I believe you are Mayor of the city of Limerick?—Yes.

8773. Is there any representation you would wish, on the part of the Town Council of Limerick, to bring before the Commissioners?—Yes, there are two subjects which I wish to bring before the Commissioners. I will read this document, with your permission:—

"At a Special Meeting of the Town Council of Limerick, held at the Town Hall on Thursday, the 19th day of March, 1867, the Right Worshipful Thomas Kane, M.D., Mayor, in the chair, the following resolution was proposed by T. C. Sheehy, seconded by Alderman Quinlivan, and unanimously carried:—Resolved—That the Government be called upon to change the law regarding the support of Lunatic Asylums in Ireland, as in justice such support should be charged in the same way as Poor Law rating, namely, part on the landlord, and part on the occupier, and as it is at present, under the Grand Jury laws, wholly on the occupiers of houses and land; and that the following document submit this resolution to the Commissioners."

8774. Did the Town Council consider that the proposition which they have made would alter the incidence of taxation in the cases of existing leases and lettings, which were all made on the understanding that the tenant should pay the Grand Jury rate?—Yes; I think they considered that. The Corporation regarded it as very hard that the rate-payers should be obliged to pay the entire amount. They thought the landlords should pay their proportion as well as the occupiers.

8775. Did you understand the Town Council to be favourable to the chargeability of the lunatic poor being likewise fixed according to the Poor Law, namely, upon electoral divisions?—I do not think it was taken into consideration, but I should think it would be a fair principle.

8776. Has the question of giving a more representative character to the Boards of Governors of lunatic asylums been under the consideration of the Town Council?—That is the other question to which I was directed to draw your attention. The Corporation object to the present mode of appointing the Governors, inasmuch as the rate-payers have no control over them. They consider that one-fourth of the Governors should be appointed by the Government; one-fourth by the county of Clare Grand Jury; one-fourth by the county Limerick Grand Jury; and one-fourth by the Corporation of the city of Limerick, who represent the City Grand Jury at present. I consider that would be a fair mode of regulating the appointment of Governors, and the Corporation are of opinion that it is very essential to bring that under your notice.

| LUNATICS. Limerick District Asylum. Thomas Esda, Esq., M.D., F.R.C.S. | 8777. Is it your opinion that the present asylum is large enough for the requirements of the district?—I have personal knowledge that there is very great inconvenience in getting admission for urgent cases of lunacy into the asylum, and that inconvenience has existed for some months.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |
| Inefficient asylum accommodation. The provision of additional accommodation.                                | 8778. Have you ever considered in what way additional accommodation could be best provided; whether by establishing a new asylum in the county Clare, or by enlarging the building here?—I think it would be better worth considering whether it would not be more advisable to remove the incurables from this institution, and establish a separate one for them.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |
| Asylum for incurables.                                                                                           | 8779. How would you propose that that separate asylum should be supported?—That is a matter the Corporation have not at all taken into consideration, and I can only give my own opinion upon it as an individual. I think the fairest mode of supporting it would be by a rate on the principle of the poor rate.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| Appointment of superior officers.                                                                                | 8780. With regard to the appointment of the superior officers of this establishment, do you consider that might be left, as at present, in the hands of the Executive Government, or transferred to the Board of Governors?—I think it is as well, probably, to leave it as it is at present.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| Control as to buildings.                                                                                         | 8781. Do you consider that the arrangement under which the control of building asylums, and the additions made to asylums, is committed to the Board of Works should be continued?—I would say so; the same is the case with reference to almost every public establishment.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                      |

What appointment do you hold?—I am surgeon to the county Clare infirmary and gaol. 8788. Have you many lunatics confined in Kinsale gaol?—We have had a good many. 8789. Are they treated separately, or are there any means of separate classification for them?—There are no means whatever of separate treatment. 8790. What is your opinion, as a professional person, of the effect upon a lunatic, an acute case, of being detained in a gaol?—It is decidedly injurious. 8791. Do you consider it materially impedes recovery?—Yes; it materially impedes recovery.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

Who are the usual attendants upon them in gaol?—The ordinary officers of the gaol. 8793. Is it usual to employ prisoners to take charge of them?—It does sometimes happen, particularly in very troublesome cases, when it is necessary to stay up at night with them. Occasionally we remove very troublesome cases into the infirmary of the gaol; but that has been found extremely unpleasant, because of the noise, to the rest of the patients. Altogether it is very uncomfortable in every way. 8794. When prisoners are employed to take charge of the lunatics, is it generally the best conducted prisoners that are selected?—Yes; the steadiest.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |

Have you reason to believe those prisoners treat the lunatic well?—They do. 8796. How long have you known a lunatic case to be detained in gaol?—I have brought some returns with me on the subject, and I have marked particularly six cases who have been detained in gaol for a very long time; one was admitted 5th May, 1856, and discharged on medical certificate—that is, as having been brought to a state of quiescence, or as being no longer a dangerous lunatic—on the 12th August. 8797. What was the longest detention in gaol?—A person admitted on the 23rd August, 1856, and still in custody. 8798. Has any application been made for the removal of that lunatic?—Well, I cannot be certain about that; but I rather think there has been an application. 8799. Generally speaking, does difficulty arise in getting lunatics removed from the gaol to this asylum?—There is delay. |
| Period at which applications are made to remove.                                                                 | 8800. Is there more than the ordinary delay, occasioned by referring to the authorities in Dublin for the usual order?—There often is. I should think it depends upon the number in this asylum. 8801. I presume applications are made for the removal of lunatics from the gaol immediately after their reception there?—Not immediately after their reception, because people are very often brought into the gaol upon an information made by their friends that they are dangerous lunatics, but when they come in there appears to be no violence. That is a very common thing; and the medical attendant of the gaol takes time to consider whether it would be desirable to forward an application to the asylum or not.                                                                                                                                                                                              |

3802. Surely no case can be received without a medical certificate?—There is always a medical certificate; but then a person is not always in a state of excitement.

3803. When application is made to the Government for the removal of a lunatic from the gaol to the asylum, what is the usual period that elapses before the order goes down for the removal?—I could not say exactly; it varies a good deal. I have here a return of the date of commitments of several lunatics who have been in gaol since the 11th August, 1855, with the date of their discharges, or of their being transferred to this asylum. They cannot be sent from the gaol to the asylum without an order from the Lord Lieutenant.

3804. Do you know whether the warrant is usually sent down without referring to the asylum, or whether the warrant is withheld in Dublin till it is known whether there is a vacancy?—I cannot tell that.

3805. Do you consider that the present asylum is adequate for the wants of the district, so far as you are acquainted with it?—I do not.

3806. Is it your opinion that there is a considerable amount of lunacy which is unprovided for in any asylum?—I have reason to know it.

3807. Are you enabled to state whether there exists any difficulty in getting patients from the county Clare into this asylum?—I could not say there is. I cannot draw comparisons, not knowing the time the other applications are under consideration.

3808. Have you been professionally called upon to certify for lunacy?—Yes, very frequently.

3809. Have you found the asylum to be full on many of the occasions on which you interested yourself to get persons admitted?—Very often.

3810. It has been stated that there is not a very good attendance of Governors from the county Clare at this Board; can you explain that?—I cannot. I do not know any thing about the arrangements of the asylum.

3811. What is your opinion of the propriety of receiving paying patients into this institution; I mean a class of patients whose relatives would be unable to pay for them in a private asylum?—I think by the admission of such a class this institution could be made very useful.

3812. Are you in favour of a fixed charge, or a varying charge?—I think a fixed charge would be more easily managed.

3813. Is there any danger of paying patients, after being received and paid for during some time, being left a charge upon the asylum?—I have no doubt about that.

3814. What is your opinion, as a medical man, of the propriety of removing supposed incurable lunatics from the present asylum to another establishment?—I think it would be very valuable for those who remained in the asylum.

3815. As it is difficult to determine what is absolutely an incurable case of lunacy, do you think there is any risk or danger of injury occurring to the cases that would be removed?—Of course there might be, as the line cannot be drawn very distinctly.

3816. If such patients know they were sent to an institution of a condemned character, it probably would have a serious effect upon them?—If they were able to reason at all it ought.

3817. On the whole, are you favourable or otherwise to the establishment of a separate institution, or to the enlargement of the existing asylum for such cases?—I cannot say. I dare say the same object could be gained by having a department in the one institution where the incurables could be kept from association with the curables.

3818. What would be the advantage to the other inmates of the removal of the incurables?—Quietness would be one advantage, and the not seeing other people in a state of excitement, which is very apt to excite a lunatic partially recovered, and to throw him back. When the reason of a lunatic returns he is distressed at seeing bad cases of the disease about him.

3819. Incurable lunatics are not necessarily the most riotous lunatics?—Not always; but they are often wretched objects.

3820. Supposing a necessity to arise for further lunatic accommodation in this district, do you think the feeling of the ratepayers of the county of Clare would be in favour of having a separate asylum for that county?—I could not say what the feeling of the ratepayers, or of the majority of them, would be; but several influential parties are anxious to have a separate asylum for the county of Clare.

3821. Are you in favour of the repeal of the act which enables dangerous lunatics to be committed direct to gaol?—If there were any other way of keeping them safe it is very objectionable to send them to gaol.

3822. Would you consider it better to commit them at once to an asylum?—Certainly. From what I can collect from my connexion with the gaol, I believe the law is very often strained in committing a person as a dangerous lunatic who may not be a dangerous lunatic. The friends are often very anxious to get them off their hands.

3823. Do you mean that they desire to get them off their hands because they are troublesome?—Yes. I do not mean to say that magistrates or medical men have any thing to do with it, but I observe that amongst the country people, in many instances, the friends of patients would be desirous to get them off their hands, and would say that they were more dangerous than they really were in order to accomplish that object.

3824. I believe that in certifying for lunatics the medical man has often only a moment's inspection of the alleged lunatic?—Yes.

3825. Have you known the law to be abused in other respects, for social reasons, from a desire to get rid of a member of a family who had an interest in a farm or such like?—I have never known it.

8825. You say that, when a lunatic is committed to gaol, some time necessarily elapses before the medical officer can make up his mind as to whether the case is violent enough for transmission to the asylum?—Yes, frequently. There is usually a delay of nine or ten days; we are never furnished with any information respecting the case. The only information that comes before us is about an assault or a threat to assault.

8827. If at the end of that time you are of opinion a man is not a dangerous lunatic, what becomes of him?—He is generally discharged on a medical certificate as not being dangerous.

8828. If his friends are not there to receive him, when discharged, what may become of him?—The friends are sent for, and are there to receive him.

8829. Supposing that they do not come, is he kept in gaol?—My impression is that the friends are almost anxious to come, in such a case.

8830. If the friends abuse the law to get a man sent to gaol, are they willing to come and bring him back?—Yes; I have known many instances of persons anxious to get a patient committed to gaol, perhaps under a momentary panic, and then in three or four weeks coming to ask for them, finding they were quiet.

8831. Has any instance ever come within your knowledge where the friends have not come back for a patient, the medical man having certified that the case was not dangerous?—I have not known any instance of that kind. The certificate is forwarded to the committing magistrate, who resides generally in the neighbourhood of the friends of the lunatic, and a communication is made to them through the magistrate or the police.

8832. The law provides for the case of a dangerous lunatic who may be at large, but there is no provision by which idiots or other lunatics, who may be wandering about the country, should be taken care of or committed to an asylum?—Every case that is brought into the gaol must be alleged to be a dangerous lunatic; there must be an information. There is not any provision made for idiots wandering about the country.

8833. Is it not a fact that if such cases are not received on the ordinary applications to the asylum they are left to their friends or to wander about the country?—Yes.

8834. The returns which the Commissioners have received would give the impression that there is a considerable number of that class of cases wandering about the county Clare?—I am under the impression there are, from communications I have had with medical men.

8835. Do you think these unfortunate creatures are generally well treated?—As a general rule I think they are kindly treated by their friends; there are exceptions. Their personal comforts are a good deal neglected, I believe, but it is not from any unkind feeling.

8836. From a return which the Commissioners have received, it appears that while there are only two dangerous lunatics at large there are 109 harmless lunatics in the county of Clare; do you consider that to be a fair statement of the case?—I should think it likely to be a fair statement of the case. That includes idiots of course. I wish to say, most particularly, that I would be sorry to convey that there was the least blame attachable to any of the officials of the lunatic asylum about the delay of getting patients admitted here. It is merely a difficulty arising from the want of room.

Patrick Mansell Cullinan, Esq., M.D., sworn and examined.

8837. Do you hold any official appointment in the county Clare?—I am physician to the county gaol and to the Exams Union Workhouse.

8838. From your experience, as a medical officer of that workhouse, how far do you consider it a suitable place for the detention of lunatics?—I think there is no organisation in the workhouse suitable for their proper care and treatment. There are no proper arrangements for them.

8839. Who is it that generally has charge of the lunatics in the workhouse?—Porters have the immediate charge, and then there is a porter or some paid officer who has a very extensive and wide control, but not immediately over those people. The functions of this paid officer are not confined to the care of lunatics.

8840. Could such a paid officer as a porter really exercise any practical daily surveillance over the lunatics?—His care of them is only incidental, and very slight indeed.

8841. Is the class of paupers in charge of the lunatics such as ought to be put in charge of them?—I should say not; they are, generally speaking, infirm. They are intelligent, quiet men, but not persons likely to be efficient as keepers of lunatics.

8842. Do you endeavour to get the lunatics removed from the workhouse to the asylum?—That has occurred only in one case.

8843. Has the fact of your having sent only one case arisen from any difficulty in obtaining admission to the asylum?—I should say not. The class of lunatic in the workhouse are generally persons not curable. They are not cases of acute mania or insanity, they are, generally speaking, idiots and persons of weak minds.

8844. Has any application been made by the Governor of the gaol for the removal to the asylum of the lunatic who, we understand, has been there twelve months?—There has.

8845. Can you account for the delay in that case?—I think there is a preference given, and perhaps the circumstances of the person having been sent from the workhouse to the gaol may have influenced the Governor here.

8846. Do you suppose the case to which you refer to be a curable case?—No. I think she cannot recover. I think it is one of the existing abuses to send away the troublesome lunatics, and this unfortunate woman was very troublesome. They wished to get rid of her at the workhouse, and they sent her to the gaol for the purpose of having her transmitted to the asylum. She has remained in the gaol ever since.

8847. To whom do you refer as having got rid of her?—The officers of the workhouse, the master more particularly, the guardians, of course, aiding and assisting.

8848. Do you consider the asylum here is inadequate for the wants of the district?—Yes; I think that is evident.

8849. From your knowledge of the county of Clare, is it your opinion that there is any large amount of insanity in it unprovided for?—I am quite aware there is. I am aware that applications were made for admission here, and for a long time were not complied with, by reason of there being no vacancies. Some have been pending for a year and have not been attended to. I know a case in which for more than a year, probably for two years, an application was pending, and probably is still not complied with; parties applied to me with a view to taking a short cut to get patients admitted into the asylum—that was, to send the case to the gaol; they asked, would it not be a good way to get a patient into the gaol by converting him or her into a dangerous lunatic; I said I would give no advice about that. That course is frequently resorted to.

8850. From your knowledge of the county of Clare, do you think insanity has been on the increase there of late years?—I could not say that.

8851. What is your own opinion as to the advisability of a separate institution being established for incurable cases?—I think it would be desirable. Those that are curable would receive, I think, more direct and concentrated attention from the medical attendants of a curative hospital. The attention of the officers is now distracted by having a crowd of other cases to look after. It would then have more also of the character of a curative hospital.

8852. You would desire to have this asylum simply as a curative hospital for the insane?—Yes, only for curable cases. Of course, there should be another institution for those who are incurable. One disadvantage in a workhouse, in reference to lunatics, is, that you cannot seclude them. There is no classification, and they have access to dangerous weapons, stone hammers, and the like, and can use them. There is an inmate of the workhouse in Kents who is in the habit of converting every thing he can catch, into a knife, if it is possible at all to do it, and he uses them to inflict injury.

8853. Is he a homicidal case?—He would do mischief. In workhouses and gaols, in order to prevent injury being done, there being no adequate staff or appliances for the purpose, they resort to the strait waistcoat, which would not be justifiable, except to save trouble, and that it might be dangerous to leave a party unchecked.

8854. Are the instruments of restraint left in charge of the pauper attendants?—I should say not; there must be some paid officer or nurse to take charge of them.

8855. Are you quite distinct as to that fact?—I am pretty sure of it; they may use restraint of that kind without direct authority, but very rarely.

8856. Have you often found lunatic inmates of workhouses, on the occasions of your visits, under mechanical restraint?—Frequently. The poor woman, to whom case I referred as being in gaol, for instance: she was constantly in the strait-waistcoat. They do the same thing in the gaol; they put them into the strait-waistcoat when such things might be dispensed with under other circumstances, and they put them under the care of prisoners who do not make very sensible keepers.

8857. What is your opinion as to the propriety or otherwise of paying patients being received into this institution?—I think it would be very desirable; there are a great many persons who could afford to pay for their support. That class of persons now admissible to fever hospitals, who are poor, but are not paupers, some provision, I think, should be made for them.

8858. Is there any chance or danger of the privilege being abused if patients were admitted merely for the cost of their maintenance—do you think the admission of parties would be obtained although their friends could pay for them in a private asylum?—I do not think that would be an abuse, if they paid the cost of their maintenance.

8859. Would not such persons be enjoying the benefit of an institution erected for paupers while the paupers were excluded?—I would not adopt any arrangement under which a pauper would be excluded for the sake of providing for a person who could pay.

8860. You have stated, as one of the advantages which would result from having a separate establishment for incurables, that the manager of a curative hospital would give more time and attention to the treatment of the inmates?—Yes.

8861. Would it not be a greater tax on his time and attention to have him attending a similar number of curable and recent cases, than if they were a mixed class?—Supposing you separate the two classes of lunatics, and that you have the same number of absolutely curable patients in the asylum that you had before of both classes, greater attention would, no doubt, be required on his part; but his attention would be less distracted when he would have to employ solely a curative treatment, and, I think, he would be able to give a more undivided attention than is likely to be given now when different classes of patients are mixed up in the same asylum.

8862. Is there any thing connected with the county of Clare you would wish to bring under the notice of the Commissioners?—I think the interests of the county of Clare are not attended to in this asylum; they are neglected. Nobody knows, for instance, whether the county of Clare has in this asylum the number of inmates to which it is entitled, or whether the places that should be reserved for Clare are given to others. Esq., M.P.

The Clare Governors.

spoke to was aware of that, and, I think, it ought to be known to some persons interested. I presume the manager could exercise some discretion in the matter.

8863. Do the county of Clare Governors attend?—I should say not. I have spoken to Lord Inchiquin, Colonel Vandeleur, and several other gentlemen, and they said they knew nothing at all about the matter; and, at the last assizes but one of the county, I got the Grand Jury to pass a resolution that the Governors of the asylum should be requested to furnish returns of the number of places occupied by lunatics from the county of Clare.

8864. Are you aware how many persons belonging to the county of Clare are Governors of the asylum?—I see by a reference to the list of Governors that there are four from the county of Clare.

8865. It appears that two of those four never attend?—I never knew that any Governors attended from the county of Clare. The people of that county know no more about this asylum generally than they do about Hanwell. I will mention a case which, I think, shows that the interest of the county Clare is neglected. Some time ago there was a woman sent from the workhouse to the asylum; she had been in Clare only two or three days by her own account, and by the account of the police, and yet she was charged upon the county of Clare, although she was certainly not from that county.

8866. Was she not transmitted from the county of Clare?—Yes.

8867. Are you aware whether any statement was sent with her showing that she had been only a few days in that county?—Yes.

8868. I believe it is usual to charge a pauper upon the county in which the workhouse is situate on which she was chargeable at the time of her removal?—Yes. What I say is, that if the interests of the county Clare were properly looked after, that woman would not be charged upon that county.

Rev. B. Jacob.

The Rev. Benjamin Jacob, sworn and examined.

8869. How long have you held the office of chaplain to this asylum?—I think since the year 1844.

8870. Were you one of the first chaplains?—Yes.

8871. What proportion of the Protestant inmates of this asylum usually attend your service?—As far as I can learn I think about one-third. I think the Protestant inmates average about thirty-six, so far as I have been able to learn, and the attendance has been probably about twelve, sometimes it has been more and sometimes less.

8872. Do you find that they are usually orderly when attending service?—Particularly so; at the same time it is necessary to observe that it is only those that are likely to be orderly who are allowed in. They are peculiarly orderly during their attendance.

8873. Are you allowed free access to the patients of your persuasion in the asylum?—There is every facility given to me to see them, but the usual course is to attend on Sundays, and a week day, and when there is any special case, I come to it. I did, at the time of my first appointment, propose to the then Governor that I should visit occasionally, go through the place, and see the inmates; and he was then of opinion that it would unsettle their minds, and that it was necessary to have some special time appointed for seeing them. Mr. Jackson was then Governor, and I then appointed one day in the week as well as Sunday for coming, and when there is any special case I see it. There is never the slightest obstruction given.

8874. Have the inmates of your persuasion ever expressed their satisfaction to you at having you to communicate with for spiritual consolation?—Yes; on my first appointment there was a Scotchman here, and when I mentioned that I was to come on Sundays, she said—"Oh! I am glad to hear it, that is the day we love in Scotland." Another patient said, "We were so long left without any one to ask us whether we had a soul or not, that it seemed the Almighty had forgotten us altogether." About a month since, a Mrs. Hanley, a patient, was dying, and thinking she was not likely again to see me, she said—"I wish, Mr. Jacob, before you go, to thank you, not only for your attention to me during this my illness, but also for your attention to me during many years." She seemed to feel very much, thinking she was not likely to see me again.

8875. Are you provided with such books as you may require for the religious instruction of those of your persuasion?—Yes; that is so far as prayer books and Bibles. They have books here to read, but any thing I wish specially to give them to read, I give myself; I never think of applying for any.

8876. Is there no apartment devoted entirely to religious worship?—No; it is in this room, the service takes place.

Rev. M. Malone.

Rev. Michael Malone, sworn and examined.

8877. How long have you been Roman Catholic chaplain to this institution?—Since November, 1855.

8878. What proportion of the Roman Catholic inmates of the institution usually attend service?—I cannot state exactly the proportion who attend service, but the number of Catholics I have charge of in the establishment is 304, and perhaps about half that number, on an average, attend service on Sunday. Some are obliged to be kept away from chapel on account of causes known to the Governor.

8879. Do you think that about one-half the number of Catholic inmates you have stated are capable of benefiting by your ministrations?—I think so; that is, of assisting peaceably at mass on Sunday, and deriving benefit from their assisting thereof.

The Roman Catholic inmates; attendance at divine service.

8880. What is the proportion capable of benefiting by your instructions, or by communicating with you on religious matters?—I sometimes come here on the eve of festivals, and I generally have from forty to fifty capable of receiving private instruction. I never address the patients altogether in the form of a sermon, but I convey instruction privately.

8881. Is there a considerable number in a condition to receive the sacraments?—Yes; there is at present one, a weekly communicant, and there are others monthly communicants, and there are from twenty to thirty who are able to comply with their Paschal communion.

8882. How often in the week do you attend?—I attend regularly every Sunday, either personally or by a representative, and whenever there is a sick call, no matter whether the person is capable of speaking to me rationally or not, I come to administer the sacrament of Extreme Unction.

8883. When you say you do not preach, but instruct privately, which is perhaps a better course, is that on Sundays, or do you come on other days in the week to do so?—I come on other days in the week.

8884. Are you provided by the Board with such books as may be required for the religious instruction of Catholic inmates?—Yes; everything requisite for the celebration of mass is supplied. With regard to the prayer books, the patients themselves, I believe, provide them. There is not any provision I believe made by the Board for prayer books or beads. I think they are supplied by the friends of the patients.

8885. It is stated part of the house is fitted up as a chapel for the use of the inmates?—Yes; the number of Catholics being so great, 304, all of whom might possibly be able to attend, but I do not say that they are.

8886. Have you, during the short period you have been chaplain, heard the inmates of your persuasion express their satisfaction as being enabled to have the services of a minister of their church?—Oh, yes; I have repeatedly heard them express their satisfaction; in fact, I know of one case that I am quite certain has been recovered by my ministrations. It was the case of a person affected with religious madness and despair, and by constant conversations with her she was recovered, and has left since quite well. There are other cases I find quite soothed by what I say to them, and I find them most obedient to what I state as a priest, when they are violent towards their keepers.

8887. Do you find many of them, as regards these matters, very little different from persons out of doors?—Yes; I find that to be the case with monomaniacs, persons insane on some one point, but on others quite as sane as anybody else.

8888. I need scarcely ask you whether you consider it proper that those people should be deprived of the services of chaplains?—I think it would be very wrong to deprive them of the advantage of having chaplains. I have nothing else to state, except that it is my impression the services of a Roman Catholic clergyman to this asylum, at least, where the number of Roman Catholics is so great, could not be safely or justly dispensed with.

Incurables received from the old Asylum.

Applications for admission.

Lunatics in the workhouses.

Removal of such cases from Asylum.

Class of cases in the workhouses.

Proportion of cases from Fermanagh and from Tyrone.

Cases from gaols.

Direct committed to the Asylum.

Inadequacy of the Asylum.

8889. What appointment do you hold in this institution?—Manager and resident physician.
8890. What counties are comprised in the district?—Tyrone and Fermanagh.
8891. Have you been resident manager of the institution since its opening?—I have.
8892. At what period was the Omagh asylum opened?—It was opened on the 31st March, 1853, to receive patients.
8893. What number of inmates is it calculated to accommodate?—We calculate 312.
8894. What number of inmates are there at present in the house?—Two hundred and thirty-one.
8895. I presume a good number of the 231 were transferred, at the opening, from other asylums?—Sixty-seven from Derry and fourteen from Annagh.
8896. It appears from a return the Commissioners have received that a large proportion of the cases in the house are supposed to be incurable?—Yes, there is a large proportion incurable.
8897. From the return which you forwarded to us, it appears that on the 1st January last there were 158 incurables, out of 213—have these numbers varied much since?—They have varied, but not much; on the 31st March last, we had in the house fifty-nine probably curable cases, 130 incurable cases, twenty idiots, and twenty epileptics.
8898. I presume the idiots might be classed also as incurable?—Yes.
8899. Was any considerable proportion of those incurable cases admitted here from the old asylum?—Mostly all that came from the old asylum were incurable cases and aged.
8900. Are the applications for admission to the asylum numerous at present?—We have four for the next Board day; the number varies from about four to twelve.
8901. Are you aware how many lunatics are in the union workhouses of the district?—I am not aware that there are any lunatics; there are idiots.
8902. Do the Boards of Guardians usually make applications here direct for the admission of lunatics?—They do.
8903. Is any difficulty experienced in having the proper form prepared, and security given, for the removal of a cured lunatic, as required?—Not when they understand it.
8904. Who is the party usually giving the security?—The Chairman of the Board of Guardians generally gives the security for the removal of cases sent from the workhouse, and the clerk makes the affidavit.
8905. Have you found no difficulty in disposing of such cases, or, if they were cured, in obtaining their re-admission to the workhouse?—None whatever. We have had only two such instances.
8906. Are you able to say whether the cases that have come from the workhouses have usually been detained there for a long period?—I rather think they were cases that had been in other asylums; at least, we found that some of them had been in the Derry Asylum. I would call them relapsed cases. In consequence of poverty they went into the workhouse. I wish to observe, also, that most of the cases from workhouses are epileptics.
8907. Are the applications for admission as numerous from the county of Fermanagh as from the county of Tyrone?—No; almost all the cases admitted from the County of Fermanagh come through the gaols by order of the Lord Lieutenant. We had eight cases admissions from the gaols during the past year; seventeen were from Fermanagh, and one from Omagh.
8908. Have the cases coming from gaols usually been detained in the gaols for any period?—They have generally been detained for a length of time before they came to us. I have two women in the house at present; the Governor of the gaol of Enniskillen complained he could not get them in here.
8909. From the experience you have had of cases received from workhouses and gaols, what is your opinion as to the propriety of lunatics being detained in them?—I think it is most injurious to lunatics to detain them in gaols. We find great difficulty in managing cases that come from gaols. As to workhouse cases, we do not find much difference between them and those that are ordinarily admitted.
8910. Do you consider a power of committal direct to the asylum would be advisable?—Certainly.
8911. Having ample room in this asylum you would experience no difficulty in admitting the cases so committed?—None.
8912. In districts where the asylums are very full might not difficulties arise?—Yes, but room might be provided. Cases approaching to recovery might, perhaps, be let out on trial. We have experienced great advantage from letting patients out on trial who were not quite recovered, but were nearly well.
8913. You communicate with the friends respecting those cases?—Yes.
8914. Is it your opinion the asylum at Omagh is sufficient for the wants of the district?—Why, at present I think it is; but I should say, in a few years, it will scarcely be sufficient.

I am not prepared to give an accurate account of the number that may be outside. We have had eighteen re-admissions in the year, and a number of those who have left the asylum I expect will return again, and, by that means, the asylum will, in a very few years, be full.

8915. From returns the Commissioners have received, it appears that on the 1st of January last there were 101 lunatic poor in the county Tyrone, not including those in the asylum, and in the county Fermanagh there were 102—how do you account for application not being made for the admission of those cases?—I cannot account for it. The reluctance friends have to putting these persons into the asylum is the only explanation I can give of it. They frequently keep them on at home, thinking they will get better, and it frequently occurs that, after getting the paper for admission, the friends keep them out for a year longer. It is a natural feeling to keep them amongst themselves.

8916. Is the effect of their being detained at home by their friends, who have not proper means for treating them, likely to interfere with their cure in this asylum?—Very much.

8917. Have you any patients in this asylum who pay?—We have at present three, not including the pensioners.

8918. Is the charge uniform for paying patients?—It is not uniform; the charge depends upon the circumstances of the patient.

8919. In what manner is the maximum regulated—is it with reference to the actual cost of maintaining a lunatic?—It is regulated by the representations made to the Board as to the circumstances of the party.

8920. No profits are derived in any case?—No. The highest charge at present is £12.

8921. Are any particular steps taken by the Board to ascertain whether the friends of the party are able to pay for his support in a private asylum?—I am directed by them to inquire of the gentlemen signing the engagement to know if the parties are capable of paying say, and what sum, and we are guided by the answer.

8922. In the treatment of paying patients in the asylum different in any respect from the treatment of ordinary cases?—No.

8923. Are they allowed any indulgence or additional comforts?—Nothing further than, perhaps, meat on Friday; that is the day on which all the others get bread and milk, and they are also allowed to dress in their own clothes.

8924. Do you find that any jealousy is excited on the part of the other inmates by that?—I never knew any instance of it here; all the patients would wish, if possible, to wear their own clothes.

8925. Have you found that the admission of paying patients has been attended with any inconvenience?—No.

8926. Are the ordinary patients in any case allowed to wear their own clothes?—We have two cases who came from Derry; they got the habit there, and we did not wish to annoy them by preventing them from doing so.

8927. Do you think there is any objection to allowing patients to wear their own clothes?—For the better class, I think there is not; I think, where it is gratifying to the feelings of a patient, it should be allowed; so that it will not interfere seriously with the regulations of the house.

8928. Is there not a visiting physician attached to the institution?—Yes.

8929. How far do you take any part in the medical treatment of the cases in the house?—I scarcely take any part. If there was any urgent case requiring attendance, and if the visiting physician was not present, I would give that attendance.

8930. Being a medical man, did you receive any instructions on your appointment as to the extent of your duties in a medical capacity?—Nothing further than that I was to go round with the visiting physician every day he attended, and in serious cases to consult with him; but it was always understood he was to be the chief medical officer.

8931. When cases are first admitted, do you consult together to consider and determine upon the most advisable course of treatment?—On the next succeeding visit of the visiting physician the patient is pointed out, and he forms his opinion, not so much as to the treatment for the mental disease as that for the bodily condition.

8932. Does the responsibility of the treatment for the mental disease rest with him or with you?—I believe it rests chiefly with me, though, I believe, it is considered to be shared to some extent between us. The subject is rather in a doubtful and unpleasant state at present.

8933. How frequently does the visiting physician attend?—He is expected to attend every second day; I should say he attends three times a week.

8934. Are you yourself engaged in any other pursuit besides the occupation of Manager of this institution?—None whatever.

8935. Are the meetings of the Board regular, or has there been any failure to constitute a meeting?—I believe we have had but three failures of meeting since the house opened.

8936. Do you find the attendance of Governors to be more from one county than from the other?—It is more on the part of Governors from Tyrone; we account for that by the distance the asylum is from Fermanagh.

8937. Do the Inspectors attend often?—Not often.

8938. Do they ever vote and take part in the proceedings like other members?—I have never known them to vote. They may be referred to on a question, and they will give their opinion upon it.

8939. How frequently do they visit the institution?—I think I have had five visits within the last year from one of the Inspectors.

- The land attached to the Asylum; employment of patients upon it.
- The farm; its accounts.
- Defective arrangements in Asylum.
- Want of means of heating.
- Ventilation.
- Lighting.
- The supply of water.
- The sewerage.
8940. Do you keep a morning statement book, as required by the Privy Council regulations?—Yes. [The morning statement book is produced.]
8941. Are the cases of restraint regularly entered in this book?—Yes, they are entered by myself.
8942. Then, there is no person now under restraint?—No, there is not.
8943. Nor has there been for some days?—I have been in Dublin for some days; but, on inquiry, I find that there was no case requiring any restraint.
8944. In what manner do you bring before the Board any matters you think may require their consideration?—In writing.
8945. Is there a particular book in which such memoranda are kept?—There is a memorandum book, and there is a wast book, in which we will sometimes write what, perhaps, ought to be written in the memorandum book.
8946. Is there an apothecary attached to this institution?—There is.
8947. Is there a clerk and store-keeper?—There is a clerk and store-keeper.
8948. Does he reside on the premises?—He does not.
8949. Is it by permission of the Board he resides outside the asylum?—I believe it is by their permission; the subject is one in abeyance at present.
8950. Is there a minute of the Board permitting him to reside outside the institution?—At the last meeting but one it was brought before the Board, and it was left as it is until after the Commissioners hold this inquiry.
8951. Has the clerk and store-keeper resided in the institution at any time since it opened?—Never.
8952. Has that absence from the institution been sanctioned by a minute of the Board?—It has frequently been brought under the notice of the Board. It is attended with very great inconvenience.
8953. What quantity of land have you attached to the asylum?—We have at present thirty statute acres.
8954. How is that land used?—It is mostly in tillage.
8955. Is any large number of the inmates enabled to be employed in the cultivation of the farm?—The average number we have employed is twelve.
8956. Who conducts the farming?—The steward.
8957. Does he reside on the premises?—Yes.
8958. Does the farm supply milk for the institution?—No.
8959. Who keeps the accounts of the farm?—The steward keeps the accounts, and they are copied into the books by the clerk.
8960. The clerk and store-keeper, therefore, does not take any cognizance of the incomes or outgoings of the farm?—No.
8961. What is your opinion of the suitability of the building for an institution of this kind?—I think the plan is very good, but the arrangements in some respects are very defective, the water-closets particularly, and the mode of heating.
8962. How is the house heated?—There are no means of heating whatever in the dormitories. There are fire-places in the day rooms and in the long corridors, but they are quite insufficient to give heat.
8963. Are there no artificial means of supplying heat?—No.
8964. I believe the corridors are very long?—The long corridor is 204 feet in length.
8965. Do you find them very cold in winter?—Exceedingly cold, and the sleeping apartments are more so.
8966. Are the fire-places in the outer or inner wall of the corridors?—In the outer wall.
8967. Do you find the corridors much used by the patients in winter?—Owing to the cold they are not.
8968. Is the ventilation good?—The ventilation is good, but the windows are very defective in their construction.
8969. Are there any artificial arrangements for ventilating the building?—No.
8970. Are there no flues for extracting the foul air?—No.
8971. Is the house lighted with gas?—Yes, with gas.
8972. Have you a good supply of water?—We have now a very good supply of water from the river.
8973. Is that forced up by the labour of the patients?—In fine weather we put patients to it who are not capable of doing any other work; in winter we put the horse to it.
8974. Is the horse kept for the use of the farm?—Yes.
8975. And employed solely at it?—Yes.
8976. Do you find that you are obliged to employ the patients to a greater extent than is desirable in forcing up water?—No.
8977. Have you found any inconvenience on that head?—Not at present, but I have experienced inconvenience from the yard pump; it is a very difficult pump to be worked. It must be worked by patients if we require the water. We do not often use it; the water is bad.
8978. Is it not fit for drinking?—It is not.
8979. Is the water in the river good?—Yes, except during the time of the steeping of flax, when it becomes very disagreeable.
8980. Is there any period of the year you are in want of good water?—In the season for steeping flax, we cannot use the river water at all, and we are obliged to apply to wells in the neighbourhood. The water in the well in the yard is chalybeate.
8981. Is the sewerage good?—Very defective.

ORAL.

Oswald District
Asylum.

F. J. West, Esq., M.D.

8982. To what place is the soil carried off?—To a tank in front of the house.
8983. Is it used for the farm?—Yes.
8984. Are there any cattle on the farm?—None.
8985. Are there any pigs?—There are pigs.
8986. Do the pigs belong to the institution?—Yes.
8987. How is the land that is not under tillage occupied?—It is in meadow.
8988. How many airing-courts are there?—There are four. There is a new one just being built. The airing-courts.
8989. Are they adequate for the wants of the institution?—Indeed, I think they are not; if the house were full they would not be adequate. This house has been built with the view, the Commissioners said, that the occupants of the top corridors, both male and female, would not require yards.
8990. Do you mean that they would be persons of imbecile habits?—No; but that they would be so quiet and orderly that they would not require to mix with the other patients in the yards. That was the object of the Board of Works.
8991. Are we to understand that it was meant the general ground would be accessible to those patients?—Yes.
8992. Is there a sufficient supply of bedding for the use of the inmates?—No, indeed, it is very scanty. The supply of bedding.
8993. Have you ever represented to the Board the necessity of additional bedding being provided?—Yes, and the last Board gave me an order to increase the supply.
8994. What classification do you maintain in the house?—The refractory, the peaceable, and the convalescent. The classification.
8995. Are those three divisions on each side?—Yes.
8996. By whom are the instruments of restraint kept?—They are in the matron's store.
8997. Do you mean the instruments of restraint for the males as well as for the females?—Yes, the strait-waistcoat; that is the only instrument of restraint. The instruments of restraint.
8998. Is it not kept by you?—It is not.
8999. Then, it may be used without your knowledge?—It cannot be used without being reported to me.
9000. You mean the order is to report to you, but, then, as it is not in your custody, it may be used without your knowledge?—It is reported to me that restraint is necessary in a case; and if I think so, I desire the attendants to go to the matron for the instrument of restraint, and it is only used under my superintendence.
9001. Are you aware the Privy Council Regulations require you to keep these instruments of restraint?—I was not aware that I was required to keep them.
9002. What instruments of restraint are in use?—The strait-waistcoat, and the muff sometimes. There is a bed we use here with a cover to it. It is one of the wooden beds, with slides, and there is an iron cover which goes over it, with rails; and in this bed we put violent patients who are in the habit of sitting up and breaking out, and breaking the windows. A bed with iron bars over it.
9003. A sort of cage?—Yes; it is only used at night.
9004. How high may those iron bars be above the patient?—Sufficiently high to allow him to turn and to twist, but he cannot get up.
9005. How many inches might those bars be above the patient's head?—When he is lying down, I suppose from twelve to fourteen inches.
9006. Are the patients who are placed in those beds usually strapped down in them?—Never; they are allowed to move, and turn, and draw up their knees; to do every thing, except sit up in bed.
9007. Might not a patient suddenly starting up injure himself?—We have never found that to occur.
9008. Are these beds of your own introduction, or have you seen them elsewhere?—They are my own introduction. In fact, it occurred to me when every other means failed with a patient; we tied her to keep her in the room, and prevent her from destroying herself, or getting out of the window, and then we adopted this plan and found it most successful. She recovered, and was fit to go home in about a week after she was placed in it.
9009. You have stated that strait-waistcoats and muffs are sometimes used; are patients ever restrained by any other means?—Never.
9010. Are patients never tied down to beds?—Never.
9011. At the time the Commissioners were here last there was a patient recovering from a fit of apoplexy who was tied down?—He was a very powerful, strong man, whom we could not keep down, and there was a rope put across the bed. He was not tied; the object was to keep his legs in the bed; he could sit up in it. A rope used to keep a patient in bed.
9012. Was that man dying at that time?—He was dying; it was to keep his legs in the bed we resorted to that plan. He was a powerful and a heavy man, and we could not keep him there otherwise.
9013. How many cases, on an average, have you under restraint, of any kind, in the week?—I think, on an average, not more than two. One of those is an epileptic case and becomes very violent in fits. Weekly average of cases under restraint.
9014. Have you ever found any of the inmates placed under restraint by the servants, by means of tying sheets round their arms, and so on?—Never.
9015. Are there baths in all the divisions?—There are baths in all the corridors.
9016. How frequently do the inmates get baths?—Once a week; they would require them every day. Baths.

- Quinn. 9017. Do they get a complete bath?—Yes. Some of them require them twice a day; those who cannot relieve themselves.
- Quagh District Asylum. 9018. Are there any seats or benches in the corridors for the patients to sit down?—None.
- R. J. West, Esq., M.D. 9019. Then, except in the day-rooms, they cannot rest?—No.
- Nonstrain corridors; hours of retiring to bed, and of rising. 9020. At what hour do they go to bed in winter?—The men who have been out working are allowed to go to bed after supper, if they wish it. That is about seven o'clock. They must be in bed at nine o'clock. The time varies, according as they wish it, except that they must be in bed at nine.
9021. At what time do they rise?—Seven o'clock.
- Reading for patients in winter evenings. 9022. What occupations have the patients, on long winter evenings, indoors?—The keepers read for some of them, and others merely sit in the place.
9023. Is there any collection of books for the use of the inmates?—We are getting up a library.
9024. Do you not attach considerable importance, in the treatment of insanity, to the minds of the patients being occupied as far as possible?—Yes.
- Want of means of amusement. 9025. Do you think sufficient means are afforded them for the purpose?—It is a great defect in this establishment, the want of means of amusement. There is no source of amusement.
9026. Have you ever suggested any arrangement for the purpose of amusing them?—I suggested to the Board the advantage of having a ball-court for the patients. They granted me some money for it, but I have not yet found a good site on which to erect it.
- Dining-hall. 9027. Is there any recreation-hall or apartment of that kind for them?—There is; but I lately turned it into a dining-hall, which is of very great importance. A very great improvement has taken place, even amongst the worst of the patients, by their getting their food together. The male patients only dine there. It would be a great advantage if there was a place where both males and females could dine together.
9028. Is there a school in the asylum?—No.
- State of education amongst the patients. 9029. Is there any large number of the inmates capable of reading?—No: five can read and write well; ninety-six can read and write indifferently; thirty-five can read only; and ninety-three cannot read nor write.
- Instruction as a means of occupation. 9030. What is your opinion of the advantage of instruction being given in an establishment of this kind; would it be a suitable occupation for the minds of the patients?—It might occupy them, but I do not know what benefit they would derive from it. I think patients capable of receiving instruction should be thinking of leaving this; and I find patients recover much quicker by putting them to the employments they were habitually at, such as the farm; or if they were of any trade, by putting them to that trade. It is the object of the establishment to recover patients as much as possible.
9031. You do not mean to say that every lunatic who is capable of receiving instruction would be in a condition to leave the asylum?—No, I think not; but, I think, patients coming towards recovery would be better employed in the farm. They are generally patients accustomed to a life of labour.
9032. Would not their being enabled to read facilitate their occupation on a long winter's evening, instead of being dependent, as they now are, upon occasional readings for them by the keepers?—Yes, it would; but there are few patients who would be capable of receiving any beneficial instruction. It would take a long time before the instruction would be perfected.
- No trades taught. 9033. What trades are taught in the asylum?—We teach no trade.
9034. Are the persons who are employed at weaving and carpenter's work persons who had previously learned those trades?—Yes.
- Returns as to patients employed, how employed, and of those unemployed. 9035. Just read from the Daily Statement Book how all the males were employed yesterday in this institution?—There were sixteen at agricultural labour; two weaving; that means weaving and winding; one tailoring; we have a carpenter in the house, but he was not working; two cleaning the houses; twenty-five at miscellaneous employments; inactive, sixty-five; confined to bed, two. The total employed is sixty-six, and the total unemployed is sixty-seven males. Of the females there were at spinning, three; at needlework, ten; knitting, twenty; fancy-work, two; assisting in the laundry, seven; cleaning the house, sixteen; miscellaneous employment, five; confined to bed, three. Total employed, sixty-three; total unemployed, fifty-three.
9036. Are the shoes bought by contract?—Yes, they are bought by contract.
- The making-up of clothing. 9037. Are there men made in the house?—Not at present.
9038. Is the male clothing made up in the house?—No. I attempted to get it done, but the tailor destroyed more cloth than would pay for the making. I employ him in mending.
9039. Is the female clothing made up in the house?—Yes.
- Teaching trades. 9040. Is the shirting for the men made here?—Yes.
9041. Do you think it would be possible to afford more extensive employment by teaching them trades?—The weaver might teach, or the carpenter, but the tailor we have is a patient very seldom capable of doing any work.
- The servants. 9042. Are the servants of the establishment generally enabled to read and write?—There is a rule that none shall be employed who cannot read and write.
9043. Practically, do they read much for the patients?—The male keepers do in the winter.

9044. I presume that, as the manager of an institution of this kind, you are aware of the importance of having occupations for the minds of lunatic patients?—Yes.

9045. Are you not of opinion it would be of advantage to extend the employment to be given?—I think employment should be extended to all who can receive it; I think it would be a great advantage.

9046. By whom are the servants of the establishment appointed?—By me.

9047. By whom are they removed?—By me.

9048. Are they removed by you without any interference or control on the part of the Board?—I report to the Board.

9049. Am I to understand you report it as a matter done?—It is very seldom that I have had the opportunity or necessity of dismissing servants.

9050. When a servant is removed from the institution, is there any record as to the cause of that person having left?—I make a record in the Day Book.

9051. Is there any record in the Minutes of the Board?—No.

9052. You do not report it to the Board?—I have not done so.

9053. Then, in point of fact, the servants of this institution are entirely under your direction and control?—Yes.

9054. Have you found that the wages allowed are adequate to procure the services of proper attendants?—I think so. Those having trades get higher wages than those who have not. Their wages.

9055. With regard to religious worship, what are the arrangements in this institution in that respect?—We have three chaplains. The Roman Catholic Chaplain attends on Sunday morning, the Presbyterian Chaplain at two o'clock, and the Protestant Chaplain for evening service. Religious worship; the arrangements for it.

9056. Is there a chapel attached to the institution?—Yes.

9057. Is the same chapel used by each communion?—Yes.

9058. Do the chaplains attend to give religious instruction to the inmates separately?—They do, during the week. The Manager's control with respect to religious ministrations.

9059. Supposing you considered it was not desirable that a chaplain should visit a patient, considering that patient's state of mind, what steps would you take to prevent the visit?—I select the persons the chaplains are to attend and those they are not to attend. I direct the chaplains as to inmates whom it is necessary for them to see and inspect, and as to those they should not see.

9060. Then, in point of fact, you exercise control as to the persons who should receive the services or ministrations of the chaplains?—Yes; I am ordered to do so.

9061. Do you consider the Privy Council Regulations, under which you appear to act, efficiently provide against the patients receiving the visits of chaplains when it would be undesirable they should see them?—Indeed, I think they do, when the manager has the power of directing what patients the chaplains are to see and are not to see.

9062. I believe, in this institution, the inmates are divided into three communions, those of the Established Church, the Presbyterian Church, and the Roman Catholic Church?—Yes.

9063. Have you found the visits of the chaplains to lead to any squabbling amongst the inmates on religious matters?—None, whatever. That is, perhaps, owing, in a great measure, to the regulation, that they do not attend on the same day. They all attend on Sundays, but at different hours of the day.

9064. Do you find any excitement created in the minds of the inmates by the attendance of clergymen of different persuasions on Sundays?—I never knew a case of the kind. No religious excitement amongst the patients.

9065. What service is performed first of a Sunday?—The Roman Catholic service.

9066. How soon after the conclusion of the Roman Catholic service on Sunday does the next service begin?—The Roman Catholic service ends generally about twelve o'clock; the Presbyterian service does not commence till after two o'clock, when the clergyman has finished his service in Omagh; and the Established Church service is in the evening. Hours for the different services.

9067. Then the inmates of one communion in entering the chapel are not likely to come in contact with those of another communion who are returning from the chapel?—No.

9068. Have you found any injurious consequences at all to result from chaplains being attached to this institution?—I never have.

9069. Is it your opinion that the religious ministrations of the clergymen have been of any use?—I have not found that they have been of any use as a means for the recovery of patients, but I think an establishment such as this requires to have chaplains. Necessity of having Chaplains.

9070. Do you consider there is any large number of the inmates possessed of sufficient reason to enable them to profit in a religious point of view, by the instruction they receive from their clergymen?—Indeed there is. There is a number of them who perfectly understand what their clergymen says to them. Their conduct on Sundays is so very regular, that I think they receive great comfort from the service.

9071. Have you had any case of attempted suicide in the institution since its opening?—We have had two cases. I think one was merely a case intended to frighten us, but we had one decided case of attempt at suicide. Suicidal cases.

9072. Have you had any large number of suicidal cases in the house?—No; I think we had never more than three, who, previously to entering the asylum, attempted suicide.

9073. Do you make any particular arrangement for suicidal cases?—Yes; we put them into a refractory ward, where there is a smaller number of patients requiring the care of keepers.

CHARGE.

Oranah.
Oranah District
Asylum.

E. J. West, Esq., M.B.
Associated dormitories; number of beds.

9074. Do they sleep in separate cells, or in associated dormitories?—In separate cells, excepting one case that we put into an associated room.

9075. Are there many associated dormitories in the house?—There are four dormitories containing five beds each; two containing three each; five containing nine beds each; two containing twelve beds each; one containing six; and one containing eight. These are on the male side. On the female side there are six dormitories containing five beds each; two containing three each; one containing four; one containing six; one containing eight; two containing nine each; and two containing twelve.

9076. By the return which you forwarded to the Commissioners, there appear to be 333 beds altogether?—Yes.

9077. Does that represent the number of beds and the bedding at this moment available, or the accommodation that might be provided?—We included in that the infirmary, which has accommodation for twenty.

9078. Is that occupied?—As a granary.

9079. Is it a detached building?—It is detached.

The infirmary building not used as such.

9080. Has it never been occupied or used as an infirmary?—No.

9081. What is your opinion as to the propriety of having an infirmary for the treatment of the sick?—Indeed I think it is very useful.

9082. Is there any reason for its never being occupied as an infirmary?—We never required it as such.

The total possible accommodation in
Asylum.

9083. If the pressure on the house for admission exceeded the number you have stated, do you think greater accommodation could be provided than to the extent of 333 beds?—I think we could make room for 316 in this house, and twenty in the infirmary.

9084. Could the large corridors on the upper floor be at all fitted up with safety as sleeping apartments?—If there was a great pressure they might; the beds might be removed in the morning. That would do in summer, but would not do in winter, the cold is so great.

9085. Supposing an arrangement was made for dividing the upper galleries into separate dormitories, do you think an extension of accommodation could be provided in that way?—I think it would be attended with great inconvenience to divide the corridors.

The increase of incurable cases in
Asylum.

9086. Have you found the number of incurable cases increasing each year?—No, I should not think the incurable cases are increasing.

9087. Is there not a tendency to an increase of incurable cases in an institution of this kind?—There is that tendency on account of the re-admission of those that were in other asylums; persons who have been years out, and now come to this asylum.

Question of increased accommodation;
applies in favour of a separate building
for incurables.

9088. Supposing, at a future time, the demands on the asylum became greater than the accommodation, how do you think it would be advisable to extend the accommodation?—I think there must be an additional building.

9089. Have you ever considered whether it would be advisable to provide separate accommodation for incurable cases?—I think it would be advisable, and that should include the idiots, who should not be associated with the curable cases.

9090. In the event of separate accommodation being provided for incurable cases, do you think that could be possibly done on the grounds adjoining; or would it be better to provide it by the erection of an asylum in a distant part of the country?—I think it is very objectionable to have more than 340 patients associated in one place; on that account I think any additional building should be detached, but I think it might be erected on the grounds here.

Separation of the curable from the
incurable cases.

9091. Do you mean so far detached that the curables could not associate in any way with the incurables?—I would not say that; but so far detached that the idiot and other portions of the incurables should be separate from the curable cases.

9092. Do you think the presence of a large number of idiots and cases of that kind in an institution like this has an injurious effect upon the treatment of acute or recent cases?—I think so; I think it interferes with their recovery.

The question of the admission of paying
patients.

9093. Referring to the early part of your evidence with reference to paying patients, are you enabled to state, from your knowledge of the country, whether there is a considerable number of lunatics at present at large who would be enabled to pay a portion of their maintenance in this asylum, although they would not be able to pay in a private asylum?—I am not aware that there are.

Precaution against abuse of the privilege.

9094. Do you think there is any danger, under the arrangement the Board at present pursue, of the admission, as paying patients, to this asylum, at reduced rates, of persons who might be able to pay for their maintenance in private asylums?—I think not; under the system of superintendence we have adopted we arrive at a just knowledge of their circumstances.

9095. Have you ever had cases of persons admitted as paying patients who eventually became pauper patients by their friends refusing to continue to pay for them?—I recollect that we had a patient who was removed by the parent on the Board insisting on the payment. There was another case.

The dead-house.

9096. What have you in the infirmary building at present?—We have straw in it and some seed potatoes. A portion of it we use as a dead-house. The dead-house built by the Board of Works is so very defective that we use one of the dormitories in the infirmary, where we have post-mortem examinations.

The sick generally treated in their respective cells.

9097. You say the infirmary is not required; where are the sick treated?—Upon a few occasions we removed the patients to a portion of the house that is not occupied at present; number six and number twelve. As a general rule, the sick are treated in their own cells, and not removed from their own corridor.

9098. Are not lunatics exceedingly liable to suffer from cold?—The aged particularly are.
 9099. What provision is there for supplying the sick with warmth in their own cells?—

ORANGE.
 Orange District
 Asylum.
 F. J. West, Esq., M.D.

We have none whatever, except clothes; the cells are very defective in respect of heating.
 9100. What means are there for warming the sick in their cells?—The keepers or nurses,

Want of sufficient attendance; applicances and warmth for sick patients in cells.

according as they happen to be male or female patients, are generally expected to look after them; but if they require to be removed to the corridors I spoke of, number six or number twelve, they have a supernumerary nurse.

9101. I saw a case this morning in a corridor, for which there were two attendants, but one of them was employed with the man out on the farm?—In addition to attendance in the yard he has to attend the sick patients.

9102. Do you think that a good arrangement?—I think not.

9103. Are the patients in their own cells provided with those appliances that are usually necessary for the sick?—No.

9104. Both as regards attendance and warmth, would not the patients be better treated in an infirmary than they are at present?—I think if there was a night nurse and a night keeper, additional servants, we could contrive very well as we are at present, except in case of infectious disease.

9105. Supposing patients sick in different parts of the establishment, would there not be great inconvenience in having the night nurse rambling about the house, from one part to another, attending those patients?—There might certainly be very great inconvenience in that, but we have had such a small amount of illness in this establishment, that we have not experienced the inconvenience. I am only giving my experience since the house opened. A number of those ill were from old age.

9106. The old, when ill, require attendance as well as the young, do they not?—Yes; but they would be more under my superintendence in the house than if they were in an infirmary.

The medical responsibility as to the sick and as to the insane.

9107. Who is directly responsible for the care of the sick?—The visiting physician is the person who, it is expected, is responsible in a medical point of view. I look upon myself as bound to see his directions carried out, and the matron likewise is bound to see them carried out, as regards the females.

9108. Who is directly responsible for the care of the insane, as distinguished from bodily diseases?—I am.

The Apothecary.

9109. Is there any regulation to that effect?—With reference to the management of the insane I look upon myself, being manager of the house, as the person chiefly accountable for their care. I am not aware of any statute on the subject. That is my instruction from the Inspectors.

9110. Is there an apothecary?—Yes.

9111. How often does he attend?—Three times a week.

9112. On the same days as the visiting physician?—No, the day after, generally.

9113. Who makes up the medicine the visiting physician orders on the day he comes?—If there was any urgent case, I would make it up, or the visiting physician himself would do it.

9114. Have you any registering thermometers to ascertain the degree of heat or cold?—No.

Record of sick cases.

9115. Is there any list kept of those who may become sick in the intervals of the physician's visits?—On the female side the matron always reports to me those who may have taken ill during the night, and on the male side the keepers report to me respecting the males.

Henry Thompson,
 Esq., M.D.

Henry Thompson, Esq., M.D., sworn and examined.

9116. Have you been the visiting physician of this asylum since it was opened?—I have.
 9117. How frequently do you visit the institution?—Three times a week regularly, and often, if required.

The Visiting Physician; his visits to the Asylum.

9118. Do you visit the institution immediately after the admission day?—The Board days are the only regular admission days appointed, and I am almost always here on Board days.

9119. Do you see the cases immediately after their admission?—Yes.

9120. How far do you feel the responsibility of the treatment of their insanity rests with you?—I think my principal responsibility is with regard to their bodily diseases, but I think I am also called upon to make any suggestion with regard to their moral treatment that may occur to me.

The extent of his duties and of his responsibility as to the treatment of bodily and mental disease.

9121. You are aware the law does not require the manager of this institution to be a medical man, but Dr. West is a professional gentleman?—Yes.

9122. In case Dr. West was not a professional person, the visiting physician would have the responsibility, I presume, as regards the treatment of insanity?—Yes.

9123. Do you think that any conflict of duty is likely to arise from two medical gentlemen being connected with the institution?—I do not think so.

9124. Do you think the responsibility of treating insanity should be left with the resident physician entirely?—I am not quite sure of that. I think the visiting physician should have a voice also. I think there are few instances in which the patients would not be the better of having the services of two medical men.

9125. Do you consider the visiting physician to be in the position of a consulting physician for the treatment of insanity?—Yes, for the treatment of insanity; and I think he should have the treatment of bodily diseases altogether within his own province.

9126. I presume, however, you are in favour of the manager of an institution like this being a medical man?—Certainly.

9127. Have you and the resident physician made any particular arrangement as to the manner in which your respective duties should be carried out?—No, I cannot say we have. We always visit together to inquire who are ill, and that is reported to me by the keepers.

 Esq., M.D.

9128. You mean, you inquire respecting the patients suffering under bodily disease?—Yes; about the peculiarity of their mental state also.

9129. On visiting the asylum, do you usually go through each of the wards?—Always.

9130. Do you see the patients generally, and not merely those who are suffering from bodily illness?—Yes.

An infirmary;
 opinion in favour of.

9131. It is stated in evidence that the infirmary attached to the institution has never been used as such; what is your opinion of the advantage of infirmaries being attached to such institutions?—It depends very much upon the general accommodation in the asylum. In the present state of the house we do not require it. In case of fever, we have ample means of separating the patients without removing them from the building. If the house was more crowded that would not, of course, be the case.

9132. As a general rule, do you think the sick ought or ought not to be treated in infirmaries?—I think there ought to be a separate infirmary attached to each asylum.

Existing arrangements as to the sick.

9133. At present they are treated either in separate cells or in associated dormitories?—When it is necessary to put cases together, or if there are cases requiring constant care and attention, we put them into a ward together.

9134. Is it the practice at present to collect the sick on each side in one associated dormitory?—Not invariably; but if there be any epidemic disease, or any number of patients afflicted with the same disease, we always put them together, and separate them from the rest.

9135. Have you ever had epidemic disease in the house?—Yes; we had attacks of dysentery, and we put them into a day-room, which was unoccupied and remote from the other patients.

9136. But for ordinary disease the patients are treated in their respective cells?—Yes. I do not think it is quite unobjectionable, and I frequently wished that there was a special attendant for the sick on each side.

9137. Do you think a special attendant would be enabled to give attendance to six or eight patients distributed through separate cells as well as if they were in an associated dormitory?—No; but if we had six or eight patients, we would have them together.

9138. How many sick patients are there now in the asylum?—There is only one, and that man was up yesterday.

No necessity for using the infirmary.

9139. I understand your opinion to be that there is no necessity for using the infirmary attached to this institution?—Not at present.

9140. And that it is only in case of epidemic or contagious disease you would ask it for the use of the sick?—Yes.

The dietary.

9141. Are you satisfied with the ordinary dietary existing in this establishment?—Yes.

9142. I presume you have the power of placing a patient on any extra diet you may think fit?—Yes.

The Physician's books.

9143. What books do you keep as physician?—A Prescription Book and Journal.

9144. Do you keep a Case Book?—I do not. There is a Case Book kept here; I have not kept it. It was not the one prescribed by the regulations. In fact, I could not well keep it from the way it is headed; the Case Book is not kept, but between the Prescription Book and the Journal I can make out the particulars of each case. The Prescription Book is not ordered in the regulations at all. The outlines of the treatment are recorded in it.

Record of restraint.

9145. Do you find that the cases of restraint are entered in the Morning Statement Book regularly?—They are, so far as I am aware.

9146. Have you reason to believe the Morning Statement Book in that respect contains a true representation of what occurs?—Yes.

9147. You have stated as a consequence of the house not being crowded, that when patients are affected with the same disease you put them into the one room?—Yes.

9148. Practically, you do create a kind of infirmary in that way?—Yes.

9149. Then it may be fairly inferred that an infirmary would be beneficial?—Certainly.

Attendance on the sick; want of proper appliances.

9150. Do you think two attendants on each corridor sufficient attendance?—Certainly not, if there was any number of sick.

9151. Do you think the patients are properly taken care of, without the appliances for the sick, such as night-chairs?—There are no night-chairs, but they use the chamber vessels.

The bed with the iron railing over it.

9152. Have you heard the description of a certain bed in use here to restrain patients?—Yes, and I think it has been very useful, and I do not think there is any objection to it so far as we have had experience of it; on the contrary, I think it is extremely useful.

9153. Were you consulted before it was brought into the asylum?—I was not; at first I did not like it, but after some experience of it I changed my opinion respecting it altogether, and thought it extremely useful. Patients whom it was quite impossible to keep quiet in any other way immediately became quiet so their being put in there, apparently convinced of the inutilty of making any resistance; and patients who would not sleep or rest in any other way otherwise than with an attendant with them became quiet in it, and they never injured themselves by it.

The introduction of means of mechanical restraint into Asylums.

9154. I understand from your answer, that any mechanical restraint of that kind, if it can be so called, may be introduced into the asylum and brought into use, although you may consider it objectionable?—Yes; I should think so.

9155. Do you consider that a satisfactory state of things?—I should think that in the department of the manager; any thing I considered very objectionable I would report to the Board; but I never had any occasion to do so.

9156. It has been stated, in returns laid before the Commissioners, that a very large proportion of the inmates of the institution, about three-fourths, are incurable; do you concur in that return?—Yes. Dr. West and I make out that return twice a year, and according as the patients come in we put them down incurable or curable, so far as we can judge, and we go round the house for the same purpose.

9157. The existence of such a large number of incurable cases in the house, I presume, interferes considerably with the value of this institution as a curative hospital for the district?—There are some classes of incurable cases that interfere materially with the successful treatment of curable cases, but, on the other hand, there are incurable cases that do not.

9158. But the continuance of a large number of incurable cases in any hospital prevents the same number of vacancies being reserved, or made available for the curable cases?—Of course.

9159. Have you considered how additional accommodation might be provided in the event of the present asylum not being found sufficient for the wants of the district?—I cannot say that I have.

9160. Would you be favourable to the removal, in such an event, of the incurables to another building?—Yes.

9161. Do you think the removal of the incurable cases to a distinct building would be at all likely to act injuriously upon those cases that, although apparently incurable, might possibly be curable?—There would be no necessity for their knowing that they were classed as incurables, or included amongst them. The building should not be styled an incurable hospital.

9162. The lunatics might possibly learn that such an institution was exclusively for cases considered incurable?—I do not know that it would have any effect in preventing their cure, if they were curable.

9163. Is it your opinion, that there is any large amount of insanity amongst the poor of this country, which does not seek for admission to this asylum?—Indeed, I do not know; I think not.

9164. In the course of your practice, you have not come to know of a very large number of persons in such a state?—No; I think they seek admission very freely when the necessity arises.

9165. What is your opinion as to the effect which the services of the chaplains attached to this institution have upon the inmates?—They have a good effect.

9166. Do you consider it would be advisable to have any instruction given to the patients in reading or writing?—I do.

9167. Are you aware whether these matters have ever been under the consideration of the Board?—They have never been consulted about them. I wish to mention, with regard to the treatment of the sick, that although those appliances which Dr. Corrigan has referred to, have not been supplied, still there has been no actual want of them experienced. I have never perceived any neglect on the part of the keepers in attending any person in the house; I have never had any neglect to complain of, nor here I heard any complaints.

9168. From whom would you expect complaints to come?—I should be able, at my visits, to see whether every thing was attended to or not—whether the patients were kept dry and clean, and that there was a sufficient degree of heat kept up. I have sometimes ordered artificial heat by means of warm water, and where it was necessary, by giving additional bedding.

9169. I alluded to the appliances used in the sick wards of hospitals; do you conceive them requisite here?—No. We would be better off if we had a special nurse on each side. I have mentioned that, and expressed an opinion to that effect; but there seems to be a difficulty with regard to the number of keepers.

9170. My question refers to the appliances; I have spoken of one case that I saw to day in an apartment in which there was no night-chair or table?—The case you refer to was in bed only this day.

9171. Is it your opinion, that appliances which are necessary in a sick room or for persons in an hospital, are not necessary for the insane?—Certainly not.

9172. Do the patients suffer from want of warmth?—Generally speaking, the cells are extremely cold in winter. Whenever I considered it necessary to order additional warmth to be secured, I have done so.

9173. In what way has that additional warmth been given?—By means of warm water, or by additional bedding. The warm water is applied in bottles.

9174. I see in the list of the causes of death, that three deaths resulted from exhaustion in the year 1854, four in 1855, and two in 1856; do you think that the application of warmth, by bottles of hot water, is a sufficient provision for such patients?—I think it could be made quite sufficient. Of course, there could be a better arrangement adopted; a room properly heated, so as to keep up a proper temperature, would be better.

9175. Do you think the attendance at present on the sick, which is merely by keepers, is of such a character as to afford a guarantee that sufficient warmth will be secured for the sick patients on cold nights?—I think not.

9176. I see by the return, that three deaths resulted from paralysis in 1854; do you think that the application of warmth in the way that you have indicated, is sufficient for such a class of patients?—I think it can be made sufficient; I do not mean to say that it is the best means.

9177. Is there any control exercised with a view to securing the proper application of the means you spoke of during night?—No.

The Rev. John Grey Porter, &c., sworn and examined.

Omagh District Asylum.

Rev. J. G. Porter, &c.

Adequacy of the Asylum.

9178. I believe you are one of the Governors of this asylum?—I am.

9179. Are you constantly in the habit of attending the Board?—I attend very regularly.

9180. What is your opinion as to the sufficiency of the existing asylum for the wants of the district?—Taking into consideration the returns that have been made in the Census Reports, I should think that the asylum is quite sufficient now for what is likely or expected to be sent into it from the two counties forming the district. I say that, if there is any reliance to be placed upon these returns.

Want of information as to previous history of cases admitted from gaols and work-houses.

9181. You have had experience here of the admission of patients from workhouses and from gaols; do you think that sufficient information is obtained in all the cases thus admitted, with respect to their previous history?—I think it would be most desirable that there should be some general and improved form of admission.

Case of a lunatic policeman.

9182. I believe that, practically, the Lord Lieutenant's warrants for the transmission of cases from the gaol to the asylum do not contain such information as you would be likely to obtain from an ordinary applicant?—I think not. We look upon the Lord Lieutenant's warrant as imperative. We have no form of admission for the cases you refer to. We had rather a curious case here relative to the form of admission. There was a policeman who had been in the habit of coming to the asylum with lunatics; he became a lunatic himself, and he was sent from the county Fermanagh to this asylum. As long as he was confined in the police force he was paid for here by the constabulary authorities; they ultimately dismissed him from the force, and we then thought that this county should not be charged with him, but that he should be sent to the county where he had resided—namely, the county Meath. We applied to the Government on the subject, and they said there was no mode by which to get him transferred; and a similar case happened at the time in Duhallow. It appears to be rather irregular, that we, residing in these two counties, should be obliged to be taxed for the support of a lunatic, who evidently belongs to the county Meath. As I have stated, he was supported in this asylum by the constabulary so long as he was considered to be a member of that force, but when he was discharged from that force the payment ceased, and we then thought it but fair that he should be sent to his own district.

Suggestion to charge the inmates upon their respective baronies.

9183. What is your opinion, generally, as to the existing law in reference to the chargeability of lunatics; you are aware that at present they are charged upon the counties—are you in favour of the continuance of that arrangement?—From the working of the system that I observe here, when I attend on Board days, I would be disposed to think that it is worthy of consideration whether the general establishment charges ought not to be upon the counties, but that the charges for the maintenance of lunatics should be baronial. There is a very great feeling against the expense; and I find that when the charge is placed upon the county at large there is not the same desire to control the expenditure that there would be if it was more limited. If the charges, as I have suggested, were baronial, I think each barony would then endeavour to investigate the admissions which took place from it, and see that they were right.

Alleged advantage of such an arrangement.

9184. You are, therefore, of opinion generally, that it would be desirable to fix the chargeability of the inmates upon the smaller area?—Yes, upon baronies.

9185. Your object in fixing the charge upon baronies appears to be, that the cases, as you think, would receive a more searching investigation at the time of admission?—Yes. Permit me further to say, that there would be an additional check if it was a baronial area that was fixed, for then you would have the cases canvassed and discussed at road sessions. I would place the maintenance charges for the lunatics upon the barony, and I would put the establishment charges upon the county.

Form of admission; medical certificate.

9186. Would you give the baronial sessions any power of initiating the admission of the lunatic, or objecting to his being charged to a particular barony?—I think that should rest with the Board. I do not think that the present form of admission is desirable. We require the assistance of members of the medical profession in drawing up a better form of admission than we have at present.

9187. Referring to the medical gentlemen, these members of the profession who usually sign certificates for the admission of lunatics, may not have seen the cases till the very time that they are called upon to sign the papers?—I have seen cases brought before the Board here as to which there must evidently have been great laxity, or irregularity, in filling up the returns.

Constitution of the Board of Governors.

9188. As you are of opinion that the baronial sessions should have no control over the admissions, are you in favour of any alteration in the constitution of the Board of Governors?—I think the present system is very good.

9189. Have you ever considered the advantage, or otherwise, of the representative system being introduced, either by nomination from Grand Jurors or otherwise?—I think it is better that the appointment should rest with the Executive, as at present.

9190. Do you think the Executive should be under any limitation as to the number to be appointed from each county?—I think it would be better not to have any limitation; it might operate injuriously.

No Visiting Committee.

9191. Are the Governors in the habit of visiting the house on Board days, or at other times?—They are.

The Inspectors as members of the Board.

9192. Is there a Visiting Committee appointed?—There is not.

9193. What is your opinion as to the advisability, or otherwise, of the Inspectors being members of the Board of Governors?—I must say that we have always derived benefit and assistance from their sitting with us at the Board.

9194. Do you find that they take part, as they are entitled to do by law, by voting and so on, in the proceedings of the Board?—I do not remember any instance here in which we came to a vote; we have always acted together.

9185. Are you satisfied with the existing state of the law as regards the central control exercised by the Board of Works over the erection of asylums, or of additional buildings?—We are not satisfied at all with the way in which they finished this asylum. We have reason to complain of the expense and inconvenience we have been put to from the deficient state in which the asylum was left.

9186. Do you consider that the Boards of Governors might be allowed the same independent action as regards the erection of buildings for lunatics as the Grand Juries are allowed with reference to gaols and court-houses?—I should not like the Boards of Governors to have an unlimited power of taxing the county.

9187. Do you consider that any extension of this building, involving additional taxation, should be submitted for the approval of the Grand Juries?—Certainly.

9188. In the case of a district like the present, comprising two counties, if there was a difference of opinion between the respective Grand Juries of Tyrone and Fermanagh with reference to additional expenditure, how would you consider that difference should be got over?—By the Executive.

9189. Do you consider that the appointments of the superior officers of this institution should rest with the Executive Government?—I think it should.

9200. What advantage do you consider arises from leaving the appointment of the superior officers of this institution in the hands of the Executive Government, when similar institutions in the country are not so circumstanced, the gaols and the workhouses?—I assure you, from what we know of the state of society in this country, I think it is better the appointment should be left in the hands of the Executive.

9201. What do you particularly refer to when you speak of the state of society?—I understood the question to mean, that the officers should be elective, like the treasurership of the county, for instance; and I think it would be a very injurious thing that such should be the case.

9202. With regard to paying patients being admitted to this asylum, are you of opinion it is right that the institution should be open to a class of patients who are unable to pay for their own maintenance in private asylums?—I believe a great amendment is required in the law in that respect; I believe that at present the admission of paying patients is only permissive, that our admitting them is scarcely legal; but I think the reception of such a class of patients is a most useful and beneficial thing for the country; because, where there is a large establishment of this kind, the officers of it must have given their attention to the treatment of insanity, and I think it, therefore, very desirable that paying patients should be admitted, so as to have the benefit of their skill and experience. I have given my opinion that the chargeability of the patients, generally, should be upon the parishes, and I have given that opinion from the experience I have had at this Board with respect to complaints, petitions, and memorials that have been addressed to us about patients that it was considered were able to pay, and ought to pay a proportion of the expense of their maintenance.

9203. Cases that were admitted free?—No. We thought, from their situation in life, that they were able to pay, and we directed that they should be admitted on the payment of a certain sum.

9204. Are we to understand that you would be in favour of patients who would be able to pay either a portion, or the whole, of the cost of their maintenance, being received into an institution of this character?—Yes; but we have found very great difficulty in deciding what they ought to pay, and trouble has been caused to the Board by memorials and correspondence on the subject.

9205. In some cases we have found that the scale of charge has been uniform—namely, the actual cost of the patient's maintenance, and that the persons unable to pay that sum were received as paupers—what is your opinion of that arrangement?—I do not think we could do that here, because the cases of individuals differ so much. We have a case now, the difficulty with respect to which we thought arose from a family dispute. There is a sum of money in the bank left to the female, and we said we would be satisfied if we received the interest upon the money. What they give mostly depends upon their circumstances, and it is not easy for us to ascertain correctly and fairly what the resources of those parties are.

9206. Do you consider the law should afford the Governors a ready and efficacious means of recovering the cost of the maintenance of a lunatic patient?—Yes.

9207. In the event of the requirements of the district necessitating additional accommodation to be provided, would you prefer the district being divided into two parts, and each county having an asylum for itself, or would you prefer having additions made to this asylum?—I think it would be better to have an additional building here. I should state that we have a large building already that we have never used, and I do not like contemplating an extension.

9208. Do you find the situation convenient as regards the whole district?—I believe it is as inconvenient to myself as to any one else, and I do not complain.

9209. Has the Board found any difficulty in obtaining contracts on fair terms for the supply of provisions and other requisites for the asylum?—Yes, we had in some cases.

9210. Are the articles supplied by contract?—Our object is to get everything we can by contract.

9211. Have the difficulties you refer to arisen from the situation of Omagh, or from other causes?—No, I do not think it is from any thing in the situation.

Is there any matter which you would wish to bring under the notice of the Commissioners?—I think that there should be something defined with respect to harmless idiots and epileptics. Speaking in the presence of Dr. Corrigan, I think it would be very desirable if there could be some limitation made in that respect; because at present I do not know exactly what class of cases we are bound to receive here—whether it is curable or incurable, or whether we are to receive harmless idiots.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

Do you observe that section 4 states that "idiots as well as lunatics, properly so called, are to be admissible to every asylum, and so also are epileptic persons, where the fits produce imbecility of mind as well as of body"?—Yes. Under our form of admission we find it very difficult to decide. I think the form of admission should be drawn up with greater stringency.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Suggestions to have a trade taught; to have a school, and as to reports to Board.                        | 2218. Do you consider that harmless incurable cases should not be received?—Certainly; I should have thought it was not the object to receive harmless incurable cases here. 2219. It has been stated that the appointment of the servants of the institution rests with the manager, and also their removal; have you found that to work satisfactorily?—The Board of Governors found it necessary, as you will see by their minutes, to make some little alteration. Formerly the manager removed and dismissed servants without our knowing it, but the Board have lately made this alteration:—That in future any change made in the officers and servants be reported at the next ensuing meeting of the Governors, and that the name, age, and qualifications of the new officer be inserted in report, and reason of such addition or change. We thought it a very desirable thing to enter into that resolution. I formed one of the Committee here, with two other members of the Board of Governors, respecting the housing of the institution, and we went at some length into the domestic arrangements; and we recommended at the time that in future, where it was possible, there should be promotion made of deserving servants; that servants should, on the occurrence of vacancies, be raised to a higher grade. I wished—and, I believe, all the Governors also—that employment should be given in the institution; and that, where it could be done, the manager should obtain the assistance of some mechanic, to be appointed for the purpose, who would teach a trade. We are also very desirous of establishing a library, which we have commenced, and we hope to increase it; and the subject of establishing a school has been also under the consideration of the Governors. It was thought that it would be well to have one of the officers qualified to teach a school. I think it would be very desirable that the heads of all the departments here should furnish a separate account, and give it into the Board, at the monthly meeting—that is, that the housekeeper and steward should give in an account, while the manager, at the same time, should give a report—that is, that each should enter into details respecting the matters under his or her own superintendence. |

| The system of audit; suggestion to furnish abstracts of account to Grand Jurors.                         | 2221. Have you been in the habit of constantly attending the Board?—Yes, very regularly. 2222. Are there any matters you would wish to bring under the notice of the Commissioners?—I think the system of audit might be very much improved. I do not see any reason why the audit of our accounts should not be conducted in the same way in which the audit of the Poor Law accounts is conducted here, by an officer of the Government coming down half-yearly, auditing and vouching each payment, and signing an abstract, under which the several charges for the maintenance of the house should be classified. Copies of that abstract should be furnished, not only to the Executive, but also to the Grand Jurors of the counties, at their meetings at each assizes. We have reason to believe, that a good deal of dissatisfaction at present exists amongst the members of the Grand Jury in this county, that, at a time when they are called upon to present large sums for this establishment, they are left totally in the dark, if they are not actually Governors of the institution, as to the way the money is laid out.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        | give those bodies the power of admitting or rejecting patients, which, I think, would be very undesirable.

9287. The heretofore sessions is a body which has merely an existence half-yearly, for a few hours?—Yes; for a day.

9288. Do you consider a more extended power should be given to the Board of Governors, than they at present possess, with reference to the erection of buildings, or the expenditure for such purposes?—I would not give the Board of Governors any uncontrolled power in the expenditure of money on building.

9289. I believe that, at present, no local body has any control over such expenditure?—No.

9290. From your knowledge of the country, do you think the existing asylum is adequate for the wants of the district?—Yes, I should think so; though the numbers have been increasing rapidly, I think that it must come to a stand still some time.

9291. Do you think it more advisable that lunatics should be committed, in the first instance, to an asylum, rather than to a gaol?—Certainly.

9292. Have you found that their presence in a gaol interferes seriously with the discipline of the gaol, independently of being injurious to the patients themselves?—Quite so; and when they come from the gaol to this institution, we have no means of knowing anything of their previous habits or condition; in fact, we know nothing of them when they come here from gaols.

9293. Are you favourable to the admission of paying patients?—Certainly.

9294. Do you think the scale of payment should be graduated or fixed?—I think it should be graduated. I think there are many people whose friends could pay without inconvenience, say £6 a-year, but who could not pay, without stripping themselves greatly, £12 a-year; at the same time, our means, at present, of ascertaining how much a person can pay, are merely by the information we can glean from a local magistrate, who sends the patient here, or from some Governor who happens to know the family.

9295. I presume there is a considerable number of farmers, who, although they would not be enabled to pay the annual sum required for the maintenance of their lunatic relatives in the asylum, might still not desire to see them received as paupers?—I think so.

9296. Do you think it would be an unfair check on the admission of paying patients, if they were all obliged to pay the full cost of maintenance, or else enter as paupers?—I think it would be no check. The way I look at it is this, that people who can pay a small sum should pay it; if the patient was not admitted, the friends would have to keep him at home, and, perhaps, be obliged to keep some one to attend him. I think it due to the institution, and to the county, therefore, that they should pay something, if able, for the maintenance and treatment of their relatives in this place.

9297. And you think it should be left to the Board of Governors to provide, as best they could, against cases being received upon the payment of only £6 a-year, who might be enabled to pay the full cost of maintenance?—I think so.

9298. What is your opinion as to the propriety, or otherwise, of the principal officers of this institution being appointed by the Executive Government?—I should certainly leave the appointment in the hands of the Executive.

9299. With regard to the Inspectors of Lunatics being members of the Board, ex officio; do you consider that advisable, or would you be in favour of their attending the Boards more as Poor Law Inspectors attend the Boards of Guardians?—I have always supposed that the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums and Poor Law Inspectors were in pretty much the same position with regard to their different Boards. I rather think the Poor Law Inspector is also a member of the Board of Guardians, ex officio.

9300. He cannot vote?—I have never known the Poor Law Inspector to vote at the Board of Guardians, or the Lunatic Asylum Inspectors to vote at the Board of Governors.

9301. It is stated that this house is exceedingly cold in winter, and not properly heated; have you ever turned your attention to the consideration of the quantity of coals consumed?—I have, on more occasions than one.

9302. Do you consider that a sufficient supply of coals is furnished?—Certainly.

9303. Are there any complaints that too much has been used?—Yes; the matter has often been under the consideration of the Board.

9304. What has been the result of the inquiries made?—I was a member of the committee appointed to inquire into the subject, and we discharged our duty as well as we could, and we certainly found that there was a large consumption of fuel, both coal and turf; but my own impression was, that it was mainly owing to the grates being badly constructed, so that they were very wasteful; and also owing to a patent cooking apparatus here. The first day it was used, one of the boilers burst, and there is a constant leakage of water from this on the fire, which renders necessary a greater consumption to keep up the steam; in fact, the apparatus is almost useless, unless worked at a cost which we consider too great. With regard to the laundry, one reason why there was a great consumption of coal was, that there was an insufficient supply of bedding, and the beds of those patients who wet them at night had to be dried in the day, instead of having a sufficient quantity of bedding to allow of this being done at stated times, on one or two days in the week.

William Archdall, Esq., J.P., sworn and examined.

William Archdall, Esq., J.P.

9305. I believe you are a member of this Board of Governors, connected with the county Fermanagh?—Yes.

9306. Do you find that the county of Fermanagh is generally represented fairly at the meetings of the Board?—No.

The Governors from Fermanagh.

- OMAGH. 9247. Is the proportion of Governors from the county of Fermanagh sufficient?—I consider it is.
- Omagh District Asylum. 9248. What is your opinion as to the constitution of the Board of Governors; do you think it ought to assume more of a representative character than it has at present?—No; I am satisfied with its present constitution. I have heard of very active gentlemen, who will attend; and I think if the Government would appoint a new member now and then, it would do good.
- Constitution of Board. 9249. Would you be in favour of localizing the charge for the maintenance of the inmates, by fixing it upon baronies, instead of upon the county at large?—I would not.
- Chargeability of inmates. 9250. You do not desire any alteration with regard to the chargeability of the inmates?—No.
- Erection of buildings. 9251. Do you consider the Boards of Governors should possess greater authority than they have at present, with respect to the erection of buildings?—No; I do not think it necessary.
- Appointment and dismissal of officers. 9252. Do you consider the appointments of the superior officers should be left to the Executive Government?—Yes.
9253. As regards the inferior officers, are you satisfied with the arrangements made, that the manager should appoint and dismiss, and that the Board should exercise a control?—I consider the manager should apply more to the Board on such subjects, and that the minute read by the Rev. Mr. Porter in his evidence, should be attended to by him.
- Paying patients. 9254. Do you concur in the evidence given with regard to the admission of paying patients?—Yes; that they should pay according to their means.
- Lunatic poor at large in Fermanagh. 9255. From returns the Commissioners have received from the constabulary, it would appear that there are 103 lunatic poor at large in the county Fermanagh, sixty of whom are stated to be idiots, and forty-two insane; from your knowledge of the county Fermanagh, do you consider that there is that number of lunatic poor unprovided for in it?—No; I do not know one case of my own knowledge.
9256. Are there any cases of vagrant lunatics?—Not that I know of.
9257. I presume no difficulty is experienced in procuring admission to this asylum, there being so much accommodation to spare?—Not the least.
9258. Is it generally known throughout the country, that there is sufficient accommodation here?—Quite well known.
- Audit of accounts. 9259. Would you desire to see a more regular and speedy audit of accounts, as suggested?—Yes; I agree with Mr. Ellis, that it would be very useful that an auditor should attend here, to audit the accounts in the asylum.
- The farm management; complaints as to it. 9260. Do you think there is a sufficient check over the farm management?—I think not.
9261. Is there any special committee of the Board appointed to look after the farming operations?—No.
9262. There are no committees at all, I believe, appointed by the Board, either for the house or otherwise?—No; I was appointed on two committees for special purposes.
9263. What is your opinion as to the advisability of the Inspectors being ex officio members of the Board?—I think it is a proper arrangement.
9264. Is there any matter to which you would wish to call the attention of the Commissioners?—I wish to call the attention of the Commissioners to the way in which the farm has been managed since the institution opened. The quantity of land attached to the institution is thirty statute acres; and the quantity under cultivation, quite apart from that used for building purposes, &c., is 11a. 3a. 20r. The printed reports of the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums state that, in the year 1854, there has been a deficit of £114 3s. 6d. on farming operations at the Omagh Lunatic Asylum; and that for the year 1855, there has been a deficit of £37 15s. These are the only two reports printed, containing statements on the subject. The grass of the land has been taken by Dr. West, for which he paid £3 a-year for grass for a cow, and £3 a-year for grass for another cow, off 7a. 2a. 20r.; the remaining four acres were under cultivation. Dr. West has since given up the farm, in accordance with a resolution of the Board.
9265. As I understand, you consider the farm has been badly managed during the two years you have stated?—Yes.
9266. I believe a large proportion of the thirty acres is occupied by the building, and the ground left out for walks?—Yes. What I wish to state to the Commissioners is, that I consider Dr. West has not managed the land for the good of the institution. There is a great deal of offal, and Dr. West gave the Board £1 a year for it. We took that into our own hands, and from a report laid before us it appeared that the profit on account of pigwrens nearly £80.
- New arrangement. 9267. Has any new arrangement been made by which those evils will be corrected?—Yes; we wish to make the steward attend more to our directions. It was stated that Dr. West employed the steward and some of the inmates on his own farm. I have also to complain of bad management in reference to the fuel of the house; since October last, twenty tons were received every month, except during one month. When we made a calculation on the subject we found that they could not consume that, according to the rate at which they were burning. Last board day we went into the laundry and kitchen and ascertained the quantity of coal that was put down each day; and then we found that they could not consume the quantity of coal we paid for. It was stated to us that there was no coal used in any other place, except in this board room. Turf was also used.
- Alleged waste of coal. 9268. Did you arrive at any conclusion with regard to this extraordinary consumption of fuel?—Dr. West could not tell us about it. He stated he had no means of weighing the coal when it came in; and, owing to our storekeeper being a man of extensive business in Omagh, and unable to give his time to us when we required it, there was no way of ascertaining whether or not we received the quantity of coal stated to come in.
- Inquiry on the subject by Governors.

9269. Is not the correction of this evil very much in the hands of the Board itself, by their requiring the residence of the storekeeper and requiring that a proper account should be kept of all the articles of provision and other matters supplied to the institution?—Yes, I am of that opinion; but I consider also that the manager should give us his assistance.

9270. From a return we have received it appears that, during the whole of the year 1855, there were about 140 tons of coal burned in the house; that would be, on an average, about eleven tons a month: do you consider that too much to burn. I observe also in the return there were 8,108 boxes of turf; how many boxes of turf, would you say, were equivalent to a ton of coal?—I cannot answer that. The last board day we made a calculation, and we found they could not use more than 3 tons and 11 cwt. of coal during the week, whereas we have been receiving twenty tons a month. What I particularly find fault with is the management of the farm heretofore. The steward is now more under the control of the Governor, and I consider he is doing better.

Francis John West, Esq., M.D., further examined on oath.

ORATOR.
Omagh District
Asylum.
William Archibald,
Esq., J.P.

F.J. West, Esq., M.D.

9271. I thought I understood from an answer you gave to a question I put, that you had no occupation beyond that of resident manager of this institution. It is stated to us that you held a small farm?—I thought your question had reference to professional occupation; I hold three acres of land outside the walls of the asylum.

A small farm held by Manager.

9272. It has been stated that you hold that quantity of land, and that the steward of the institution, as well as the inmates, are employed doing work for you?—Yes, that has been done by permission of the Inspector, whenever those persons had nothing to do.

Occasional employment of Steward and some inmates upon it.

9273. What authority has the Inspector to give permission of that nature?—I am not aware. I asked the Inspector, in case the patients had nothing else to do, could I get them to do what I wanted upon the land, which is in a sheltered place. My object was to get my own cows out of this place.

9274. Was that a mere conversation with the Inspector or a written permission?—A conversation. He gave me an instance where it had been done before in Carlow.

9275. Has the horse connected with the asylum, belonging to the Governor, ever been employed on your farm?—This season the steward was in a great hurry in getting out earth, and he told me that if I would hire a horse and load it to him, he would repay me by leading me the asylum horse, if I wanted it. I hired the horse for him, and paid three shillings a day for four or five days. He was to make a return to me for that with his horse.

Horse labour on the farm.

9276. I presume the hire of the horse was not charged to the institution?—No, I paid it out of my own pocket.

9277. Would it not be more satisfactory to have the cost of any extra work required to be done on the farm charged to the account of the farm, so as to let the whole transaction appear before the Board of Governors?—It never occurred before.

9278. Have you on any other occasion made use of the labour of the inmates or servants of the institution for your own private purposes?—Never.

The Hon. Andrew G. Stuart, J.P., M.L., sworn and examined.

The Hon. A. G.
Stuart, J.P., M.L.

9279. Is there any communication you would wish to make to the Commissioners, with reference to the subject of this inquiry?—I wish to make but one observation, which is with respect to the provisional reception of lunatics. I consider it is very hard when lunatics are brought here, with papers regularly signed, for Dr. West to send them away between the board days; when he does admit such cases, the admissions are generally confirmed on the next board day; but we have no means of ascertaining the ability of patients to pay any thing for their support. What I would suggest is, that they should be received on board days, when we might have the means of ascertaining what they could pay, if any thing—that is, with regard to cases generally.

A detention of patients between board days.

9280. Are you aware the Privy Council Regulations contemplate the reception of cases between board days, when they are specially urgent?—I was not aware of that.

9281. The physician is bound to state on the face of the order of admission the ground on which he acted in a case of urgency, is that usually done?—We are not aware of that here.

9282. Has it become the practice generally to admit cases on days that are not board days?—They are frequently admitted between board days. I think there were five or six admitted previous to the last board day and since the preceding one.

Paying patients.

9283. Is your opinion favourable, on the whole, to the admission of paying patients?—Quite so. I quite concur in the opinion expressed here on the subject. If they are not admitted to the asylum the patients must be supported at home, and I do not see why their friends should not pay something for them here.

Appointment of Governors.

9284. You concur in the opinions expressed with respect to the constitution of the Board of Governors?—Quite so. I think the appointment should remain with the executive.

Of superior officers.

9285. And, as regards the appointment of the superior officers, is it your opinion that might be left to the executive also?—Yes.

9286. You are acquainted, of course, with the provisions of the law having reference to the commitment of dangerous lunatics to gaol?—Yes.

Commitment of lunatics to gaol.

9287. Is it your opinion that there is a sufficient investigation of those cases by medical men previous to their commitment?—I am not aware that there is any at all; I rather think not—I rather think the patients merely break windows, or do something of the kind, and then are sent to gaol as violent lunatics, and they are transferred here.

The Rev. Richard Meade Swift, sworn and examined.

9288. Are you chaplain to this institution since its opening?—Yes.

9289. When you became chaplain were you made acquainted with the number of inmates belonging to the Established Church?—I do not think the numbers were given to me, but they attended chapel.

9290. You mean that those whom it was considered might properly attend were allowed to attend?—Yes.

9291. Were you given the names of the members of your persuasion in the asylum?—No.

9292. Have you experienced any difficulty in obtaining admission to those belonging to your persuasion?—No. At times there was a difficulty about the hours. At one period I was restricted to before twelve o'clock.

9293. Are you enabled to state what proportion of the inmates of the Established Church attend divine worship?—About thirty or forty.

9294. Are they generally orderly?—Extremely so.

9295. Are you in the habit of preaching to them?—Yes, I am.

9296. Do you find, from your communication with the members of your church, that many of them are sufficiently sane to be enabled to benefit by the instructions which you give?—Decidedly.

9297. Do you find many of them so intelligent, with respect to religious matters, that they would feel they were deprived of very great comfort if they had not the opportunity of attending divine worship?—Certainly.

9298. Are you in the habit of visiting the institution on week-days?—I am.

9299. And of communicating individually with the inmates?—I am.

9300. Are you supplied by the Board with Bibles and such other books as you may desire for the use of the inmates of your persuasion?—Yes, Bibles and prayer-books.

9301. Is there any other matter to which you would wish to call the attention of the Commissioners?—I applied to the Board at one time for requisites which I considered necessary, and they were refused; we have since been obliged to dispense with them.

9302. What were the requisites you referred to?—I asked for a surplice and for elements to administer the sacrament.

9303. Have the elements not been furnished?—They have not; on some occasions I have had them from Dr. West, who has kindly afforded them at his own cost.

9304. From your experience as chaplain, since the opening of this institution, is it your opinion that the services of chaplains are properly required in lunatic asylums?—I think a lunatic asylum would be a plague spot upon earth if religion was excluded.

The Rev. J. Mitchell, sworn and examined.

9305. Have you been the Presbyterian chaplain of this institution since its opening?—I have.

9306. Do you know what number of Presbyterian inmates are enabled to attend your worship on Sundays?—I believe, about thirty.

9307. What proportion of the whole is that number?—We have over forty Presbyterians in the house.

9308. Do you find that, for the most part, they are sufficiently sane to benefit by your ministrations?—A good number of them are.

9309. Have you had opportunities of communicating individually with them?—Yes; I visit here in the week.

9310. Do you find many of them on those occasions in a state of mind to communicate with you on religious matters?—I find several of them so fitted.

9311. Have you had every facility afforded you for the discharge of your duties as chaplain?—Every facility, with the exception of what the Rev. Mr. Swift referred to. I understand we are restricted by the Board to three hours of the day, and we are altogether excluded on Saturday. I would wish to encounter every inconvenience, so far as regards myself, if it was considered for the good of the institution. No reason has been assigned for confining us to those three hours, and sometimes it is an inconvenience: for example, if I was visiting a member of my congregation in this district, it might then be convenient for me to call in here.

9312. Am I to understand that there are three fixed hours of the day within which the visits of the clergymen must take place?—So I understand; and I have endeavoured to act up to it.

9313. Is that the same three hours for all?—I believe so. The regulation is for week days, and not for Sundays. I would not complain of it if any alteration of the arrangement would interfere with the management of the house, or with the duties of the manager.

The Rev. Patrick Magee, sworn and examined.

9314. Have you been in the habit of attending as clergyman of the Roman Catholic Church in this institution?—I have.

9315. On whose behalf?—On behalf of the parish priest, who is the Chaplain.

9316. For how long have you been attending this institution?—About a year and three months.

9317. Have you attended regularly during that period?—Yes; always on Sundays.

9318. Do you attend on week days also?—Occasionally on week days.

9319. What proportion of the inmates of the Roman Catholic persuasion are enabled to attend service on Sunday?—Some days, I think, we have had more than eighty or ninety. I think we may have had 100 on some occasions.

9320. Do you know how many Roman Catholic inmates there are altogether?—Not being the regular chaplains, I never made inquiries on the subject; I merely come here to discharge the duties.

9321. Are the Roman Catholic inmates who attend at worship orderly in their conduct?—Very much so.

9322. Are you in the habit of preaching?—Seldom. I give prayer and my mass, and I am afforded an opportunity of talking to them privately if I wish.

9323. Are you enabled to form an opinion as to whether a great number of them are in that state of mind that they can profit by instruction?—I abstain from instruction, not because of its being a burden to me, but because I am under the impression that by giving instruction to them in a body it might confuse them. I talk to them individually.

9324. Do you think a large number of them are enabled to benefit by religious ministrations?—Many of them are enabled to benefit by it. To some it is very useful, and relieves them very much.

9325. Are you supplied with what you require for the celebration of Divine service?—No; I never made application for them.

9326. Are the inmates of your persuasion supplied with religious books?—Yes; they have Bibles and prayer-books.

9327. Is there any other matter connected with your duties you would wish to refer to?—No; only that I was obliged to abstain from coming here as often as I should wish, because of the restriction referred to. It would be a great convenience not to have that restriction, as I cannot always come at the appointed hours.

Mrs. Hannah Hudson, sworn and examined.

9328. How long have you been matron of this asylum?—Since the asylum was opened.

9329. Do you visit the female side of the house daily?—Yes, several times in the day.

9330. Do you ever visit the male side?—Yes, occasionally.

9331. Do you consider you have general charge of the cleanliness of the house?—Yes, I do.

9332. Are the female inmates employed to any extent?—All that can be employed are engaged in cleaning, or otherwise.

9333. Do you superintend the laundry department?—Yes.

9334. Are you enabled to make up all the female clothing in the house?—Yes.

9335. And the shirting for the men?—Yes.

9336. By whom are the supplies of material received: by you or the storekeeper?—I receive the materials for the female clothing.

9337. Direct from the contractor?—Yes.

9338. When the articles are made up do you return them into store to the storekeeper?—No, I keep them myself.

9339. Then, in point of fact, the storekeeper has nothing at all to do with these articles, or the materials for making up the articles, of dress in the female department?—No.

9340. You superintend the kitchen department too, I presume?—Yes.

9341. What means of amusement or occupation have you for the female patients, beyond needlework and attendance upon the house or kitchen?—They have books and newspapers, and walking, and occasionally they have a dance.

9342. Have you a sufficient number of female attendants under your control for the duties to be performed?—Well, there are sufficient nurses, but we are short of other servants for keeping this large house; there is a very great deal of trouble about it.

9343. It has been stated, that patients give considerable assistance to the nurses?—Yes.

9344. When you have occasion to complain of the conduct of any of the nurses, do you make your complaint to the manager?—Yes.

9345. Have you any power of removing the nurses yourself?—No.

9346. Have you ever had any difficulty in getting a female servant removed, when you found removal necessary?—No.

9347. Are you consulted in any way as to the fitness of the female servants to be employed?—I am.

9348. Are there any servants brought into the institution occasionally for temporary purposes?—Only in case of illness; in cases of fever, two or three times, a poor woman was brought in to attend the patients.

9349. Do the attendants sleep in the wards?—Yes.

9350. I believe you keep the instruments of restraint?—Yes.

9351. Do you ever allow them to be used without communicating with the manager?—Yes, I do; when I see they are tearing their clothes, and that I feel quite sure they cannot do without restraint.

9352. Do you keep the instruments of restraint that are in use on the male side as well?—I do; that is, the jacket, or the strait-waistcoat, is always in store; it is never given out except by the doctor's orders.

9353. You are not in the habit of leaving those instruments of restraint in the hands of the servants for any length of time?—No.

9354. Is there any statement you would wish to make to the Commissioners?—No.

LONDONDERRY.

LONDONDERRY, 28th MAY, 1857.

Present:—Sir T. N. RERINGTON, Chairman; Dr. CORRIGAN, and Mr. BARRY, Secretary.

Londonderry District
Asylum.

LONDONDERRY DISTRICT ASYLUM.

W. ROGAN, Esq., M.D.

William Rogan, Esq., M.D., sworn and examined.

The Resident Physician.

9355. Have you been long connected with the Londonderry District Lunatic Asylum?—As resident physician, since February last, and as assistant physician for five years before.

9356. The manager whom you succeeded was, I believe, a non-professional person?—Yes, a non-professional person.

9357. From the experience which you have had, as visiting physician of the institution, what is your opinion as to the propriety of the managers of these institutions being medical men?—Well I think it is advisable they should be medical men.

The medical duties;
how performed between the Resident and Visiting Physicians.

9358. Have you made any particular arrangement with the visiting physician as to the division of duties between you?—We came to no mutual agreement; but we understand each other, without any explanation between us, that we shall both attend to the patients according as we see them. The question of the division of duties has never been mooted between us.

9359. The duties, however, which you have, strictly speaking, to perform, are duties for which the late manager would be competent, the Privy Council regulations not providing for the manager discharging any medical duties?—Exactly.

9360. Precisely, what occurs when a patient is received into the institution—is the case considered jointly by you and the visiting physician?—I see the case myself first and form my own opinion of it, but when the visiting physician comes I always direct his attention to the case, and we consult together respecting it.

The responsibility of the treatment.

9361. With whom is it considered the responsibility of treating the case, with regard to insanity, rests?—I would consider myself responsible for the treatment; of course, I would ask the visiting physician's opinion when he came and saw the case; we would consider all the points connected with it, but I would consider myself the party responsible.

9362. Supposing—as is possible, but not probable, perhaps—that you and the visiting physician would not agree as to the treatment that should be adopted, whose opinion should prevail?—I would say the opinion of the resident physician; the man who has the case under his constant charge, from hour to hour, if necessary, is the proper person to judge of the treatment for it, rather than the visiting physician, who sees the patient only three times a week. The case, for instance, might not be in the same condition in three hours after the visiting physician saw it, and a change of treatment might be required; and if I thought so, I would direct the change.

Advantage possessed by general practicians in treating bodily diseases.

9363. Do you consider that a physician in general practice outside the asylum has an advantage, in the treatment of ordinary bodily disease, over a medical man whose attention is confined to the care of lunatics in an asylum?—He decidedly has.

9364. There is nothing peculiar in the ordinary diseases of lunatic patients which would give any advantage, in the medical treatment of them, to a person more conversant with the patients?—Except that a lunatic patient might not be able to explain his condition, and a person seeing him often, such as the resident physician, might be better able to judge of that condition by the expression of his face and by other means.

9365. Previously to your appointment there was no medical person resident at all in the institution?—None.

Necessity for a
Resident Physician.

9366. Is there not a risk of an accident suddenly occurring in an asylum that would require immediate medical attendance?—Yes, and it has occurred. There is a case mentioned in my own report this year of a person choked while eating; an operation might have been required on the man's throat which none but a medical man could have performed. The patient died. The manager was in the house at the time, and saw the patient before he died, but of course was not able to take the necessary steps to relieve him.

Countries in the District.

9367. This asylum is, I believe, at present merely for the counties of Londonderry and Donegal?—Yes.

9368. It appears, from returns before the Commissioners, that the majority of the cases in the asylum is from Donegal?—Yes, there is a considerable majority at present and always has been.

Majority of inmates from Donegal; the cause.

9369. Does that arise from the population of Donegal being larger?—Partly, and partly because, I think, there are more insane amongst the lower classes in Donegal than in Derry. I have no statistical returns to depend upon in giving that answer, but that is my opinion.

9370. Have you formed any opinion as to what might be the cause of the particular prevalence of insanity in Donegal?—I think it is attributable to the prevalence of want for a long series of years amongst the poorer classes there, and their breeding in and in, which in the course of years causes degeneration.

9371. Does that intermarrying arise from the situation of the county?—I think so, particularly on the sea-coast.

9372. How long is it since the county of Tyrone was detached from this district?—I think, about four years ago.

9373. Are you aware how many patients were removed on that occasion to the asylum at Omagh?—I think, to the best of my recollection, about sixty-seven.

9374. Were the vacancies created in this asylum by the withdrawal of the county Tyrone lunatics filled up?—They were very soon filled up.

9375. Were they filled up from the workhouses, or from the general population of Derry and Donegal?—Some of the patients came from workhouses and a great many from the gaols; we had a good many from Lifford gaol.

9376. Are there still a great many applications for admission awaiting the consideration of the Board?—No; we have not a great many at present; I think we have not more than half a dozen for next board day.

9377. From returns we have received it would appear that some of the workhouses in the district contain a large number of lunatics. In the Londonderry workhouse there were, on the 1st of January, thirty-six patients, twelve of whom were stated to be maniacs. Are there any applications for admission now before the Board from that workhouse?—None.

9378. Have you frequently applications from the workhouses in the county Donegal for the admission of patients?—No; not from the workhouses.

9379. Are you in the habit of sending lunatics back to workhouses although they should not be cured?—Yes; we are in the habit of doing so.

9380. What is the course pursued?—The visiting physician and myself examine the patients whom we think could be removed; by direction of the Board we write to the masters of the workhouses, stating we have so many patients that we think can be returned and who could be kept in idiot wards.

9381. That is your course of proceeding with respect to cases sent originally from these workhouses?—Yes; sent from the district to which the workhouse belongs.

9382. You have no power of transmitting lunatics to workhouses, and it rests with the Board of Guardians, you are aware, to say whether they will admit them?—If the parties were set down at the workhouse gate, as destitute paupers from that union, the Guardians have not the power to refuse admission; I think that is the case, but I may not be right in the opinion.

9383. Practically, is any difficulty experienced in obtaining the admission of patients to workhouses, who are considered by the authorities here fit for removal?—Practically there is no difficulty.

9384. What class of cases do you remove?—Perhaps idiotic; at least quiet and harmless cases, such as are not liable to recurring attacks of acute mania.

9385. Are epileptic cases sent to workhouses?—No; we would not advocate the sending of epileptic cases to workhouses.

9386. Are cases of idiosyncrasy received here?—Yes. The Governors, however, do not like to receive them, as they occupy places which might otherwise be available for curable cases; but still they do admit such cases.

9387. Do you consider a workhouse a fit place for the class of cases you speak of, and that they will be properly taken care of in it?—I do not think it is a fit place for them.

9388. Are you acquainted with the Derry workhouse?—Very well.

9389. Do you know what the arrangements are there for lunatic paupers?—Yes; they have wards for lunatic paupers—for a certain number of idiots and lunatics who are not dangerous. If a patient becomes dangerous in the workhouse, an application is made here for his admission, and it is generally granted.

9390. The attendants upon these unfortunate people in the workhouses are, I believe, always paupers?—Yes, always paupers.

9391. Are they likely to afford that proper and kind attention which lunatics require?—No; I do not think they are well suited for that purpose.

9392. Are you aware whether the lunatic ward in the Derry workhouse is in any degree used for a certain class of patients labouring under disease?—That I cannot say.

9393. What information do you get with the cases that come from the workhouses: do you receive as full a history of the cases as you do with respect to the ordinary admissions?—We do not.

9394. Do you find inconvenience to arise from your not getting these details?—There is an inconvenience, but the details connected with the cases may not be known to the parties in the workhouse.

9395. Is there the same deficiency of information with regard to cases coming from gaols?—A much greater deficiency; in fact, we receive no information at all with gaol cases.

9396. How long have you known cases to be detained in gaols?—Personally, I have known them to be two years and upwards in the gaol.

9397. Has that long stay in the gaol arisen from the inability of the Governors of this asylum to receive them here, or from a delay in the making of the application for admission?—Occasionally from want of room to receive them here, and occasionally from the length of time elapsing before the application of the governor of the gaol for transmission to this asylum was attended to.

9398. Do you receive paying patients in this asylum?—No; not in the usual acceptance of the term; we have a few pensioners whose pensions go for their support in the asylum; that is the only class of paying patients we have.

9399. Are we to understand that the Board do not approve of the admission of patients who are able to pay for their maintenance?—I do not mean to convey that; the Board seem to think they have not the power to admit paying patients.

Londonderry.

LONDONERAT.
*Londonderry District
 Asylum.*
 W. JAGGS, Esq., M.P.

9400. They consider the institution was established for the reception of the lunatic poor?—Yes, for the lunatic poor.

9401. What is your own opinion as to the propriety or otherwise of the law sanctioning the admission of paying patients to this asylum?—My own opinion is, that if they pay the average cost for the maintenance of the patients they should be admitted; and as these asylums are at present constructed, I think such paying patients should be treated in all respects like the other patients.

9402. You speak of patients whose friends are unable to pay for their maintenance in private asylums?—Yes; patients whose friends cannot pay above a certain sum; I would say that such a class of patients should certainly be admitted into this asylum.

9403. Have you any cases now in the asylum of parties whose friends you consider would be able to pay for their maintenance?—Yes, there are.

9404. What has led to their admission?—They generally belong to the class of farmers, in a small way, and they have been admitted upon their friends stating they were unable to provide means for keeping them elsewhere. They call them paupers in the affidavit, and such being the case they are admitted. Some of the Governors are frequently aware, with respect to particular cases, that the families of the persons are not able to maintain them in private asylums.

9405. The Governors do not consider that the law allows them to take payment, and at the same time they consider that persons belonging to a class of farmers who would not be able to pay for the maintenance of their lunatic relatives in private asylums should be admitted?—That is the way the matter is situated. There are patients here whose friends could pay a small sum towards their maintenance, but who could not pay for them in a private asylum.

9406. Supposing the law distinctly allowed the admission of paying patients into this institution, is it your opinion that the sum should be fixed, say the average cost of maintenance, or that the charge should vary according to the means of the parties?—As the house is at present constructed I would not advocate such persons paying a larger sum than the cost of maintenance; if they did pay a larger sum you could not treat them in the same manner as the other patients.

9407. My question did not contemplate their paying a larger sum in any case?—Then I would have a fixed sum; that sum to be the cost of maintenance.

9408. It appears by returns which the Commissioners have received that you have a very large proportion of probably incurable cases in the institution, 162 out of 200?—Yes; the number is somewhat larger at present.

9409. Do you find that to be an increasing class?—It would increase very rapidly did we not keep it down by transmitting cases to the workhouse each year.

9410. Do you consider this asylum is at present adequate for the wants of the two counties forming the district?—It is not at all adequate.

9411. Have you ever considered in what way additional accommodation could be best provided?—Yes; since I came here I have been looking over the different plans that were mooted last year for the purpose of enlarging this house.

9412. Have you found amongst them any plan which you think it would be advisable to adopt?—Well, I think one of the best plans would be the erection of a separate building in the upper farm for chronic cases. I would have this building so that it could be used for recent cases.

9413. The upper part of the farm you refer to is separated from the present asylum grounds by the high road?—Yes.

9414. Does any inconvenience arise from the patients having to cross the road?—Occasionally there has been an inconvenience, such as a patient making his escape, but that has occurred very seldom.

9415. Could water be readily obtained on the high ground you refer to?—Yes, it could; the town tank is higher and would afford a good supply.

9416. How many acres of ground are there in that detached portion?—Fifteen statute acres.

9417. In the event of the plan you recommend being carried out, the chronic cases would still have intercourse with the other patients engaged working on the farm?—Yes.

9418. You do not contemplate any thing more than additional accommodation being provided by that enlargement?—Just additional accommodation.

9419. Would any considerable economy arise from having that new institution on the same grounds, though detached from the present building?—No; on the contrary, you would have to double your laundry staff and your kitchen staff.

9420. The other officers, yourself, for instance, and the visiting physician, would still have charge of the whole institution?—Yes.

9421. With that exception, the additional officers, and servants, and arrangements would be the same as for a new and distinct asylum?—They would in a great degree, according to the number of patients you would have to put there.

9422. Do you think a separate laundry would be necessary?—As this asylum is arranged it would be necessary; the laundry is hardly large enough.

9423. You consider the present laundry would not be large enough for the increased number of patients?—It would not; however the greater part of the washing of this house might be done in the upper laundry.

9424. What number of patients do you consider might be fairly placed under the charge of one resident manager and physician like yourself?—Well, when the number gets above

Patients received free who could pay something; Governments think they cannot receive payment.

Large proportion of
 incurable cases.

Inadequacy of the Asylum; question of additional accommodation.

Suggestion to erect a building on the upper farm.

No economy in that arrangement.

The Manager's supervision.

250 it is very hard to superintend them. We have 200 at present. The house being only two stories high it is very easy to superintend, but a three story house is very hard to superintend.

9425. Additional difficulties would arise in superintending a detached building across the road?—Not much difficulty; the cases would be employed all day, and they would be under a head keeper.

9426. You do not contemplate the imbecile or incurable cases being kept there?—The imbecile cases I would keep here; I consider chronic and incurable cases the same, and I do not like to call them incurable.

9427. If it would be your object to make this asylum a curative hospital, would not your keeping the imbecile cases here interfere with that?—Those imbecile cases are very useful. Many such cases are able to work and do what they are told as well as sane persons. They do a great many things far better than sane persons. They will do the dirty work of the place more easily than any sane keeper, and they are very glad to be so employed.

9428. Putting out of consideration for a moment the particular circumstances of the Derry asylum, and the nature of the premises, what is your opinion, generally, as to the advisability or otherwise of placing incurable cases in a totally distinct asylum, say some miles distant from the curative establishment?—Does your question go so far as to imply having no incurable cases in the curative establishment?

9429. I, first of all, refer to the separating of a large class of incurables?—I think it could be advantageously done, as in that case it would tend to relieve the workhouses and gaols of a greater number of patients.

9430. Do you think it might be calculated to have an injurious effect upon the cases which, although there was no probable hope of their cure, yet, at the same time, might be injured by the idea that they were removed to what might be regarded as a condemned institution?—I would not call it an asylum for incurables, I would call it an asylum for chronic cases—cases of a certain number of years standing.

9431. If the proposed separate institution for such cases were removed from the existing asylum altogether, would it be as likely to command as much care and attention from the Governors of this establishment as would be given to the curative establishment?—I think it would. I think the Governors of this institution would give as much attention to it as they do to this. It is not so much the curability of the patients they are interested in as the working of the asylum.

9432. My question has reference to the fact of the inmates of the second institution being a hopeless class?—It would not interfere, I think, with the efficiency of the Governors.

9433. I believe nothing has been determined on as to the manner in which the additional accommodation is to be provided?—No decision has been come to yet.

9434. Besides an addition being made to this institution, or the erection of a distinct house in the upper grounds, have any other schemes been advocated?—The building of a separate asylum for Donegal has been advocated very strongly.

9435. Has such a scheme, as a previous question of mine referred to, of providing in a separate institution for chronic cases been under consideration?—Not to my knowledge. It has not been under consideration in that form.

9436. Is the attendance of Governors regular?—Very good indeed.

9437. Has there been any failure of a meeting in consequence of a quorum not assembling?—I never knew it to occur.

9438. Is the attendance more particularly from one county than from the other?—Well, I think it is pretty equal from both. Derry is better situated for attendance, but the Donegal gentlemen are very regular in their attendance here.

9439. Is the proportion of Governors from the two counties fair as regards the population and the value of property?—I think Derry is too much in the minority at present. It sends only twenty Governors, while there are twenty-six for Donegal.

9440. Do the Inspectors of Lunatic Asylums attend the Board frequently?—Within the last two or three years they have been very frequent in their attendance. Dr. Nugent was here four times last year.

9441. Is there an apothecary attached to the institution?—Yes.

9442. Are the medicines used purchased by the Governors, or supplied by an apothecary, and compounded by him?—They are purchased by the Governors, and compounded here by the apothecary.

9443. Is the clerk and storekeeper resident?—Yes.

9444. Your matron has been recently appointed?—Yes, she has been recently appointed.

9445. Is the number of attendants sufficient for the proper discharge of the duties of the house?—Yes.

9446. Do you find the wages given sufficient to secure the services of proper attendants?—We have a very intelligent class of servants at present, particularly on the male side.

9447. Is there any examination as to their proficiency in reading and writing before they are employed?—I have made no rules myself on the subject, not having occasion to get an attendant since I came here, but I will make it a point that all head attendants will be able to read and write. All who are here at present can do so.

9448. Is there any system of rewards for good conduct?—Yes; they get a guinea premium each in December, provided the manager recommends them to the Board for it.

9449. Who appoints the servants of the establishment?—The resident physician.

9450. Does he do so without any intervention on the part of the Board?—Well, I believe the Board have never interfered in the appointments.

- Lawrence. 9451. Do the Board reserve to themselves the power of approval?—I do not think it has ever been brought before the Board, servants change so often; sometimes a servant will give notice to leave.
- Londonerry District Asylum. 9452. Does the removal of servants rest also with the resident physician?—Yes; of course if a servant conceives that he is unjustly treated, he has the power of appealing to the Board.
- W. Ragna, Esq., M.D. 9453. Do you keep the Daily Statement Book?—I do.
- Daily statement book; record of restraint; correspondence of Manager to Governors. 9454. Are the cases of restraint regularly entered in the Daily Statement Book?—They are.
9455. In what manner do you bring under the notice of the Board of Governors any matter to which you desire to call their attention?—In the memorandum of the business of the Board for the day.
9456. Are all these representations in writing?—Yes, in writing; and I also give a report for the month of the state of the house, the health of the inmates, and any thing I consider is worth making a remark upon. The report is read to the Governors.
9457. Is that a report solely from the resident manager, or a joint one from him and the visiting physician?—The visiting physician writes out one for himself also.
- No trades taught. 9458. Are trades taught to any of the inmates?—None are taught. A great many of them exercise the trades they have been employed at outside, such as shoemaking and weaving. The inmates are chiefly agricultural labourers.
9459. Is there any tailoring done in the house?—We have no tailors at present in the house.
9460. Is the repair of clothes and so on done by a hired tailor?—It is done by a hired tailor. There used to be a patient, a tailor, who could work at such things; we have not one who can do so now.
9461. Are you aware whether tailoring has ever been taught in the house?—I do not think it has ever been taught here.
- Employment of patients. 9462. Besides being engaged at agricultural labour, the male patients are chiefly employed in cleaning the house?—There are sixteen employed in cleaning the house, and generally thirty-three to thirty-four employed upon the farm; sometimes more and sometimes less, according to the state of mind of the parties.
9463. On the female side, the patients seemed to be generally employed in the various pursuits enumerated in the Daily Statement Book, needlework, knitting, spinning, in the laundry, &c.?—Yes.
9464. Is the female clothing made up in the house?—It is all made up in the house.
9465. And the male shirting?—Yes, and the male shirting.
- Books; state of education amongst patients. 9466. Have you any books for the use of the patients?—There are very few at present. I had a large quantity of the Illustrated London News, which, when I came here, I distributed through the wards. That is the only sort of reading they seem to care about. There are a few books of light reading.
9467. Is there any large proportion of the inmates able to read and write?—A good many. We have got thirteen well educated, sixteen who can read and write well, seventy-four read and write indifferently, forty-two read only, fifty-two cannot read or write.
- Hours of going to bed and rising. 9468. What do the patients do on the long winter's evenings?—The agricultural labourers are so wearied in the long winter's evenings, that they go to bed after supper, so that we have no occasion to think of amusements for them. They all go to bed at six in the winter, and they rise at seven in the winter and at six in the summer.
9469. Then they are thirteen hours in their cells in winter?—Nearly.
- The supply of water. 9470. Are those cells very well ventilated?—They are not well ventilated.
9471. Is the supply of water in the establishment generally sufficient?—Not during the summer months; it is good during the winter. We have three modes of supplying water at present, namely, a tank at the back of the house, which is supplied by the surface water of the farm above, a well in the yard, and a well in front of the house. In summer, the surface water fails us, and, therefore, the tank becomes dry. Attached to the well in the yard, is a force-pump, which forces the water up into a tank; but in the latter end of the summer this well also goes dry; consequently, then, we have no water, except what is derived from the well in front of the house; that is insufficient, and therefore, we are obliged to convey in water carts daily, all the water required for the institution, amounting to 4,000 gallons a day. I mentioned this to the Board, and stated that I thought the Corporation could supply us from their tank which is on a higher level than the house. By their direction, I wrote to the Corporation on the subject and received an answer that they were willing to supply us with 4,000 gallons a day for £46 a-year. It seems a large sum, £46 a-year; but considering that at that time they have themselves but little water in their tank, it is not relatively a large sum. The matter is at present in abeyance, and the labour of pumping is so severe upon the lunatics, particularly upon washing days, which occur three times a week, that they very often refuse to perform the labour. From morning to night the force-pump must be going to supply water upon washing days.
9472. Would not the severity of the labour prevent you from employing the lunatics at it?—We cannot help it; we must employ them at it. It is the chronic cases we make work.
9473. It is very hard labour for them?—Yes; it is very hard labour indeed, and they object to it themselves and get cross. The supply of water from that source too is also very uncertain.
- The Resident Physician and the Farm. 9474. Is not the subject to be considered by the Board of Governors?—It will be, I am sure. There is one suggestion I would like to throw out with respect to the farm. I think it is hardly fair to the resident physician, to expect that he should be responsible for having the profits of the farm always as large as they were under the former manager. I personally know nothing of the farm, and I must be guided by the man, who was in the habit of acting under the late manager, with respect to the rotation of crops.

9475. I understand you to mean, that if the new arrangements of having a medical man as manager were carried out, there should be a revision of the duties respecting the management of the establishment?—Certainly.

9476. Is there any portion of this asylum which is not used? I refer to the lower apartments?—There are apartments not occupied by the patients, but they are used in other respects: for instance, we have them for coal cellars and carpenter's shop and other such purposes.

9477. Were those apartments originally intended for the use of the patients?—Yes; according to the original plan of the house.

9478. Were they found to be useless?—They were dark and gloomy, so that you could not put patients into them.

9479. Have you any other occupation except that of manager of this institution?—No other occupation.

9480. Are there any games or amusements provided for the patients?—Chiefly ball-playing; that is the only amusement we find suited for the class of patients who come in here. They are never acquainted with any games such as drafts or chess. There are very few inclined to read entertaining books. The females have a dance every evening. One of the patients plays the violin, and three or four times a-year there is a mixed ball, which they seem to enjoy. It is at the discretion of the manager. The Governors have directed parties to be given in the year, and the manager generally gives three at his own expense and at his own option.

9481. No doubt, you attach importance to the amusement and occupation of the minds of the patients?—Very great importance.

9482. Are there any artificial means of ventilation?—No further than openings from the sleeping rooms communicating with the galleries.

9483. Is that found sufficient?—Quite sufficient.

9484. Is the heating of the asylum effective?—We have no heating apparatus for the sleeping-rooms; the day-rooms are heated by fires.

9485. Are they sufficiently warm in the winter?—Sufficiently so, by giving them good bedding. I have never seen any inconvenience arise from want of artificial heating.

9486. Was there not an attempt made at one time to heat the apartments by artificial means?—Yes; about ten or twelve years ago, when the plan adopted was in its infancy. They tried to heat the house by means of hot water pipes, but the pipes were made too small, and it has not been tried for nine years. They are in danger from the way they are at present.

9487. Have you brought the matter under the notice of the Board?—I have, in my last report.

9488. Do you find that the corridors are much used by the patients in the winter?—They are.

9489. Are they sufficiently warm?—Yes; for those who move about.

9490. Are there any fireplaces in the corridors?—Yes; but they have not been used for some years.

9491. Is the supply of bedding sufficient?—Very good, and quite abundant. The Governors are always most anxious to supply that when required.

9492. Is the house lighted with gas?—Yes.

9493. Is there a supply of hot and cold water laid on in the various wards?—No; we are obliged to carry hot water to the wards from the laundry.

9494. Are there lavatories in the wards?—None. The matter is at present under the consideration of the Governors.

9495. How many baths are there in the institution?—There are only two bath-rooms.

9496. Are they in the corridors, or in detached buildings?—In the yard, detached from the house entirely.

9497. Could a patient be removed to a bath without being carried in the open air?—No; but we have movable wooden baths, which, of course, you put into any part of the house.

9498. Where do the patients ordinarily wash?—Indeed, they are obliged to wash in the day-rooms in a tub.

9499. Are measures in progress to improve the washing arrangements?—Yes; the question of building lavatories is being considered by the Board.

9500. You have stated there is no supply of hot water laid on in the building?—There is not.

9501. Has the supply to be brought from the laundry or the kitchen?—It has to be carried in tubs from the laundry and kitchen; from whichever can supply most at the time.

9502. Are there any water-closets in the establishment for the use of the inmates?—Not for the use of the inmates.

9503. Are there privies in the yard?—There are privies in the yard.

9504. Is there any inconvenience experienced as regards cleaning them?—Not particularly from the plan we adopt. Trucks on four wheels are used. They are placed under the seats and removed each morning.

9505. Is the sewerage in good order?—No.

9506. Are there measures in progress to improve it?—It is difficult to manage it. The sewers are generally too small, and they have been built on a wrong principle.

9507. Do the patients dine in their separate day-rooms, or is there a general dining-room?—In their separate day-rooms. We have no room here sufficient to dine all.

9508. What classification are you enabled to make of the inmates?—I am enabled to
